Nothing is more common than to find apparent contradictions in the language of persons of veracity; and nothing is more usual than to find that those seeming discrepancies, when explained, afford fresh evidence of the truthfulness of those whose testimony has been impugned. Thus it is with the Bible. Its seeming discrepancies become fresh evidence of the truth. For example: the Lord said of the disobedient Jewish king, by the mouth of Jeremiah the prophet: "And Zedekiah, king of Judah, shall not escape out of the hand of the Chaldeans, but shall surely be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon, and shall speak with him, mouth to mouth, and his eyes shall behold his eyes; and he shall lead Zedekiah to Babylon, and there shall he be until I visit him, saith the Lord." Jer. 32:45. But when the Lord spoke by the prophet Ezekiel of the captivity of Zedekiah, he said: "My net will I spread upon him, and he shall be taken in my snare: and I will bring him to Babylon, to the land of the Chaldeans; yet shall he not see it, though he shall die there." Ezek. 12:13.

The Jewish historian, Josephus, informs us that the king regarded this threatening as self-contradictory. He was to die in Babylon, and yet he was not to see Babylon; and as he could not reconcile the two statements he disbelieved both. Josephus tells us that "the two prophets agreed that the city should be taken by force, and Zedekiah carried into captivity. Jeremiah said the king should convey him prisoner to Babylon; while Ezekiel predicted that he should not see that city. This apparent inconsistency in the prophecies led Zedekiah to doubt the truth of the whole, but it will hereafter be seen that he was mistaken in his conjecture." Josephus' Antiquities, book x., chap. x. Clark's Translation.

When the prophecy was fulfilled, all was plain. "The King of Babylon slew the sons of Zedekiah before his eyes; he slew also all the princes of Judah in Riblah. Then he put out the eyes of Zedekiah; and the King of Babylon bound him in chains, and carried him to Babylon, and put him in prison to the day of his death." Jer. 53:11. The "self-contradiction" vanished when the guilty king reaped the harvest of sorrow for which he had sown the seeds of sin. He saw the King of Babylon, but he never saw the city; he was led thither as a blind captive, and there ended his days.—From "Friendly Hints to Candid Enquirers," by H. L. Hastings.

Few consider that enjoyment must have its moment of rest as well as labor.

"WHAT IS TRUTH."

ADDRESS BY A. H. BROWN, AT THE NEW HAMPSHIRE ANNUAL MEETING.

To my mind no weightier question ever was, or will be asked than that of Pilate addressed to Jesus Christ as he stood in that judgment hall—more than eighteen centuries ago, "What is truth?"

We meet to-day endeavoring to find answers to this question by discussion of the great issues of these later days. Not questions of the dead past but of the active, living present; if possible to gain new light and fresh courage to fight against the wrong and bear more faithful witness to the right. When we look over the noble army of reformers who have come down through all these years, raised up from time to time for some special work, faithful among so many faithless, despised of men but chosen of God, I count no honor greater than to be numbered among this company, no service grander than to grasp the colors that fell from their hands and trusting in him who is the God of truth, bear them aloft pressing onward to win new victories over the powers of darkness.

"Our fathers to their graves have gone,
Their strife is past, their triumph won,
But sterner trials wait the race
Which rises in their honored place,
A moral warfare with the crime
And folly if an evil time.

So let it be! In God's own might
We gird us for the coming fight,
And, strong in Him whose cause is ours
In conflict with unholy powers,
We grasp the weapons He has given
The Light, the Truth, and love of Heaven."

When we look back over the past twenty-five years and see the progress made, what incentives we have to work and what reason for encouragement. Well may we exclaim, "What hath God wrought?"

Then human slavery was strongly rooted in the land. It was sapping the life of the nation. But how many bowed down to this idol and made it their god! Even the church, which should have been foremost in warning the people, with some marked exceptions was silent, or openly in alliance with this great evil. Here and there were brave men who dared "to beard the lion in his den," to lift up their voices in sounding the alarm.

I am proud to welcome you to-day to the birthplace and early home of one who bore a noble part in this grand struggle, and who lived to see the triumph of the principle so dear to his heart, and to the accomplishment of which he devoted his life. And yet he was despised and hated of men, esteemed a fanatic and stirrer-up of sedition. But against this storm of abuse he stood up fearless and unmoved—a moral hero. I can again see the calm serenity that shone from the face of our friend and the bondman's friend, Stephen S. Foster, and that lifted him up above his enemies. I can again hear the prophetic words that fell from his lips.

In an address at Paxton, Mass., months before the firing upon the nation's flag at Fort Sumter, while giving one of his masterly pictures of the cruelty of the slave-power, he said, "I expect to live to see the day when the dead bodies of my neighbors will be carried by my door as victims of this blood-thirsty power." A prediction that proved literally true. Mark in this connection the words of another noble anti-slavery reformer spoken years before the clash of arms; and tell me, Were not these men raised up for this great warfare and were they not far in advance of the times in which they lived? "Nothing can save slavery. It is destined to ruin. Once I thought it might end peacefully. Now I think it must go down like so many another wickedness in violence and in blood."

This battle for civil liberty has been fought and the victory won, though at fearful cost of blood and treasure. Peace reigns again, and purified by fire the South and North can clasp hands and rejoice that this line of separation is forever blotted out.

But, my friends, there are giant powers in the land to-day forging chains far more galling than those of human slavery. Those but held the body, these seize with deadly grip the mind and keep it it in bondage. Secretism, to my mind, builds barriers God never intended should separate children of the common Father. It has initiation ceremonies so foolish and absurd they would seem to be beneath the dignity of manhood and womanhood. Time is too short to be wasted on such frivolities. Nay, does not its power enter the halls of justice and warp the judgment of those who are chosen and pledged to decide according to the law and evidence?

What too, shall be said of the mighty tide of intemperance that is sweeping all over the land destroying both body and mind? How shall it be met and how shall our young men be saved from its blighting influence? We who live in Canterbury see comparatively little of the evil.

Thank God, my friends, we welcome you to-day to a town that has not been cursed with a dram-shop at least for the almost quarter century it has been my home. But let us not forget those less favored. May all who have been placed as watchmen be faithful in sounding the alarm and bearing testimony against every form of evil. The treatment you will receive is but history repeating itself. Some will be wise and heed the warning voice, others will treat it with derision, scorn and contempt. Thus has it been in all ages. Listen to the Word of the Lord spoken through his faithful prophet Ezekiel: "Come, I pray you, and hear what is the word that cometh forth from the Lord. And they came unto thee as the people cometh, and they sit before me as my people, and they hear thy words, but they will not do them; for with their mouth they show much love, but their heart goeth after their covetousness. And lo! thou art unto them as a very lovely song, of one that hath a pleasant voice, and can play well on an instrument, for they hear thy words but do them not, and when this cometh to pass (lo! it will come) then shall they know that a prophet hath been among them."

"And thus O, Prophet-bard of old
Hast thou thy tale of sorrow told,
The same which earth's unwelcome seers
Have felt in all succeeding years.
Sport of the changeful multitude,
Nor calmly heard or understood,
Their song has seemed a trick of art
Their warnings but the actor's part,
With bonds and scorn and evil will
The world requites its prophets still.

So was it when the Holy One
The garments of the flesh put on,
Men followed where the Highest led,
For common gifts of daily bread,
And gross of ear, of vision dim,
Owned not the God-like power of Him.
Vain as a dreamer's words to them,
His wail above Jerusalem,
And meaningless the watch He kept
Through which his weak disciples slept.

Yet shrink not thou, whoe'er thou art
For life's great purpose set apart,
Before whose far discerning eyes,
The Future, as the Present lies!
Beyond a narrow-bounded age
Stretches thy Prophet-heritage!
Through Heaven's dim spaces angel-trod,
Through arches round the throne of God,
Thy audience, Worlds!—All time to be
The witness of the Truth in thee."

THE LATE SUPREME COURT DECISION.

VIEWED FROM THE STANDPOINT OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

BY REV. HENRY T. CHEEVER.

Readers of the Cynosure at the East are gratified to find in its columns the masterly speech of Frederick Douglass, at Washington, upon the late decision of the Supreme Court in regard to the unconstitutionality of the Civil Rights Act of 1875. His eloquent appeal and prayer will go down to the ages:

"Oh, for a Supreme Court of the United States which shall be as true to the claims of human liberty as the Supreme Court formerly was to the claims of slavery! When that day comes, as come it will, a Civil Rights Bill will not be declared unconstitutional and void, in utter and flagrant disregard of the intentions of the National Legislatures by which it was enacted, and of the rights secured by the Constitution. In the name of common sense, I ask, what right have we to call ourselves a nation in view of this decision and this destitution of power? In humiliating the colored people of this country, this decision humbles the nation."

It has humiliated and mortified me as a humble but sovereign citizen of the United States, side by side with my equal colored fellow-citizen. But it has fired me also with a determined purpose to do what in me lies to rouse the people to flaming indignation against this "turning away backward of judgment" in their own Supreme Courts, whose decisions, Mr. Douglass plaintively says, "should come down to us like the calm clear light of Infinite Justice."

It was expected by us in these parts that the decision would be reviewed in the late annual meeting of the American Missionary Association at Brooklyn, and that the view of the Association would be clearly expressed in regard to it, even as there was passed a resolution declaring its disapproval of the recent Congressional prohibitory legislation with reference to the Chinese. A form of action upon it was submitted to one of the secretaries, but the mover was not able to be present himself to urge it, and so it was not offered. Nor do I find by any reports that the matter was at all discussed or taken notice of in the course of the meeting. The action proposed was as follows:

Resolved, 1. That the American Missionary Association founded and existing as it does in the interests of the despised race of America, views with profound regret the recent decision of the Supreme Court that the Civil Rights Act of 1875, in enforcing the Fourteenth Amendment in behalf of colored men is an unconstitutional invasion of the rights of States. Without pronouncing upon the legal technicalities of the case, but upon the broad ground of equity and justice, we cannot believe that such a decision, for its bearing upon the rights of colored men, fairly reflects the views of the people of the United States. We fear it may inure to the injury of the colored race, and be an obstacle to their progress by its support of caste and color-prejudice. But we do not believe that the civilization of the age can now be turned back by such a decision any more than it could be by a former opinion in the Dred Scott case, that black men had no rights which white men were bound to respect.

Resolved, 2. That we extend sincere sympathy to our colored countrymen in this emergency, together with the assurance that the American Missionary Association, true to its origin, its founders, its history, will be found with them side by side in the struggles for equal rights and privileges to all the races of which the composite American Nation is made up.

The Christian Mirror of Maine says, the A. M. A. by its very genius as well as history, is bound to trample under foot the colored prejudice wherever it appears. The New York Tribune sarcastically remarks (I quote from memory) that it is matter of doubt whether, in the judgment of the Supreme Court, there are any individual rights as citizens which the nation as such is bound to respect, except it be their right to protection as against other nations or people. This probably is said after reading the text of Justice Bradley's decision, in which he holds that should a person deny to his fellow-man his right to vote, to hold office or property, to buy, sell, or sue in the courts; should he commit murder, or use ruffianly violence at the polls, "unless protected in these wrongful acts by some shield of State law or State authority," he can have no protection from the General Government.

Well does your Washington correspondent, H. H. Hinman, put the case when he says: "What we had supposed to have been forever settled by the logic of events, as well as by the decision of our National and State Legislation, we find re-opened, and we are face to face with the issue, are we a nation?" And if so can citizens of that nation look to it for protection? It may be conceded that the decision of the Court is technically correct, and that the right of Congress to pass such a law (as the Civil Rights Act) is not given by express and positive provision, yet it will still remain true that such questions are not to be decided on mere technicalities, and that an implied power to protect the rights of the citizen is equal to a positive mandate to do so.

The presumption in law is that it was the intention of the Constitution and of the Civil Rights legislation to establish justice and secure the blessings of liberty, and that this known intention is the law. Hence it follows as a legal axiom, that all laws or contracts calculated to impair the rights of any man must have the strictest constriction, and be supposed to mean no more than the words absolutely demand; while, on the other hand, laws that protect human liberty should have an enlarged and liberal construction.

I have hardly room left to say that Massachusetts barely escapes Butlerism by the most vigorous Republican campaign ever prosecuted, and the virtual union in the same of Prohibitionists. But the proof that has been given of power, by 152,000 solid votes of the Butler party in the interest of Rum, Rome, the Lodge and Democracy, and that in the very heart of Puritan New England, is ground for the gravest alarm. Methinks it should be a stimulas to the most aggressive and zealous work on the part of Protestant ministers and churches to enlighten, evangelize, and make temperate the pressing population of aliens and their children with which Massachusetts is so fast filling up. If Republicans will now keep the hard-fought field, and hold compact their 160,000, Robinson and the other leaders must write upon the Republican banner CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION OF THE FEEDING OF INTEMPERANCE BY THE MANUFACTURE AND SALE OF INTOXICATING DRINKS.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 14, 1883.

One of the most diabolical conspiracies of the war times has recently come to light by the publication of an official letter of a rebel emissary, sent North by the Confederacy to cripple the Northern States. The letter is taken from the papers captured at Richmond at the close of the war. One Thompson was commissioned to operate in the North. In this letter he details his operations. First, he found a secret society already in operation under an innocent name, and this he readily gained control of for his purposes. This gave him a co-operating force of men in all the Northern States. By means of this secret society he planned the burning of Northern cities, the seizure of the Government boats on the lakes, and at the same time sought to divide the sentiment of the North so as to weaken Lincoln's administration. An unlimited amount of money was placed at his disposal to execute these conspiracies. With cool effrontery he details the successes of his operations. One of the greatest successes enumerated is the fact that by continually harrassing the operations of the Government he kept 60,000 soldiers busy guarding Northern cities and commerce, thus withholding them from active service in the South.

But the strangest of all deceptions was when this secret society turned itself into a "Peace Society" and commenced a systematic agitation of "peace." Great meetings were deliberately planned as if they were the spontaneous uprisings of the people, when in fact they were engineered by a secret conspiracy in the interests of the Confederacy. One of these great meetings was held in Peoria, Ill., and was considered a grand success. A great crowd gathered and enthusiastic speeches were made. But two things baffled the conspirators. The orators of the occasion, not knowing the real animus of the movers, filled their speeches with expressions of loyalty to the Government, and the detectives of the administration followed the conspirators so closely that at last the whole design fell through. We may thank God for a deliverance from the secret plotters of our destruction in the midst of supposed safety. One cannot read Thompson's letter without a shudder at the terrible dangers to which we were exposed, the horrible depravity of "respectable men" who thus plotted, and a new sense of gratitude to God who never slumbered nor slept in all those dark days, but baffled these demons at every step. European secret societies can furnish no fouler record than these innocent "Good Samaritan" or "Peace" lodges.

The despatches from the South are again teeming with accounts of the operations of the Ku-Klux-Klan. If the half that is written be true we are bound to have a struggle with that lawless band again. Why do not Americans see that we must either rally to destroy these secret orders or they will destroy us? Jeering them, as does the New York Times, may hurt their pride, but it is no adequate cure for the evil.

Following hard on the coming to this country of the Catholic emissary Capel, the great proselyter, comes the news from Rome that the American bishops, now visiting the Pope, are to be instructed to "demand" of the United States "that the relations between church and the state shall be based upon canon law." Put this with the late secret meeting in New York presided over by the American Cardinal, and it at least arouses a strong suspicion of a renewed activity from Rome against our free institutions. It behooves us to be alive to these issues.

The repairs on our new building here are all completed. Mr. Ford deserves much praise for his perseverance. The building is now in good shape and half of it is already rented. Other friends are now furnishing the rooms for office use and we shall soon be ready for business. Several more responses have come to the stock subscriptions. The money cannot come too soon. Every day of delay is a loss to the cause. I am going northward for a few days, expecting to return here soon, after seeing some of those interested in this movement. E. D. BAILEY.

REFORM NEWS.

PHILADELPHIA ANTI-SECRET CONVENTION.

To the friends of Christian Reform in Southeastern Pennsylvania and adjoining counties:

The Christian Association organized last winter in Chambersburg, Penn., voted to hold its next meeting in Philadelphia. With the approval of the friends of the cause in this city it has been determined, God willing, to hold a convention in the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association corner of Fifteenth and Chestnut streets, on Tuesday and Wednesday, Dec. 18 and 19, prox. The hall has been engaged at an expense of $120, and a part paid on the rent. Pres. C. A. Blanchard of Wheaton College, and Hon. S.C. Pomeroy of Washington, have been written to, and are expected to address the convention. Other distinguished men in this city and elsewhere are expected to aid by their presence and addresses.

The great importance of this city as a commercial, intellectual and moral center makes it eminently desirable that such a convention should be held, and that it should be largely attended by those living in this and the adjoining States. The entire expenses of the meeting will doubtless exceed two hundred dollars, which amount we hope to have secured before the convention meets.

Entertainment will be provided as far as practicable for those coming from other places. All those desiring to be entertained, or willing to aid in the expenses of the convention are requested to write to me at 1522 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Penn. H. H. HINMAN.

THE WISCONSIN CONVENTION.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The Wisconsin State Convention is over, and the friends of the cause who were present feel that we have had a feast of fat things, and that with God's blessing, permanent good has been accomplished, and Christ and truth glorified.

Bro. J. P. Stoddard made the opening address, Tuesday evening, on the "Masonic Covenant," to a fair audience; and a profound impression seems to have been made as to the wickedness of the Masonic oath.

All the devotional meetings and free conferences were very interesting and encouraging to our faith. As the president and secretary were not able to be present, they sent letters of regret, and assurance of sympathy and prayers.

Bro. M. R. Britten was chosen temporary chairman, and W. W. Ames secretary pro tem. Permanent officers chosen were: president, J. W. Wood, of Baraboo; Rev.

W. W. Warner of Oakfield, secretary; and Bro. M. R. Britten, treasurer.

The contemplated political convention at Washington was freely discussed, and three delegates were appointed to attend, each of whom, in case they could not go, has the right to appoint a substitute. The appointees are, Capt. Wilson, M. R. Britten, and J. W. Wood. The Executive Board was empowered to appoint two additional delegates, if they shall deem it desirable to do so.

The sense of the convention was declared to be that a plank recognizing the right of women to vote, ought to be incorporated in the American platform at the Washington convention. Pres. C. A. Blanchard believed that with hearts emptied of self and sin, we could uproot all the great evils that surround us, and that the confident boasting of Masons of the glory and permanency of their institution, is a sign of its speedy destruction. "For when they shall cry, Peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh."

Pres. B. gave an admirable temperance address Wednesday evening, which was characterized by the Menomonie Times as one of the best, if not the best ever listened to by the people of Menomonie.

Thursday afternoon Pres. Blanchard discussed the topic of governmental reform in a very clear and satisfactory manner, favoring the recognition of God in the Constitution, the Bible as the basis of our laws, and Christ as the King of nations, as well as of saints.

Bro. Bancroft's report shows a vast amount of labor accomplished, while he has found many encouraging signs of progress in the reform. The convention retains him for service another year.

Pres. Blanchard addressed a very large and attentive audience, including many of our secret society people, on secret societies, Masonry in particular. "Speaking the truth in love," and spicing it with amusing illustrations, as well as with others of a blood-curdling nature, the crowd was kept in good humor, while the garments of the "Hand maid" were reduced to ribbons and blown away. Christ was glorified before the people, and it is hoped and believed that many will choose the Prince of light and life, and forsake the ways of darkness and sin.

Captain Wilson, our veteran reformer, presided at the lectures, and felt happy to witness the tokens of coming victory.

Bro. Stoddard prefaced the evening lecture with a thrilling presentation of a diagram of the lodge system, with its prominent branches or rites, showing Blue Lodge Masonry to be the basis of all the rest, and how the Grand Commander in the upper story of the Scottish rite, holds sway over five hundred and forty thousand and seventy-two oath- bound dupes, in churches, courts, legislatures, secret temperance work, elections, and so on, and whose power can be broken only by the destruction of the lodge system.

Convention next meets at the call of the executive committee.

W. W. AMES,
Secretary, pro tem.

SEVENTH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE NEW HAMPSHIRE C. A.

The seventh annual meeting of the New Hampshire Christian Association was held in Canterbury, Oct. 23, 24. After a season spent in worship Bro. A. H. Brown delivered an address of welcome which was fully illustrated by the cordial hospitality of the Congregational church and the people generally. Prof. E. D. Bailey, of Worcester, Mass., New England Agent of the National Christian Association, gave a very able lecture on Freemasonry Tuesday evening.

Corresponding delegates were appointed to the Congregational, Methodist, Adventist, Baptist and Free Baptist State Associations. The following officers were chosen for the ensuing year: President, Elder J. G. Smith; secretary, S. C. Kimball; treasurer, Dea. E. Smith.

Vice-presidents: Belknap county, Kimball Cole; Carroll county, B. M. Mason, Esq.; Cheshire county, Dea. F. S. Wood; Coos county, Elder John B. Deering; Grafton county, Prof. J. K. Lord; Hillsboro county, Moses Sawyer; Rockingham county, Rev. E. C. Cogswell; Merrimack county, J. F. French; Strafford county, Dea. Moses Pierce.

Executive Committee: Elder J. G. Smith, A. H. Brown, Dea. E. Smith, B. M. Mason and S. C. Kimball.

Elder S. C. Kimball was appointed home missionary and colporteur for the State, and provision made for his support. The death of Bro. L. D. Bryant was noticed by appropriate resolutions.

Resolutions were also passed emphatically discountenancing all secret societies, Mormonism, the liquor traffic and socialism; also commending the Christian Cynosure and Christian Witness, and thanking the Congregational church for the use of their house of worship, and the citizens of the place for their generous hospitality. S. C. Kimball delivered on address refuting the doctrine of evolution and defending the Bible from scientific attacks. Prof. Bailey lectured Wednesday evening on Odd-fellowship, conclusively proving its financial folly, its un-Christian character and immoral tendency. Sermons, addresses, and essays were also given by B. M. Mason, Esq., Dea. Increase Leadbetter of Auburndale, Mass., Dea. E. Smith, Rev. George Juchau of Arlington Heights, Mass., Elder J. G. Smith and others. A single collection more than defrayed all the expenses of the convention. About $50 were pledged for home mission work. We were much indebted to the Massachusetts delegation, Revs. Bailey and Juchau, and Dea. Leadbetter and his excellent wife.

This was indeed a Sabbatic convention, full of rest to the soul and cheer for future work. It marks a new era in Christian reform in New Hampshire. Ere this report is read the home missionary will be on his way spreading light and truth in many towns and villages. Let his labors be supplemented by the constant prayers of the church.

S. C. KIMBALL, Sec'y N. H. C. A.

—Bro. D. S. Faris, of Sparta, Ill., writes that a meeting for National Reform is to be held in Jordan's Grove, Ill., United Presbyterian church. One of the questions to be discussed is "National Reform in Relation to Secret Societies."

CORRESPONDENCE.

DR. MORRIS ON MASONRY.

PEORIA, Ill., Nov., 1883.

In a recent issue of the Interior there is an article by Dr. Morris on Freemasonry which is very interesting, and coming as it does from the acknowledged highest authority on the subject, is well worth attention and study. The careful perusal of it has induced me to ask the privilege of using a few lines in the Cynosure with a notice of this article. I am not a fanatic on the subject, but ever open to conviction on any subject when my opinions are proven in the wrong, and consequently I will express myself as I am impressed with the article. This is the first time I ever did express myself on the subject, and hence it cannot be argued that I am, as Dr. M. says, "a hot-headed fanatic."

In the opening argument, which might seem to some weighty, he says "lists of members are published." This was once done, but for common eyes it has not been done for two years. Futhermore, he says the constitution and by-laws are also published. Chadbourne says in his reply to the secrecy being an objection, "that in reality, about all that is kept secret is our rites, modes of recognition, assembly, proceedings, etc." Now what, may I ask, governs and prescribes "their rites, modes of recognition, assembly, proceedings, etc.," but their constitution and by-laws? Or it it is not this, what does govern them? or what is the constitution they so willingly publish?

The closing remark of this first paragraph brings to my mind what has ever been to me one of the most obstinate barriers to overcome. It is this: If they have so much good to distribute in the fraternity, why is it they keep it so closely to themselves, as if they were the only elect in creation? They are not thus following that highest Example which so many of them profess to love and honor. Even more, they are not following the dictates of humanity's conscience or human nature's desire. For if a man does anything worthy of honor, he is not so anxious to keep it secret. Modern humanity is too desirous of honor for this. Now since it is to benefit the needy, we may ask, where is the good bestowed? and if it does not extend further than the order it does not reach the most deservedly needy. But even admitting it accomplishes the most good in the brotherhood, why then not also apply, to the same beneficent object, the expense incurred in becoming one of the members, and thus secure a double blessing? Is it not better "to rule over ten cities" than "five"? But it is, moreover, unnatural that men so unequal should be bound together with such bonds as are the Masonic brotherhood. By them the law of nature, which binds the young man's heart to that of his father, mother or sister, with the silken cords of kinship, as well as the marital law of God, which should bind a man to his home, wife and child, are completely abrogated.

But to return more directly to the article. Dr. Morris says "he keeps his affairs to himself, and will communicate them to no one." But has he not taken upon himself the most solemn oath the human imagination could devise, "to implicitly trust and confide in a brother?" Then why should he so abhor the idea of any one finding out his personal affairs? "Consistency thou art" more than "a jewel."

As the writer says the objections may be summarized under four heads. I shall adopt the same divisions, if possible to approach more nearly the same basis of argument.

1. The secrecy itself objectionable.

I have said somewhat above which will apply to this directly, in speaking of the sacredness of his family relations. If "what is objectionable to the outsider is a strong merit to the insider," then necessarily it follows that the members must be taken in through ignorance. For the doctor in his opening statement boasts of the amount that is published and made known. But the seizure of the other horn is equally fatal. A man who would so avowedly accept and so tenaciously cling to a principle which to him "is objectionable," we would most certainly brand as a fool. "What would the happy household circle be if we were forbidden to drop the latch at the outer door?" Let me answer. You are not forbidden to do thus, but absolutely "forbidden" not to do so. And who is it you exclude? None other than your wife and family and mother and perhaps, as well, your kindest and dearest friend. You give a place in your heart's dearest affections to the stranger whom chance has thrown in your way, instead of the wife whom love should have brought you.

2. The lame, halt and blind are excluded.

To this I say, is it doing the good (?) where it is most needed, if you make this exclusion? Is your philanthropy doing the most possible? To the professing Christian, who is a Mason, I would say, is it the way of duty taught both by the word and example of our Master?

3. As to the exclusion of females.

I have spoken of this somewhat in my remarks on the first topic. You, my Masonic friend, preach loudly "the exclusion of all tramps, light-heads, feeble bodies," all who speak "slander, hatred, malice, and the things forbidden in the Commandments," but was it on account of shame that you did not add to the list your mother? Much more truly, though, is she excluded; for you acknowledge frankly that there are many in the lodge who are not worthy of being Masons, but she is never admitted to a full enjoyment of the privileges (?) afforded you.

4. It ignores the name of Jesus Christ.

This I will attempt to answer first from a logical and philosophical point of view. A man must be for a principle or against it. Now in the lodge the Christian drops his Christ out entirely, in order to accommodate the Jew. Since Christ alone is Christianity the Mason is no longer a Christian. He assumes for the time the Jewish belief. But why should he be compelled to do this? Not certainly because the Jews are in such a majority in the lodge. While on the other hand if the body abide by the rule of minority it is yet a serious objection. Is it not simply this, that they would rather give up their religion than have a "bolt" in the lodge? "Choose ye therefore whom ye will serve," and they have shown their choice. Thus it seems to be, taking the view from Dr. Morris' statements.

One word more and I have done. That higher order or degree, the commandery, as Dr. M. says, "relates to the agonies of the garden and the place of crucifixion." Tell me, please, wherein and to whom was delegated the more than seraphic privilege of imitating those sufferings? No religious creed on earth sanctions such ultraism. Why then has a body which claims that they are not a religious body, that right which to all Christian people is too sacred.

Finally, in the closing remark of the article the writer says, "he feels secure, since three of the four elders of his church are Masons." In other words, the Masons govern that church. Does this not signify that a Mason will cling closer to a brother Mason than he will to his church? If Masonry has nothing more to offer humanity than Dr. Morris has shown up, I am fearful of her success with that class of men who think twice and act once. And he being a high authority on the subject it certainly is exhibited in the best possible light.

RETLOUC.

"OKLAHOMA" PAYNE.

VALLEY FALLS, Kans.

To-day I had an interesting interview with Captain Payne of Oklahoma fame. After recounting his grievances, and telling how he had repeatedly attempted to have his case tried, but owing to the machinations of those in power a trial was refused him, a friend who was with me asked him if he was on the square.

Said he, "Try me."

Grips and signs being exchanged satisfactorily he was asked, "Why, when you are a Mason, do those officials who are also Masons do you such injustice?"

"Oh," said he, "they are higher up than I am, and a low degree Mason has no more show with them than an outsider. One who is low down has to submit to the decisions of those above him, although he may not even know who they are."

Isn't this a beautiful illustration of Masonic brotherly ove?

J. E. H.

GOT THE RIGHT MINISTER.

GOODWINE, Ill., Nov. 12, 1883.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—It has been some time since I wrote to our official paper, the Cynosure. I desire to state that I am still greatly interested in our reform. I sometimes think it may, when written up in history and fully consumated, be but little behind the Great Reformation inaugurated by Luther.

So far as my knowledge goes (and I flatter myself that I am quite well posted), at least two-thirds of the Masonic ministers have quietly dropped out, or are "mum" on the subject. They are at least ashamed of the order. While we think it is true that the better portion of the membership are leaving the sinking craft, there is a corresponding addition of the worst elements of society falling in with the order. Of the membership in this section with whom I am acquainted about two-thirds are either dram-drinkers or libertines, or both. Is it not time that the church of Christ everywhere was withdrawing from so rotten and corrupt an organization, to say nothing as to the fact that the order is infidel in its organization? The above is mainly applicable to the Masonic order, while the other and lesser secret orders are mainly cut to the same pattern.

Recently I wrote up to our elder for this district at the Rock River Conference of the M. E. church, to send us a non-Mason for this charge, urging that his support would be cut short if he "hailed on the square." In response word came back, "We have sent you not only a non-Mason, but a hater of the order." While the elder himself did not so answer, the former pastor so wrote. The bread and butter argument is a big argument and one that lodge ministers will not be slow to heed.

Masonry is great for hiding behind something—Masons never feel or appear so well as when they are behind something. Masonic ministers make grand hiding-places for members of the craft, and the sooner we get such ministers out of the way the sooner Masons, like slaveholders, will tumble into the "last ditch."

J. S. HICKMAN.

PRAYER THE RIGHT ARM OF REFORM.

The secretists are laughing in scorn at what they term the "puny effort" put forth by the reformers to undermine the great Babel they have built and in which they trust. But let us not despair of winning a glorious moral triumph, for we shall win if these taunts and persecutions but drive us nearer to our God, causing us, like Nehemiah and his co-laborers, to cry day and night to the Strong One for strength and to the Wise One for wisdom. In this course and in this alone lies success of this reform. To establish the prayer meeting is wise. There cannot be too many of them; but the true battle-ground lies in the closet. Let a thousand closets witness daily strong cryings to God for help and direction in this reform.

Queen Mary is said to have remarked that she feared John Knox's prayers more than an army of twenty thousand men.

Oh! that the prayers of a thousand like John Knox be set in battle array against the gigantic evils of the present time. Whatever else we neglect to do, don't let us forget to ask God "without ceasing" for aid in this time of need, for in him alone lieth our great strength.

M. P. N.

A REPORT FROM THE FRIENDS.

PLEASANT PLAIN, Iowa.

I have been a constant reader of the Cynosure for upwards of ten years, except when absent from home, and have thus kept posted in regard to the progress of the reform work. I have talked upon the subject as opportunity offered, both with Masons, Anti-masons, and those who did not appear to care anything about it (not a few of that sort). In the church of which I am a member, the Friends, many items of interest have come under my observation. Conflicting statements that lodge members frequently make are noticeable. I have watched the progress the reform has made in the Friends' society this fall, having attended three of the Friends' yearly meetings, Iowa, Western Indiana, and Indiana, at Richmond in the eastern part of the State.

In Iowa there was a commendable out-spoken anti-secret sentiment expressed, also in the Richmond meeting. In the Western Indiana no one spoke upon the subject but myself, and I was stopped. When I first stepped my foot upon the ground, before entering the house, a member who is quite active told me that I must not fight the Masons. I told him I was not afraid of them. In conversing with Friends I find quite a number has been in the Masonic lodge. Some are demitted and observe the Masonic rule pretty well; go on smoothly, saying nothing about it. Some will confess there is no Jesus in it. One Friend I met with, a Mason, thought it a good thing, said if he had sons he would advise them to join some secret society. He was advanced in years. I thought surely his lodge above was not very harmonious with his lodge below.

OBSERVER.

A SUPPOSED CASE.

A watchmaker or jeweler in a certain village has a bad reputation. He does not belong to the lodge, and hence all his work is very bad. Although you have had good work done by him, yet somehow there are reports swarming in the air, like flies around a dead carcass, that he spoils every watch that is left with him; steals its jewels, injures its time, etc., etc. Mrs. So-and-so had her watch spoiled by him. Mr. Thus-and-thus had his five hundred dollar chronometer that he inherited from an "ancient and honorable" grandfather ruined by him, and so on. Mr. Jones swears that he will never trust his watch with him again.

So at last our watchmaker, tired out with persecution, joins the lodge, and thus furnishes twenty-five dollars to some needy politician to get an office.

And now, behold the change! The watchmaker's work is all well enough. He has even more than he can do on hand. His case is always full of watches.

But in which case do the lodge members lie about the watchmaker; before or after his joining the lodge?

The reader is left to his own inferences. He is free to decide for himself how long he will stand a nest of blackmailers in his village, who are worse than a den of counterfeiters or coiners of base metal, for Frecmason coin slanders and lies, the worst circulation in existences

Report of J. K. Hunter, colporteur, for his first week's work in Randolph Co.:

"I am glad to report success, in working for the cause. I think I am doing a great work for this part of the State." Received from sale of books, $5.30; number of houses visited, 62; expenses, 40c. [Mr. H's work is: 1st, to visit from house to house, and enlighten people upon this reform; 2nd, to sell literature and take subscriptions for the Cynosure; 3rd, to give to each family a suitable tract; 4th, to work up lectures in churches and school-houses. This work is under the direction of a local committee—Rev. D. S. Faris, Chairman].

Bro. Faris writes: "The work started on the 30th of Oct. A few books have been sold—some talking done—and partial arrangements made for a lecture or two."

Besides Mr. Hunter's work in Southern Ill., one lecture has been given in Grundy Co., by Rev. J. P. Stoddard, and one in Chicago by Edmond Ronayne. One Sabbath school has been supplied with tracts, and one church has appointed the first prayer meeting in each month as a time to especially remember in prayer Christian reform, including of course, the anti-secrecy reform.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS

Containing cash remittances for the work.

Mrs. C. A. Tillson:

"There is no other cause I would more gladly contribute to, and will bear it in mind, so as to send you a little more as soon as I can. I believe the leaven is working."

Jerome Howe:

"I have a great many ways for my money, but know of no better use to which it could be put if good, efficient men are employed as lecturers."

Rev. T. H. Hanna, D.D., sends a contribution and writes: "Would make it larger if I could in justice."

Ansel Lake:

"I shall give each year so long as I think the work is carried on in the best interests of the people at large."

Allan Wright:

"I would very much like to do something more for the good cause."

Mrs. H. E. Hayden:

"Our Harmon Wesleyan church are willing to do what little they can to aid the cause. We are poor and in debt $600, but I decided to take up a collection."

P. M. Carnahan:

"I am convinced that secretism is the greatest hinderance to justice, to temperance, to moral reform of any kind, and to the cause of Christ, that infests our fair land."

Jas. Robinson:

"My contribution to the good cause I will try to forward before long. I am humbly but heartily with you."

Dr. J. Blount:

"If my purse was equal to my interest in the cause the society would not lack for funds."

H. D. Whitcomb:

"Will pray and try to work as I have opportunity."

Schœnberger Bros.:

"Pledging is sinful, and is practical atheism. Enclosed please find one dollar for the State work."

A WORD TO ILLINOIS READERS.

1. The enclosed report will show you what your executive committee have done, and what friends have done.

2. We have heard from a few, we hope this month to hear from many more friends who have a mite for this cause.

3. If this month brings, in cash and pledges, what we expect it will, we can put an energetic man in the field, in this State for the balance of the year as a lecturer.

4. Will you help by asking every friend to do what he can in cash for this work?

5. Will you ask the pastor of your church to take up a collection for the Ills. State work?

6. Will you consult with your pastor as to the kind of work which he will co-operate in, in your village, and write me?

7. Will you see to it at once?

Respectfully, W. I. PHILLIPS.
For the Committee.

The Spirit of Christ sweetly claims the soul of a suffering believer, not by taking away all sense of pain but by overcoming it with the sense of His love.

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON IX.—December 2, 1883.—David's enemy—Saul.—1 Sam. 18:1-16.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"And David behaved himself wisely in all his ways; and the Lord was with him.,'—1 Sam. 18:14.

"Loved him." There were in David both physical and moral qualities, which tended to win for him the affection of those with whom he came in contact. According to the common chronology, Jonathan was considerably older than David; but there was such community of sentiment between them on the highest and most important of all matters, and such similarity of tastes generally, as fitted them for each other's fellowship. They were one in their faith in God and in their devotion to his will. Then they had both a genius for military leadership, and this would help in some measure to cement their friendship.—Taylor.

"Took him that day....no more home." He took him, that is, into his service (at court), and allowed him not to return to his father's house, as he had done in chapter 17:15. The words presuppose that David had desired to return thither.—Lange.

"To his bow." The famous bow, which was his special weapon (2 Sam. 1:22). To part with his favorite bow was a great proof of love. "And to his girdle." A prince's girdle was doubtless a costly thing. Made of handsome morocco, stained with Tyrian dye, and set with gold and jewels. But it was freely given. Jonathan had stripped himself of all to enrich and adorn his friend. —Hanna. By these gifts to David, the concluson of the covenant of friendship on Jonathan's part is solemnly confirmed. Clericus supposes that the object of this gift was to enable the poorly-clad David to appear at court in seemly dress, But the mention of the several weapons, which, together, make a complete war outfit, rather suggests that Jonathan wished to honor David as the military hero; and this manner of sealing their friendship was a proof that the two, as heroes, equally crowned by God with victory, could love one another, and that Jonathan was far from feeling envy and jealously of David for his heroic deed.—Lange.

"Singing and dancing." To escort the victors home with singing and dancing. Dancing was the usual expression of rejoicing upon occasions of national triumph like the present (comp. Ex. 15:20,21; Judg. 11:34), and at religious festivals (Ps. 68:25; 149:3). These dances were as a rule confined to women.—Cambridge Bible.

"With tabrets, etc." Here we see what is the original purpose of music and dancing. It was the natural expression of joy, and not meant for purposes of social intercourse between the sexes at all. Song and dance go naturally together. The "Greek Chorus" was a choir trained to chant and move or dance in cadence. And the Greek chorus is itself a proof that the original use of dancing was religious and sacramental. There is not in God's Word a vestige of encouragement to dancing between men and women. David, we are told, danced before the Lord. Yes, and with all his might. But the vast majority of those who practice modern dances, are surely dancing before the devil with all their might.—Anon.

"What can he have, etc." Rather, there is only the kingdom left for him. Compare for the same sentiment 1 Kings 2:22. "A kingdom (says Camden) brooketh no companion, and majesty more heavily taketh injuries to heart."—Cook. Proud men cannot endure to hear any praised but themselves, and think all the honor lost that goes by themselves. It is a sign the spirit of God is departed from men if they be peevish in their resentment of affronts, envious and suspicious of all about them, and ill-natured in their conduct. For the wisdom from above makes us quite otherwise.—Henry.

"The evil spirit from God." In what sense was this evil spirit "from the Lord"? (1) One vital fact in Saul's case is that he was apostate from God, and therefore inevitably wretched. (2) The next fact pertaining to the state of such a mind is that it presents a most congenial field for Satan's agency. He loves to torment such souls, and never misses his opportunity. (3) There is need of no other agency from God than the permissive. Satan never needs to be sent on such a mission; it is only requisite that the Lord suffer him to go.—Kitto. (4) It was from God as an instrument of punishment and reform. That which torments us and does not suffer us to sink into the ease and security which we long for, surely has a commission from God for our good. Surely this feeling of suspicion more explains to us than anything else the nature of the retribution which a man brings upon himself by tampering with evil thoughts and imaginations, by trifling with the loving power which is so close to him and so ready to nourish him with wholesome and gracious food. Awful as is the misery which this sin causes to others, yet the punishment which it inflicts upon the heart that is the seat of it, the madness which it produces there, is something more terrible still.—Maurice.

"Saul was afraid of David." The historian makes Saul's fear of David very prominent, naming it even the third time in this one chapter (vers. 12, 15, 29). "Fear" is altogether the right word; yet it was not fear that David would take or even plot against his life, but that he would inevitably have the hearts of the people, would eclipse the honor of himself as king, and ultimately become king by virtue of his greatly superior merit. The bitter self-consciousness of being forsaken of God and unworthy to reign, and a sense of David's superior worth, to which he could not blind his eyes, conspired to make him the most wretched of men.—Cowles.

The mere man of pleasure is an unsatisfied being, and miserable in his heart.

Mankind like and respect men of decision—border men, neutral men, are detested.

BAND OF HOPE BIBLE LESSON.

REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS FOLLOW THE OBSERVANCE OR DESECRATION OF THE SABBATH DAY.

20. And say unto them, Hear ye the word of the Lord, ye kings of Judah, and all Judah, and all the inhabitants of Jerusalem that enter in by these gates:
21. Thus saith the Lord; Take heed to yourselves, and bear no burden on the Sabbath day, nor bring it in by the gates of Jerusalem;
22. Neither carry forth a burden out of your houses on the Sabbath day, neither do ye any work, but hallow ye the Sabbath day, as I commanded your fathers.
23. But they obeyed not, neither inclined their ear, but made their neck stiff, that they might not hear, nor receive instruction.
24. And it shall come to pass, if ye diligently hearken unto me, saith the Lord, to bring in no burden through the gates of the city on the Sabbath day, but hallow the Sabbath day to do no work therein;
25. Then shall there enter into the gates of this city kings and princes sitting upon the throne of David, riding in chariots and on horses, they, and their princes, the men of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem; and this city shall remain forever.
26. And they shall come from the cities of Judah, and from the places about Jerusalem, and from the land of Benjamin, and from the plains, and from the mountains, and from the south, bringing burnt offerings, and sacrifices, and meat offerings, and incense, and bringing sacrifices of praise, unto the house of the Lord.
27. But if ye will not hearken unto me to hallow the Sabbath day, and not to bear a burden, even entering in at the gates of Jerusalem on the Sabbath day; then will I kindle a fire in the gates thereof, and it shall devour the palaces of Jerusalem, and it shall not be quenched. Jer. 17: 20-27.

GOLDEN TEXT.—If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable; and shalt honor him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words,

Then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord; and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it. Isa. 58: 13, 14.

CENTRAL TRUTH.—Keeping God's day always brings a reward with it.

1. The warning is to the kings first because they had allowed the Sabbath to be so violated. Weak or wicked rulers are in a great measure to blame for their people's sins.
2. But this was no excuse for the people. They knew God's law.
3. The chief cause of the captivity was Sabbath breaking. The seventy years during which the Jews were captive in Babylon exactly corresponded with the number of Sabbaths that had elapsed since they first had national existence under a king, a period of 490 years.
4. We find that along with Sabbath breaking had come oppression of the poor, drunkenness, profanity and false worships, till the whole nation was so completely demoralized that it fell an easy prey to its enemies.
5. These vices follow Sabbath breaking now as surely as they did then, and will just as certainly work national ruin.
6. The poor are always oppressed where the Sabbath is broken. This is shown by the recent strikes. Little by little employers encroached on the hours of Sabbath rest without proportionately increasing the laborer's wages.
7. When the poor are discontented they are easily drawn into secret labor unions, which oblige them to lose their wages in strikes, and sometimes to commit lawless acts at the bidding of a few leaders.
8. All overworked classes of men who have to toil without proper intervals of rest and sleep are tempted to take some alcoholic stimulus to keep them up.
9. The power and greatness of a nation depends on the morality, intelligence and prosperity of her laboring classes.

PRACTICAL TRUTHS.

Neither nations nor individuals can prosper who break the Sabbath.

The laboring classes suffer most from Sabbath violation.

One who keeps the Sabbath God rewards in different ways. (1) He is guarded from many temptations which beset those who do not. (2) He begins the week with all his faculties freshened for duty. (3) He puts himself in sympathy with the good and virtuous. (4) He can claim God's sure promise of blessing to those who keep his holy day.

LESSON TALK.

Many stories have been told of Scotch strictness in keeping the Sabbath—over strictness some people would call it. But let us think about it a moment' It is a fact that few countries have produced more distinguished men who were poor boys in their youth than Scotland. Hugh Miller, the fisher lad of Cromarty, unsealing creation's history, as he toiled with bleeding hands in the quarriers of the Old Red Sandstone; David Livingstone, the factory boy, who opened Africa's great continent to Christian missionaries, and did more than any other man to stop the horrors of the interior slave trade, are only two instances out of many. Now it is not hard to discover the reason, or rather a regular chain of reasons. Where the Sabbath is kept holy it always means a Christian home, and a Christian home, no matter how poor it is, means several very important things: It means religious instruction, and time for it; it means a family altar; it means habits of industry, temperance and self restraint; and all these things together mean good future citizens; while good citizens mean, as we all know, a stable government, prosperous at home and respected abroad. The Sabbath is the friend of intelligence and education, for it gives the poor man time to read and think, and instruct his children. Where the Sabbath is not regarded we find the laboring classes are far more illiterate. Probably the great reason why the Jews became such gross violaters of the Sabbath was because of their secret false worships. Now we have seen that the secret lodge of to-day is what those false worships were then. We have seen that "the religion of Masonry is that in which all men agree," and we know very well that all men do not agree about keeping the Sabbath. Hence it follows that Masonry has no Sabbath. Men who are satisfied with the rites and ceremonies of the lodge will soon begin to neglect going to church; then they grow careless about keeping God's day and finally they violate it openly. Thus we see that Masonry is the deadly foe of the Sabbath, and if we allow it to increase and grow strong it will make us a nation of Sabbath breakers like the ancient Jews.

LESSON HYMN.

"Sweet Sabbath chimes float on the air, Blessed day! blessed day!"

"FREEMASONRY AT A GLANCE."

An exposition of the first three degrees of Freemasonry in every village for little or no money! How can it be done? By sending to W. I. Phillips, Treasurer N. C. A., for a 32-page pamphlet, containing 40 illustrations with explanations, with the legal attestation of the past master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago, as to the correctness of said exposition. We will send, postpaid, from now to first of January, thirty (30) of these pamphlets for one dollar; sixty-five (65) for two dollars, and 165 for five dollars.

Edmund Ronayne says: "One of these pamphlets put in each family will do as much good as a public exposition would do." The way to get them without money is to send new subscriptions for the Cynosure at $2.00 each, receiving for three such subscriptions 36 of the pamphlets exposing the first three degrees of Freemasonry.

Many have written: "Send a lecturer to our place, we need one very much." This is often impossible, but the above plan is much better than no lecture; does not need a church or hall, which often cannot be had; and costs but a fraction of what a lecturer usually costs. Will you see to it that you have one of these lecturers; silent as sunlight and as powerful, in your town. If you cannot afford the dollar or five dollars yourself, you can soon collect from friends for this purpose the needed funds.

N. B. Not less than thirty sent on the above terms, and only open to January 1, 1884. Single copies 6 cents.

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE.

Well Pleased.

Dr. C. ROBERTS, Winchester, Ill., says: "I have used it with entire satisfaction in cases of debility from age or overwork, and in inebriates and dyspeptics, and am well pleased with effects."

DON'T STOP MY PAPER.

Don't stop my paper, printer,
Don't strike my name off yet;
You know the times are stringent,
And dollars hard to get;
But tug a little harder
Is what I mean to do,
And scrape the dimes together,
Enough for me and you.

I can't afford to drop it;
I find it doesn't pay
To do without a paper,
However others may;
I hate to ask my neighbors
To give me theirs on loan,
They don't just say, but mean it,
Why don't you have your own?

You can't tell how we miss it,
If it, by any fate,
Should happen not to reach us,
Or come a little late;
Then all is in a hubbub,
And things go all awry,
And, printer, if you're married,
You know the reason why.

The children want their stories,
And wife is anxious, too,
At first to glance it over,
And then to read it through;
And I to read the leaders,
And con the book reviews,
And search the old SPECTATOR
For every scrap of news.

Then take it kindly, printer,
If pay be somewhat slow,
For cash is not so plenty,
And wants not few, you know.
But I must have my paper,
Cost what it may to me,
I'd rather dock my sugar,
Or do without my tea.

So, printer, don't you stop it,
Unless you want my frown,
For here's the year's subscription,
So credit it right down,
And send the paper promptly
And regularly on,
And let it bring us weekly
Its welcomed benison.

MOSES PETTENGILL.

"Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his."

Moses Pettengill, whose death the papers bring to us, has, almost literally, faded into heaven. As the Scriptures give the record of the holy dead, so let us dwell on the departure of this great and good man.

He came to Peoria while it was a mere village, and lived with his first wife in a log cabin. His great business capacity immediately put him in possession of means to build, but they had no church. "Shall we live in this cabin another year, and build us a church, or build our house?" he said to his wife. "Let the house of God be built," said the godly woman. "We can live in this cabin another year."

I came to Mr. Pettengill's house in 1846, on my way from Cincinnati to Knox College, and have known him intimately for thirty-seven years. During all these years he has, like Caleb and Joshua "wholly followed the Lord." He "walked with God, and is not for God has taken him." He was neither recluse or sanctificationist. He mingled freely with the world without being tarnished by it, and has "kept his garments unspotted." He was in Niagara county, N. Y., and visited Fort Niagara while Morgan was confined in the powder magazine, whence he was taken out by Freemasons to be murdered. From that day he has been a consistent, steady, constant opposer of the lodge. The slave question, like Aaron's serpent swallowed up all the rest of the questions, and Mr. Pettingill stood out against the slave-system when it was odious and dangerous to his buildings, his business, and his person to do so. Wrath could not provoke him. Danger could not intimidate him. Even "persecution," which "maketh a wise man mad," failed to rouse or madden him. His ways pleased the Lord, who made even his enemies to be at peace with him. He was faithful to his companion in her illness who survives him, and God may strengthen her now that she has none else to lean on.

The city of Peoria will honor him; the friends of a pure religion will honor him; and neither will his name or memory languish, for "The righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance."

This brief mention is written on the eve of starting forward on my journey, and our readers will hear more of him when leisure and time permit. B.

EDITORIAL LETTERS.

AMHERST AND HER COLLEGE FRATERNITIES.

AMHERST, Mass., Nov. 10, 1883.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I came over from Northampton by stage here last night and called on President Seelye, who received me with much cordiality; and, after tea, directed me to the man of whom I was in quest. He is a noble and true-hearted man, and as all such must have afflictions, I presume he is not an exception. He has an interesting family, and beautiful.

I have found here a good man, a lawyer, who had seen our Bro. John A. Conant of Willimantic. He will do what he consistently can for a Pomeroy meeting at Northampton.

At the hotel I found a college student of 19 years, in the Sopohmore class, whose father, in east Massachusetts, is opposed to Masonry. This young man is already in one of the secret college fraternities, of which there are seven here, all but one, owning houses of their own; and that one is building a costly mansion to hold their meetings in nights. The cost of these buildings must already exceed, I judge, one hundred thousand dollars, drawn of course from parents and guardians. The gentlemanly and agreeable student who gave me these facts, of course, thinks the Greek Letter fraternities necessary and proper. I saw and conversed with some others on the streets. Something more than two-thirds of the students are in these secret college orders, of which more anon.

A THEOLOGICAL CYCLONE.

When Satan secs his realm in danger of invasion he sets good ministers to fooling their brains with "theology." He thus keeps them busy with an excellent appearance of doing something about religion while their people are kept from assailing sin; and multitudes die in their sins!

I am writing here near Jonathan Edwards's grave, who was driven out of the First Church pulpit here on a discussion of "The half-way Covenant." This was the pretence. The real cause was that Edwards and the Tennents upheld the "Great Awakening" under Whitefield's preaching. The Taylor and Tyler fight about theological metaphysics kept the New England churches busy, and sunk the ministry one-half, by keeping them out of Abolitionism; while slavery and the lodge organized secession and rebellion.

The New England ministers, if they had gone with Channing, would have stopped that war before it began. They fought a theological battle and saddled a needless theological seminary on the funds of the New England churches, and sunk thousands to perdition who might have been saved.

Andover, which dodged the slave question, has refused one of our ablest leeturers, endorsed by the Willistons, to address their students on the lodge issue! The Andover Faculty have now set out on a "New Departure," or "Progressive Theology," without telling or even knowing where their "progress" is to bring up or land. The old Bibliotheca Sacra is to go to Oberlin in the wake of the Quint National Council, to keep that excellent school from moving on the false worships and organized deism of this country! Oberlin is to give up "the Oberlin theology" which has been her boast; and henceforth act in the role of the "sound New England Theology;" whatever that may be.

Meantime, the New England churches are being filled with women, and emptied of men, who go to the lodge. And thus the devil's game of theological "ball and cups" is to succeed in further sinking a good, but misled ministry into popular contempt! There is but one thing which can prevent the success of these Satanic "devices;" and that is humble, persevering, earnest, prevailing prayer. In another column may be seen the programme for a Theological rowing-match against the Andover light draft boat. Would God they could see the Unitarianism of the lodges!

LODGE SLANDER.

NORTHAMPTON, NOVEMBER 12, 1883.—The lodge has Gen. Pomeroy slandered in advance in this region, where he used to superintend a larger Sabbath-school than they have here now. It is the "Spargere voces" of Virgil, mere general slander, without fact or point. It is the old saying of Wesley—"Wicked men say all manner of evil against me and good men believe them." But there is a general disposition to hear Mr. Pomeroy here. These hills and valleys are still inhabited by some of the best men and women on earth, and the press here will deal well and truly by our cause. I believe the Hampshire Gazette here is the oldest paper in the United States, and Mr. Geer, its editor, has an excellent reputation among good men. Twelve or thirteen years ago I published in this same Gazette, Senator Pomeroy's speech to us in Farwell Hall; so well remembered by our people. It was able, statesman-like, and Christian—in one word, American.

Going over by stage to see President Seelye of Amherst College, I rode with a gentlemanly man who told me he was an Episcopalian, and a Mason; and, though he appeared a sincere temperance man, his breath smelled strong of liquor. He said President Seelye was not popular; that the Freshman class this year had fallen to 65 from 100 last year," etc.

I asked him, "What makes the President unpopular?"

"O, people think him bigoted in his religion," was his reply.

I am sorry that President Seelye seems not to have opposed the lodge, but he is not a Mason, and will not truckle to it, and the lodge hates all honest men. My gentlemanly fellow-passenger gave me a piece of interesting information. A year ago and more I stopped at Amherst on my way up to Mr. Moody's Institute, at Northfield, and asked a bookseller and stationer in Amherst whether any Amherst people were going up to hear Moody and Bonar?

"I presume not," he replied; "Mr. Moody is an uneducated man, and is not popular here!"

I asked my fellow-passenger if he knew that bookseller?

"Yes, very well."

"Is he a Mason?" I asked.

"Yes," he replied. He belongs to the same (Episcopal) church with me, and has been often Master of our lodge!"

If good men knew how universally they are hated and undermined by the lodge; and how they gain nothing by their wincing silence toward it, they would come out boldly like Mr. Moody, and call the lodges, as they are, "cages of unclean birds." B.

If the Cynosure had TEN THOUSAND subscribers the yearly price could be reduced to a uniform rate of $1.50. Work and pray for this.

THE SECEDER LIST.

A year or more has passed since any names have been publishsd to inerease this roll of honor, but as will appear to the gratification of all good men the glorious work of saving men one by one from the grasp of the lodge goes on silent but sure as are the processes of nature, and indeed, all God's excellent works. The truth permeating the masses of human mind like leaven holds before us the glorious hope that it will at some time prevail and influenee the life of every man. This is the good list for to-day. Read it and thank God:

Paul Dunken (3 degrees), Freeman, Mo.
C. B. Patton (3) Macksburg, Ohio.
Rev. Mr. Merchant, Corry, Pa.
John Babb (3) Mechanicsburg, Pa.
Rev. E. J. Clemens, Clayville, N. Y.
B. C. Sothern, Browning, Mo.
Rev. Mr. Bowerman, Elmo, Mo. (Waterloo lodge, Iowa).
Geo. T. Dissette, Sabetha, Kans.
W. R. Roach, Pickering, Ont.
G. Heaton, Fairfield, Iowa.
John S. B. Nickel, Fairfield, Iowa.
Oscar D. Moore, Cortland, N. Y.
Huntingdon Lyman, Cortland, N. Y.
O. E. Pratt, Oneonta, N. Y.
James C. Johnson, Strawberry, Kans.
E. Conkling, Napoli, N. Y.
Geo. Van Arsdale, Caton, N. Y.
A. P. Graves, evangelist.
Thos. W. Cooper, Winfield, Iowa.
J. Y. Lambert, Savanna, Ill.

It is no little addition to the satisfaction of presenting this good list of twenty names, to know that all through the country there are hundreds, yes, thousands more who have forever left the lodge, whose names have never appeared in print and may never be known till the Judgment day. Could they be persuaded to take an open stand for their Lord against this hateful and hating system they would themselves be blessed and would have the satisfaction of knowing that their testimony was a blessing to others.

DR. J. N. NORRIS has lent us a volume taken from the trunk of one of his clients who was a Mason, after his death, by members of his family. The book is entitled, "THE POCKET COMPANION AND HISTORY OF FREEMASONS, London, 1759. It contains songs sung in the lodges of that day; and among other interesting matters eontains the following, which is "Song No. 15."

I.

A Mason one time
Was cast for a crime,
Which Malice had put a bad face on;
And then without thought
To a Gibbet was brought,
The Free and the Accepted Mason.

II.

And when he came there,
He put up his Pray'r
For Heaven to pity his ease on!
His king he espy'd
Who in progress did ride
Was a Free and an Accepted Mason.

III.

The out a Sign flew
Which the Grand Master knew
Who rode up to know the occasion;
Asked who had condemned
So worthy a Friend
As a Free and an Accepted Mason?

IV.

He tried the Cause
And he found out the Flaws,
According to JUSTICE and Reason.
He tuck'd up the Judge,
And all that bore Grudge
To the Free and the Accepted Mason.

V.

Tho' ignorant Pride
Our Secrets deride,
Or foolish Conjectures occasion,
They ne'er shall divine
The Word or The Sign
Of a Free and an Accepted Mason.

The copy is correct as printed 124 years ago in this old book. Many to-day deny and scoff at the idea that Masonry ever enters and influences courts of justice. The above old song has been sung by thousands in the night and washed down with liquor. We hope to give our readers other morsels from this book.

—Rev. M. F. M'Kirahan of Topeka, Kansas, writes to the United Presbyterian of the effect of the State meeting held there in September:—"Quite a good many people have come out against Masonry since this convention, and what seems strange, men that uphold Odd-fellowship denounce Masonry."

THE LARGEST LIST

is not so popular as it may be next year when every one hopes for a good corn crop. But friends are doing well with the single renewals and small clubs. For this they have the thanks of their co-workers in the office. The offer of premiums to those sending the largest lists it seems best withdraw. It will no longer appear.

TWO MONTHS FOR 25c.

Trial subscribers can send on 25 cents and the Cynosure will be seut them TWO MONTHS. This is a good offer, as the paper will be increasingly valuable week by week. For good reasons this offer must close December 1st. Then something new will be ready for all our friends who wish to extend their paper.

OUR OPPORTUNITY AT WASHINGTON.

Seven States in their annual conventions have by vote approved the Washington purchase. Men of business capacity who take broad views and deal with the practical in all matters commend and support it. The fraternities and demagogues who gain and hold positions in State and church by subserviency to the lodge have intimated their estimate of its importance. Hon. S. C. Pomeroy, Pres. J. Blanchard, and Rev. H. H. Hinman, all tried and well known friends with large experience in distinctive Christian reform movements, concede that it is the strategetic point of the American party movement. Bro. E. D. Bailey, fresh from a successful grapple with the indifference or active opposition of the conservative element in New England and the lodge power of the whole country, has, after a personal survey of the property and the situation, given it his most unqualified endorsement and thrown his whole soul into energetic efforts to make it a success unprecedented in the record of our work. In fact, there seems to be but one opinion among those best informed, and but one voice respecting what ought to be done. "Hold the fort" and man the post is the verdict of foreseeing men, and then put it in a condition to repel assaults and supply the weapons of aggressive work to be carried on in the face of open hostility or enemies in ambush, is echoed all along the line.

A Central Executive committee, with Hon. S. C. Pomeroy, chairman, E. D. Bailey, secretary, and Milton Ford, treasurer, has been formed at Washington, and the work of organization fairly begun, the initiatory steps for a joint stock company taken, and the wheels set in motion for a vigorous campaign. Eight States have appointed delegates to attend a National Convention at as early a date as practicable in Washington, and a portion of the building not needed at present for Association work rented for fifty dollars per month. Bro. Hinman is working in Pennsylvania, with a prospect of securing a strong convention in Philadelphia. Pres. J. Blanchard is visiting, preaching and lecturing in the cities along the Atlantic seaboard, and will soon report from the Capitol. Bro. Bailey, having set the house at 215 4½ street in order, will take the field and push his special work of organization and securing stock for the publishing company, and the prayers of a host of consecrated men and women are daily ascending for a victory over the combined powers of the "wicked one."

A sentence in Bro. Bailey's letter of last week deserves special attention: "If we get on our feet in time to hold a rousing convention early in the coming year, right here in Washington, it will be a greater event than the Morgan monument and the Thurlow Weed letter." "Get on our feet."

That is the thing exactly. It is the sensible thing to be done. Clear the property of indebtedness; stop the interest aud give a fortress to our principles and a home to our reform where it will "stand fast" as a "light on a hill that cannot be hid." Give us $2,500 more than has already been paid or pledged, and in the month of January, 1884, the last dollar of indebtedness remaining can be wiped out, and the energies of your workers set free to strike out with confidence in bold and forward movements. Shall it be done, and our next annual meeting be a kind of a jubilee in Washington, the head and heart of our great nation? J. P. STODDARD.

—A Northampton, Mass., paper contains the following fine notice of a meeting that is in prospect in that city, referred to in our editorial correspondence:—"Ex-Senator Pomeroy, a native of Southampton, and for some twelve years United States Senator from Kansas, will probably speak in Town hall at no very distant day. President Blanchard of Wheaton College, who preached in the Edwards church Sunday morning, is on his way to Washington, D. C., where he intends to spend the winter in his anti-secret society work. As ex-senator Pomeroy is in hearty sympathy with the society, President Blanchard wrote him requesting him to speak in Town hall, on "The Relations of the Secret Lodge System in Europe and the United States to Christian Civilization." In reply, a letter of November 6 says:—'If the good people of Northampton and the other Hamptons, who have known me in other days, should desire to meet and hear me, I shall be only too glad to come.' "

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

JONATHAN BLANCHARD,
OF ILLINOIS.

For Vice President,

JOHN A. CONANT,
OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

THE LATE ELECTION.

The Christian Instructor contains a few reflections on the rusult of the late election from Bro. H. H. Hinman. The third is that moral issues are the questions of the hour. He says:

Twenty-five years ago the question of freedom vs. slavery demanded recognition, and would not be put down. In vain did the political parties declare it settled, and pledged themselves to "oppose" and "resist" all renewal of the agitation "either in Congress or out of it," but it would come to the front, and had at last to be determined at the point of the bayonet. To-day the question of prohibition vs. intemperance is to the politician quite as unwelcome and quite as persistent. "They cry peace, peace, but there is no peace. One has built a wall, and others have daubed it with untempered mortar," but only that it may fall. As inevitably as the slavery question grew and pressed upon the nation's conscience so will this. There was but one way to settle that, there is no other way to settle this. In either case it was, and is, prohibition of the evil. Already this question has determined the political complexion of Kansas, Iowa and Ohio. It is the controlling power in the great Northwest, and will soon be throughout the nation. The political party that espouses prohibition, though it may be temporarily defeated is on the high road to success, and the schemes of politicians can only delay it.

There are other great questions which are demanding a hearing and must be considered. All of them are included in the case of Christianity vs. Heathenism, or, Does all rightful authority rest on the will of God, or the will of men? But subordinate to this we will have to consider and try the case of Christian morality vs. Mormonism, Christian marriage vs. indiscriminate divorce, the Christian Sabbath vs. unintermitted toil and absolute irreligion, peaceful arbitration vs. war, the Bible in schools vs. purely secular education, national protection to the negro and Indian vs. irresponsible power to afflict and oppress, and last, though not least, Christian candor and republican equality vs. a secret empire founded on favoritism, and responsible only to itself. May the Lord help us decide these cases aright.

THE LODGE runs the caucusses and primaries in all the political organizations here, and manages the affairs of most of the churches. I have been doing what I could locally but desire to do more, and as one-fourth of my time will soon be at my own disposal, I propose spending part of it in the lecture field. Parties desiring lectures in southern Nebraska and northern and central Kansas may write me and I will do the best I can. I have a large experience in this work as many Cynosure readers know.

LITERARY.

Studies upon the Words from the Cross, with an Inquiry Concerning Hades. By Joseph D. Wilson, Rector of St. John's Church, Chicago.

This volume, which comprises seven discourses, following the plan of Stier, W. H. Adams and Nugee, in their works upon the same subject, yet differs in some respects from them all. This plan is developed by our author in an appreciative and eloquent style. The words of Jesus which form the texts for these studies, are familiar: "Father forgive them, for they know not what they do." "To-day shalt thou be with me in Paradise." "Behold thy son....Behold thy mother." "Eli, Eli, lama sabach thani." "I thirst." "It is finished." "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit." An interesting theme is introduced in the second chapter, respecting the condition of departed spirits, especially of the righteous who died before Christ. The author propounded his views in a discourse in Pittsburg in 1873, supposing them new, and wondering that they had not been suggested before. Dr. Craven and Dr. Lange, however, were publishing similar views at the same time, and in 1846 James Gallagher in that original and powerful book, the "Pilgrimage of Adam and David," set forth similar views, but without elaborating them. His argument respecting the appearance of Moses and Elijah was novel and yet reasonable, that they were in a sort the representatives of the multitude of the faithful departed spirits, whose redemption must be incomplete until the great sacrifice was made. Hence, upon the mount of transfiguration, the anxious theme would be the result at Jerusalem. The book is worthy of high commendation for its pious and elevated tone, which will make it au acceptable companion in meditative hours.

The author's use of ritualistic church days mars the book for the general reader, and both the typography and proof-reading are bad, but cannot conceal the real excellencies of the volume. The work is printed in Chicago, but is sold by D. Lathrop and Co., Boston.

—Mr. Spurgeon is the most popular author in Great Britain. A publishing firm devote themselves almost exclusively to his works. Of his "John Ploughman's Talks" they have just issued the three hundred and twentieth thousand. The sequel to that book has had a sale of 100,000 copies in four years. His six-volume work, the "Treasury of David," has sold 20,000. Some of his sermons, such as that on the "Immutability of God," preached in 1853, and "Baptismal Regeneration," preached in 1864, have been selling by tens of thousands every year since they were delivered. A sermon is printed each week, usually the one preached the Sunday previous, and the average sale is about 25,000. Occasionally one appears for which a continuous sale is established, which carries its circulation up to great figures. The publishers report that the sermons, for which there is the greatest demand, are simple evangelical Gospel discourses; his more pretentious efforts obtaining what public favor they receive from the credit of the evangelistic sermons. That fact contains an important suggestion to the ministry in general.—The Interior.

—It needs to be stated with regard to the Bibliotheca Sacra, that the removal of its principal office of publication to Oberlin does not mean that its character is to be changed in any other manner than to strengthen, and make as much more weighty and influential as possible, its influence and power along the old lines on which it has been steadily working for the best part of a half century. We are moved to say this by the fact that, evidently on imperfect information, a late Christian Union intimated that while the quarterly has hitherto represented the Andover opinions, it is hereafter to be "recognized as the organ of Oberlin theology." We are not sure that, for some years past, Oberlin has had any "theology" that has been peculiar to itself, or that has not been shared by other Congregational seminaries; but we are sure—from the highest possible authority—that it has been neither in the hopes or thoughts of our Oberlin friends who now assume special charge of the Bibliotheca to make it an "organ" of Oberlin, or Oberlin thought; or to provincialize its range, or narrow its aim in any way. On the other hand, it is intended, if possible, to nationalize it, and make it the fit and chosen channel through which our own ablest thinkers, east and west, and—to a certain extent as heretofore—the most scholarly men of other denominations, shall bring their best thoughts before the public. It is indeed true that no new departure in theology is likely to find advocacy in its pages, but that is because they will be held true to the Evangelical system, and follow the best traditions of its own past, in the intent to make it an effective instrument in applying Christian learning to the thought and life of our time. The proposed Andover Review, as its prospectus shows, is "to advocate the principles and represent the method and spirit of progressive orthodoxy." Under these circumstances the Bibliotheca Sacra, infused with new life and transplanted with a view to a sturdier growth, makes strong and special appeal to its old constituency as the unchanging friend and advocate of the good old New England theology, while naturally finding a larger circle of constituents among those to whom it must now naturally become better known. Retaining at least ninety per cent. of its old subscribers, it ought at once to double, if not quadruple, its circulation and influence—especially at its reduced price of $3 per year.—Congregationalist.

—It would be refreshing if those time-serving preachers who are just now so enthusiastic over Martin Luther would show some of the great reformer's faith and courage in opposing popular sins. See Matt. 23; 29-33.

THE HOME.

CHRIST'S DOMINION.

From sea to sea
Shall His dominion be,
According to the promise written
And he in scorn and insult smitten
Shall bear the welcome salutations
Of long oppressed and weary nations;
And He shall rule
Star crowned and beautiful.

He shall come down,
As on the grass new mown
The rain descendeth from the spaces,
Renewing all earth's tribes and races
With His sweet life of love and beauty
Through faith in Him and deeds of duty,
And thus shall He
Hold sway from sea to sea.

And He shall live;
And men to Him shall give
Their treasures as they tell the story
Of His renown and rising glory;
And it shall be a rich oblation
To Him, the Lord of our salvation,
Who from His pain
Went up henceforth to reign.

He shall not fail;
His kingdom shall prevail;
His armies come with royal banners,
Oppressions die mid their hosannas;
His chariot is onward speeding
The cry of all His poor ones heeding;
Great Prince ride on!
Till Thou all lands hast won.

MRS. MARTIN'S MISTAKE.

A gentle ripple of admiration passed over the face of the ladies in the village missionary meeting as Mrs. Mayhew sat down. Her essay on "The Macedonian Call from Africa," was felicitous in its adjectives, fresh in its information, almost rapturous in its devout enthusiasm. The society took a pardonable pride in Mrs. Mayhew's talent. Mrs. Brown thought the paper ought to be read at the approaching annual meeting of the "Board." Miss Spencer wished it could be printed for general circulation. As for Mrs. Mayhew, she was appropriately modest; if the paper had any value, it was because her soul had been deeply stirred by the thought of the wide doors that were opening in pagan lands for the heralds of the Gospel. There was nothing that made our petty every-day affairs seem so petty as an adequate conception of the grandeur of this glorious missionary campaign to conquer the heathen world for Christ.

Poor Mrs. Martin, sitting on a back seat in the lecture-room, listened to the essay and the comments that followed with a humbling sense of her own incapacity and short-comings. Mr. Mayhew was absorbed in his banking business; but he took a husbandly satisfaction in his wife's prominence in church activities, and encouraged her to lead the list of the monthly contributors to the support of the society's Bible-reader in Bulgaria. Having no literary gifts himself, it was pleasant to think that he shone with a sort of reflected light in the papers which his wife read, now and then, before the Temperance League and Missionary Society. To pay well for it seemed as much a matter of course as to respond cheerfully to the assessment which his political party made upon him for the honor of nominal membership on the Central Committee. Mr. Martin, on the other hand, was making but a meager living from his shop;—neighbors said he had too many scruples and too little faculty to hold his own with his sharp rivals; and while Mrs. Mayhew gave a dollar a week to the Bible-reader, Mrs. Martin could give but half a dime. Mrs. Mayhew was one of the officers, too, of the State Society; and her name was always to be found in the somewhat effusive newspaper reports of the annual meeting, where her talents found a pleasant field of activity. But Mrs. Martin had never even attended an annual meeting. And while Mrs. Mayhew stirred every one up to new zeal by her fervent essays, a short and stumbling prayer was the most that Mrs. Martin had ever been able to contribute to the exercises of the semi-monthly missionary meeting. It was this comparison of Mrs. Mayhew's abilities and opportunities with her own, as she sat there on the back seat, that made Mrs. Martin feel that any aspirations of her own toward active Christian usefulness were almost absurd. There was nothing elating to Mrs. Martin in the hour that was all elixir to Mrs. Mayhew.

Reaching home, however, Mrs. Mayhew found need of all the tonic there was in the exhilarating atmosphere of the missionary meeting, to prepare her for an unexpected complication in her domestic affairs. The widow Way, whose eldest daughter, Eliza, had been for some time Mrs. Mayhew's efficient right hand in housework, had met with a serious hurt. Eliza had been sent for at once, as the only one who could be looked to, to stand in the wide gap of work and care. She was waiting, her eyes red with weeping, for Mrs. Mayhew's permission to go.

Mrs. Mayhew was "tried." Dr. Traley, the eloquent missionary from India, was to occupy their pulpit the next Sabbath, and she had planned to detain him for a select tea-party at her house on Monday evening. Young Campbell's wife was only too glad to come over for a day's work any time, it is true; but no one rose to the supreme demands of Mrs. Mayhew's ideal for such an occasion as Eliza did. She felt as if Mrs. Way's accident was little better than a deliberate disregard of her comfort. In her momentary impatience she told Eliza that she should think the boys could wait on her mother and do the housework—anyhow she didn't see how she could spare her now; but if Eliza was determined to go, she could not keep her place open for her, if Mary Gowan, who was looking for work last week, chose to take it.

Poor Eliza! this was the last straw. Her heart ached for the hard-worked mother, lying at home in painful helplessness. She must go to her, of course. But the thought of loosing her own wages for several weeks was none the less a trial to her; for Eliza was studiously saving every penny she could earn, and carrying a light heart under all the exactions of Mrs. Mayhew's service, since John, the hard working, manly carpenter, who had loved her so long, was sure that his little cottage would be ready for a housekeeper next year. How many times she had spent, in imagination, every dollar of her next twelve months' wages how well she knew just how far it would all go in house-furnishing! And now to lose not only her wages for some weeks to come, as she must at the best, but to lose her situation altogether, was doubly hard. She choked down, though, the appeal that it was in heart to make that the place might somehow be reserved a little while for her. Long as she had lived with Mrs. Mayhew, and liberal as her wages had been, she had never felt encouraged to carry to her any of her woman confidences, and had never looked to her for counsel or sympathy in her trouble. Mrs. Mayhew was not stony-hearted; but she was too busy in broader fields of benevolence to explore the lives that were lived in her kitchen.

So with what courage and cheer she could rally from her own buffeted heart, Eliza went back to the fatherless family,—to nurse the dispirited mother; to care for the younger brothers, who were none the more tractable that they had not been under a father's eye for several years; to do the washing which had so long been the chief reliance for the support of the family. But the hill was very steep, and her load was very heavy. She chafed sorely, sometimes, under her burden. She cried herself to sleep at night, and started in the morning with shivering consciousness of the dread presence of trouble, even before she had waked enough to define it in her thought. Mrs. Mayhew met her one day on the street. "Good morning, Eliza," she said. "Is your father about well? No, it was your mother that was hurt, wasn't it?" And then, without waiting for an answer, she added the hope that Eliza would return to her old place soon, for Mary Gowan wasn't suiting her very well—and then went on her way. For some reason Mrs. Mayhew's well-meant words, even when coupled with the promise of her old situation again, carried no special comfort in them. They did not come from the deep place in one heart, and they could not find the deep place in the other.

But there was one woman whose commonplace, neighborly kindness was to Eliza like cold water to a thirsty soul. Mrs. Martin lived on the other side of the town, but heard of Mrs. Way's accident from the doctor as he was driving by the next day, the fact being that the kind-hearted physician really drove down there for the sake of telling her. She came over that afternoon—some cookies in her pocket for the children—to cheer up the sufferer, and lend a hand for an hour in any service she could render. She had no lack of work, good woman, at home; but she found time to drop in one day and piece down a pair of trowsers for little Bennie; to come another and cut out the new coat that was the despair of Eliza's small skill at tailoring; to send one of her children over occasionally with a last week's paper borrowed of a neighbor; to sit now and then in the early evening for awhile by the bed-ridden woman, so that Eliza could have an airing for an hour or two in a quiet walk with the young carpenter.

It was worth everything to Eliza to have such a sympathetic, sister-like friend with whom she could talk over her household perplexities, to whom she could confide all the little precious nothings of her affairs, on whose shoulder she could cry a little when things had gone harder with her than usual. And it was worth more to her than she knew till years afterward to get so near a Christian woman's heart, and see, underneath all mere professions, its generous purpose of personal helpfulness, and its loving, joyful, faithfulness to humble, every-day ministries. She had never before seen just that side of the religious life, in just that setting. It touched her heart and won her into something of its own beautiful likeness. From it came, by-and-by, a family altar in the carpenter's cottage, and a family life that shed gracious influences through the community. Even the rattle-headed, fatherless little boys, who seemed to shed the religious appeals and rebukes of other people with such impartial nonchalance, were wound about with some subtle influence from this friend in family need who never once in set fashion "talked religion" to them, and years afterward they recognized its stimulus and restraint.

But of this Mrs. Martin suspected nothing. Year by year she never read the reports of the "annual meeting" without a little pang from the thought that her usefulness was so small as compared with Mrs. Mayhew's. Perhaps she is not the only humble soul, in these days of "Christian activities," that makes a similar mistake.—Christian Weekly.

FAITH HEALING.

BY E. E. BEATY.

I wish through the Cynosure to add my testimony to that of others who have been healed of disease by the prayer of faith. I desire that the afflicted may learn by a blest experience that Jesus not only "receiveth sinners" still, and heals their sin sick souls, but that he cures all manner of physical maladies, whenever faith in his name is appropriated for such cure. For several years I was afflicted with a complication of chronic diseases and for more than a year previous to my cure, my condition seemed to be growing more critical from day to day and week to week, until my friends regarded it as hopeless. I took medicine from physicians besides using a variety of patent drugs but only experienced temporary relief. It seemed impossible for me to live without taking medicine and yet such was its effect upon some of my ailments that it appeared equally impossible for me to live if I continued its use. But this my extremity was God's opportunity. I was brought to see that unless he interposed in my behalf there was no help for me. I had heard of a number of persons being healed of diseases in answer to prayer, and knowing that such cures are authorized by Scripture, I after repeated efforts was enabled to trust in Jesus as my physician to heal me of my diseases, and according to my faith it was done; yes, I was in a moment restored to my usual health, and at once left off taking medicine, although up to that time I had taken it day and night. My strength which had been failing for months past was restored so I could walk abroad and when at home attend to my household labors and with as much ease and comfort as though I had never been sick. But this marvelous and I may say miraculous change in my physical condition was not all that I received of the Divine favor in answer to believing prayer. My soul was cleansed anew in blood divine from the last remains of moral defilement, and though for thirty years I had been given up to God, preferring his service to my ordinary meat and drink, in that have I experienced an abandonment and crucifixion of self unknown to me before. To say I was happy conveys but a faint idea of what I experienced on coming forth out of the crucible where I had endured so much of anguish, mental as well as physical. The billows had gone over me and storms of temptation blowing a dreadful hurricane for many weary months, but the heavenly calm that followed recompensed me a thousand fold for all I had suffered. There was soul rest, the sweetest I ever knew, and quiet humble trust in my adorable Redeemer's helping power. This heavenly calm was followed by a baptism of love and power.

"The song of thanksgiving I raised,
The Lord my Redeemer I praised,
I was at his mercy amazed
When the Comforter came."

More than two years have passed since this most memorable event of my life, and Christ is still my physician and perfect Saviour. My health is excellent for one of my age. I take no medicine—do not need any, for Jesus saves me daily and hourly in body and spirit. I am still rejoicing in his love and unbounded goodness. My peace is as the river. Day and night he abides with me and his presence makes my paradise. The clouds of earth now have a silver lining, for all is bright and joyous and beautiful in Beulah land.

THE SAFEST WAY.

"You never signed the pledge, did you, Uncle John?"

Uncle John was Harry's ideal of a great and noble man. And it was not a mistaken ideal. Uncle John's hair was white with the passing of over eighty winters, but his eye was bright, his step firm, and his voice earnest and kindly as ever. His life had been one of uprightness as well as one of what the world calls success.

"I never signed a pledge on my own account; I presume I have signed several as an example or aid to others," replied Uncle John.

"Casper Firmstone is all the time teasing me to sign," said Harry; "but I know I can drink a gill of cider and not want any more, or let it alone if I do want it. And I can take one sip of the best wine Mr. Fraser has and not take the second. So I don't see any use in hampering a fellow with a piece of paper."

"Don't be too sure about what you can do, Harry. I've seen a good many 'sure' people in my life, as well as a good many 'cautious' people, and I've always noticed in the long run that the cautious people were the safest. I'll tell you where I first learned that lesson, if you'd like to know."

"I should," said Harry, always ready at the first hint of a story.

"When I was a boy, a good deal smaller than you, I lived in a small town in Vermont. There was a large creek by the village, and at a place called 'The Mills' there was a beautiful fall of water, of ten or twelve feet, pitching off from an even-edged, flat rock. Reaching quite across the creek, a distance of twenty feet, over this fall of water, was a bridge spanning the stream.

"The sides of this bridge were boarded up some four feet high. These side-pieces were capped by a flat railing of boards of from four to six inches wide. Some of the more daring school-children used to walk on this narrow capping-board when crossing the bridge, and more than one fall and serious injury happened there.

"There was one thing that saved me from getting hurt or killed by the dangerous crossing. You would like to know what it was? The easiest thing in the world. It happened from the small circumstance that I never had either the courage or disposition to walk there at all! In other words, I wasn't 'sure' of my head, and I was sure on the broad, open bridge.

"I can think of a great many places that boys and men try to pass safely which are quite as dangerous, and where multitudes fall and ruin themselves, and perhaps perish, both body and soul, forever. The safest way is never to take the first step on a dangerous path."—Youths' Temperance Banner.

WHAT ARE YOU GOOD FOR?

"Children," said Mr. Brown, "what is my watch good for?"

"To keep time," the children answered.

"But suppose it can't be made to keep time, what is it good for?"

"It is good for nothing," they replied.

"And what is this pencil for?"

"To mark with," said the children.

"But suppose it has no lead, and will not mark, what is it good for?"

"Good for nothing."

"Well," said Mr. Brown, "what is the use of my knife?"

"To cut," answered the little ones.

"Suppose it has no blade," he asked again, "then what is the knife good for?"

"Good for nothing."

"Tell me now," said Mr. Brown, "what is a boy or girl good for? What is the chief end of man?"

"Oh, that's catechism," cried Willie Brown. "To glorify God, and to enjoy him forever."

"Very well; if a boy or girl does not do what he or she is made for, what is he or she good for?"

And the children all answered, without seeming to think how it would sound, "Good for nothing."

Dear boys and girls, if you are not seeking "to glorify God and to enjoy him forever," is it not just as if you were good for nothing?—The Christian.

ONE STEP AT A TIME.

George had almost decided to become a Christian. One doubt held him back.

"How can I know," he said to himself, "that even if I do begin a religious life, I shall continue faithful, and finally reach heaven?"

He wanted to see the whole way there before taking the first step. While in this state of indecision and unhappiness, he one evening sought the house of his favorite professor and they talked for several hours on the all-absorbing topic. But the conversation ended without dispelling his fears, or bringing him any nearer the point of decision.

When he was about to go home the professor accompanied him to the door, and observing how dark the night was, prepared a lantern, and handing it to his young friend, said:

"George, this little light will not show you the whole way to your room, but only one step at any time; but take that step, and you will reach your home in safety."

It proved the word in season. As George walked securely along in the path brightened by the little lantern, the truth flashed through his mind, dispelling the last shadow of doubt.

"Why can I not trust my Heavenly Father," he said to himself, "even if I can't see my way clear to the end, if he gives me light to take one step? I will trust him; I do trust him."

He could hardly wait till he reached his room, to fall on his knees and thank God for the peace and joy that filled his soul.

Early the next morning the professor was summoned to the door. There he found George. With beaming face he looked up to his teacher, and as he handed him the lantern, said significantly:

"Doctor, your little lamp lighted me all the way home last night, one step at a time."—American Temperance Union.

THE FAITHFUL ELEPHANT.

There is a beautiful story told of an old elephant who was engaged in battle on the plains of India. He was a standard-bearer, and carried on his huge back the royal ensign, the rallying-point of the Poonah host. At the beginning of the fight he lost his master. The mahout, or driver, had just given him the word to halt, when he received a fatal wound and fell to the ground, where he lay with a heap of slain. The obedient elephant stood still while the battle closed round him and the standard he carried. He never stirred a foot, refusing either to advance or retire, as the conflict became hotter and fiercer until the Mahrattas, seeing the standard flying steadily in its place, refused to believe that they were being beaten, and rallied again and again around the colors. And all this while, amid the din of battle, the patient animal stood straining its ears to catch the sound of that voice it would never hear again.

At length the tide of the conquest left the field deserted. Mahrattas swept on in pursuit of the flying foe; but the elephant, like a rock, stood there with the dead and dying around, and the ensign waving in its place. For three days and nights it remained where its master had given the command to halt. Neither bribes nor threats could move it. Then they sent to a village one hundred miles away, and brought the mahout's little son. The noble animal seemed then to remember how its driver had sometimes given his authority to his little child, and immediately, with all its shattered trappings clanging as he went, paced slowly and quietly away.

A WORD OF COMFORT FOR POOR BOYS.—"A rich man," said Mr. John C. Dodge at a meeting of the alumni of Bowdoin College, "cannot give his son the often great advantages of poverty." One-half the rich nobodies of the present day would be notable somebodies if they had only been obliged to black their own boots when boys, or chop the wood which cooks their breakfast.

TEMPERANCE.

BEER.

Beer is advocated as a temperance drink. A recent volume dedicated to the "Brewers of the United States, the promoters of the great and glorious cause of genuine temperance," urges beer against whiskey. In a recent Brewer's Congress, a "Brewer's Academy," to teach the "Science of Brewing," was advocated. They take beer into politics, and demand the protection of legislatures.

Beer contains less alcohol than whiskey, but is drank for its alcohol. Take that out, and no one would touch the dirty, insipid stuff.

In his preface to Dr. B. W. Richardson's "Cantor Lectures on Alcohol," Dr. Willard Parker writes: "Alcohol has no place in the healthy system, but is an irritant poison, producing a diseased condition of body and mind."

The lager beer sold in this country contains from 4½ to 6 per cent of alcohol, generally about 5½.

Horace Greeley said: "They greatly mistake who hope to live longer by drinking wines or malt liquors than they would expect to if addicted instead to distilled spirits. True, there is less alcohol, but the same quantity will not content them. It was enough to start the blood into a gallop yesterday, but falls short to-day, and will not begin to do to-morrow."

The brewers boast of the large tax paid by them to the government. This is almost funny. Do they pay anything? Is it not paid by the drinkers, generally poor men, and who for every dollar thus paid in taxes, suffer a loss of ten dollars in health and productive industry?

Dr. Drysdale, the senior physician of the London Metropolitan Free Hospital says: "I declare to you that the amount of gout, urinary and lung diseases I have seen in London, attributable to beer alone, is quite distressing.

The distinguished Sir Henry Thompson, in a letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury, writes: "I have no hesitation in attributing a very large proportion of some of the most painful and dangerous maladies which come under my notice, to the ordinary use of beer taken in quantities conventionally deemed moderate."

Judge Pitman, of Massachusetts, in reviewing the beer legislation of that State, mentions that "In 1872, after eight months of free beer, there was an increase of 68 per cent in the aggregate of crime, and of over 120 per cent in cases of drunkenness."

The reason that beer is relatively more dangerous than stronger liquors as a promoter of crime, is given by the distinguished Dr. B. W. Richardson, who, in describing the preliminary stages of intoxication, says: "The cerebral centers become influenced, they are reduced in power, and the controlling influences of will and judgment are lost. As these centers are unbalanced and thrown into chaos, the rational part of man gives way before the emotional or organic part. The reason is now off duty, or fooling with duty, and all the more animal instincts are laid atrociously bare."

The official inquiry instituted by the "Lower House of Convocation of the Province of Canterbury," brought thousands of answers from the clergy, judges, magistrates, prison chaplains and others. The following brief extracts are samples of these replies:

Beer shops are the curse of the country.
The beer-houses are a social pest.
An unmitigated nuisance.
I would rather see a dozen public houses (liquor-shops) than one beer-house.
The beer-houses are a frightful source of intemperance.
The abolition of beer-houses would be a boon to the working man.
Such houses are the hot-bed and harbor for every crime.
Abolish all beer-houses.

My friend, Dr. M. L. Holbrook, after a month's jury service in one of the criminal courts of this city, reports: "We had five or six murderers on trial, and nearly all had been drinking what a German would call a moderate amount of lager beer. The most painful case was that of a boy seventeen years old who had killed a comrade while under the influence of lager beer."

Dr. Holbrook adds: "Judging from my observation, lager beer is quite as likely to generate murder and other crimes as the stronger liquors."

The Boston Congregationalist says: "We know a man who for twelve years has never used any liquor save beer. He comes home from his elegant store, behind his handsome pair of horses, and makes his home a terror. He runs after his wife with an axe, and makes a beast of himself in a thousand ways." It adds also: "We know another man who uses only beer, who has beaten his wife so as to make her helpless for days, was dead drunk on beer when the neighbors helped bury his infant son, and has repeatedly knocked down and beaten his girl of eight and boy of five."

Recorder Hill, of Birmingham, England, voiced the opinion of many magistrates when he said: "The establishment of the beer-shop, which was to check these evils, (arising from the sale of distilled liquors), is inoperative to that end, and has introduced mischief of its own, and indeed is universally denounced as a curse upon the land."

G. F. Drury, Esq., magistrate, Shotover Park, Oxon, said: "The Beer Bill has done more to brutalize the English laborer, and take him from his family and fireside into the worst associations, than almost any measure that could have been devised. It has furnished victims for the jails, the hulks and the gallows, and has frightfully extended the evils of pauperism and moral debasement."

Our German fellow-citizens are our most valuable immigrants. They are a sturdy, thrifty, self-poised race, and should prove the stronghold of democratic institutions in America. Without their stupefying, brutalizing beer what could they not achieve!

The distended stomach of the devotee of lager beer, his bloated, turgid cheeks, and blood-shot eyes, his slow, uncertain movements and dull, guttural voice, make those of us whose prayers are full of the future of country, lose heart and hope. Lager beer has become a cloud darkening the bright blue of our beautiful sky.—Dio Lewis's Monthly.

A DESPERATE PLEDGE.

Men who have so weakened their will, by indulgence in drink, that they cannot be certain of their own promises, might do worse than to call in the aid of their wives to strengthen their feeble resolution. We find noted in a foreign journal an instance in which a woman of Pesth, Hungary, has endeavored to exercise more than "local control" over her worser half in the matter of his drinking habits. In a newspaper of that city, there recently appeared an advertisement which excites our commendation as well as our wonder.

It bears the heading, "This is printed to please my wife," and goes on thus: "I, the undersigned, declare that in future I will never set foot in a cafe, wine shop or beer house, and I beg my friends or acquaintances never to invite me to frequent these places of perdition. In token of my good faith and earnest resolution," continues the advertiser, "I authorize any one who may meet with me in any of the establishments alluded to, to claim a fine of fifty florins, which shall be handed over to some charitable institution."

The advertisement is duly signed by the husband, who evidently is not wanting in a certain sort of courage. He is ready to run the risk of being derided as a henpecked husband, rather than the peril of falling into the drunkard's folly again. The man's appeal to his comrades not to entice him to wrong-doing, and his declaration that a self-imposed fine is to be exacted for every backward slip, have a deep pathos which not every one will appreciate. And we heartily wish that the wavering purpose of the repentant drunkard, could be more frequently confirmed by the vicarious substitution of a woman's strength of will.—Union Signal.

THE CHURCHES.

—Dr. S. Collins, president of the National Convention of the N. C. A. is now residing at Cedarville, Ohio, and supplying the pulpit of the United Presbyterian church of Clifton.

—The committee in charge of the Saturday noon meeting at Farwell Hall in this city, have unanimously agreed to request Pres. C. A. Blanchard to continue to speak on the S. S. Lesson during the remainder of the year. The audiences and the interest in these meetings increases weekly.

—Rev. C. W. Frink, for many years a preacher in the Free Methodist church, died at South Elgin, Ill., last week. On account of poor health he was placed on the retired list last year, after twenty years of earnest and effective service for Christ in the Northwestern States.

—Rev. Charles H. Hobart of the First Baptist church of Aurora, Ill., whose Thanksgiving day sermon last year was a memorable one, was married on the 30th ult. to Miss Nellie Hughes, of the same city.

—Bro. H. M. Bissell, missionary of the American Board in Guadalajara, Mexico, in a brief letter dated Oct. 30, writes: "These are the early days with our mission, but we have reason to be encouraged by the attendance on our serviees (though not large), by the opportunity of giving instruction to some, and by the first opening for work outside the city. The 'elcctric light' is to be turned on here this week, but the hourly need is the Light of infinitely greater constancy and power."

—A call has been sent to the Rev. Dr. Campbell, of Collingwood, Canada, to come and labor among the Scottish Highlanders of Chicago. It is estimated that there are 3,000 Highlanders in the city, many of whom do not attend a house of worship. It is the object to cstablish missions in different parts of the city and hold meetings during the week, and on Sunday afternoons hold services in a central location. Dr. Campbell expects to begin work about New Year's.

—The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of this city opened the Bethesda Temperanee and Medical Mission last week, Mrs. T. B. Carse presiding at the meeting. Dr. W. T. Meloy assisted in the exercises and Pres. C. A. Blanchard made the address of the evening.

—The Wesleyan General Conference beside its steadfast action against secret societies, voted also against employing unconverted teachers in Sabbath-school work, against Sabbath-school picnics, Christmas trees, and ordaining any one to the Gospel ministry who uses tobacco.

—Rev. M. S. Drury, after working a number of years as the general agent and treasurer of Western College, Toledo, Iowa, has again entered the pastoral field, being appointed to the Waterloo circuit at the late session of his conference.

—Rev. Wm. Dillon, who has served one or two years as State lecturer against secret societies, lately delivered a lecture against infidelity at West Milton, O. Bro. Dillon is a clear thinker and logical reasoner, and his lectures and public discussions have won him an enviable reputation.

—Rev. E. W. Bruce of Michigan, has been spending a short time in Syracuse, since the meeting of the Wesleyan General Conference. He preached every evening, and God blessed the word in the conversion of a number. The meetings are to be continued.

—The Wesleyan says: "Rev. E. I. Grinnell, of Iowa, and his brother, O. S., of Michigan, have been visiting, since the close of the General Conference, the scenes of their childhood in St. Lawrence and Franklin counties, N. Y. Their father was a pioneer Wesleyan minister in those counties, and was highly esteemed for his able and earnest devotion to the principles of reform which distinguish us as a people.

—Rev. Wm. Johnston, of College Springs, Iowa, was delegated to represent the United Presbyterian General Assembly in the Associate Reformed Synod of the South. The latter body passed the following which looks to a closer union of several denominations: "Whereas, There are in the United States of America several denominations of Christians who hold the same doctrinal symbols, and who use exclusively, in the public and private worship of God, the inspired Psalms of the Bible; therefore, "Resolved, That this Synod, at this meeting, appoint a committee to address a letter to the General Assembly of the United Presbyterian church, to the Synod of the Associate Reformed church, to the Synods of both branches of the Reformed Presbyterian church, recognizing the general unity of these various branches of the Christian church with this Synod, and expressing our anxious desire that the breaches which exist between these branches of the church may soon be healed; and that this great and good end may be effected; suggesting the holding of a conference of delegates appointed by all the Psalm-singing churches in the United States of America."

—A colporteur has made a trip to Khartoun, which is far up the Nile, and found there ready purchasers for his entire stock of nearly five hundred Bibles. It was, however, a rather perilous journey, as the False Prophet's forces were committing havoc in Soudan.

—The latest news from the Livingstonia Mission in South Africa is that the whole of the New Testament has been translated into the language of the Chinyanja, and that the sections of the steam launch of the London Missionary Society have arrived at the head of Lake Nyassa.

—Fifty conversions among the native Japanese resulted from revival services recently held in connection with services held at the Methodist Episcopal church at Nagaski. The Rev. C. S. Long writes: "I have never witnessed anything even at home more marvellous than the revival now in progress here."

—The International Bible Lesson Committee met at Nashville, Tenn., October 30, to remain in session for several days in order to prepare the International Bible Lessons for the year of 1885; when the committee has completed its work the programme of lessons will be forwarded to England for inspection by the European Committee, and if endorsed by them will be returned and adapted for use in the Sunday-schools of this country.

—The ground will be broken in a short time on the north side of Thirty-second street, near Eighth avenue, New York, for a church building for the congregation of the Rev. Alfred B. Simpson, the evangelist; the building will cost about $20,000. Dr. Simpson works without any salary, depending entirely upon voluntary contributions, and all branches of the church work are supported in the same way. The church has connected with it a training-school for missionaries and others who wish to engage in the work of the church. The services are held at present in the Grand Opera House, and are attended by about seven or eight hundred persons. It is Mr. Simpson's desire to build up here a work similar to that of Mr. Spurgeon in London.

—The receipts of the American Missionary Association for the financial year just ended were $312,567.29, an increase of $14,982.84 over the previous year. Of the total amount $126,366.73 was from legacies, the income from this source being unusually large. The payments for the year, less a balance in hand at the beginning of the year, were $312,018.97, and the balance now in hand is $548.32. Respecting the work in Africa it is stated that the Avery Fund and the John Brown steamer have been transferred for five years to the United Brethren, who have a mission, Shengay, adjoining Mendi. The Arthington mission and fund have been offered to the United Presbyterians, who have a successful mission in Egypt.

"I know of only one family in the whole State of Kentucky which observes family prayers," said Rev. A. A. Myers at the meeting of the American Missionary Association. At one time when he asked a group of 150 children about family worship in their homes only two raised their hands as a sign of its observance, and one of these was a Roman Catholic.

—It is a good commentary on the state of feeling as to the color line in the blue grass country of Kentucky that the leading churches in that region are taking out the galleries in their houses of worship, which have been kept exclusively for the colored people, and allowing them to mingle freely with the whites in the Lord's house.

—As a proof that the wealth of the nation is not mainly in the hands of ungodly persons, Rev. D. O. Mears, D.D., stated that in the city of Worcester 280 out of 322 of its heaviest tax payers were known to be men of church-going habits; and only two directors of the eleven banks in the city openly disregard the claims of the Christian religion.

—The Hungarians alone, though numbering fully six thousand in the city of New York, and not less than a hundred thousand throughout the country, have no American publication in their mother tongue. It is to supply this want that a weekly publication, devoted exclusively to their interests, is proposed. It will be non-political and non-sectarian, but it will be under sound Protestant Christian influence.

—Whilst New York has been doubling in population, Universalist churches have been losing ground. Six societies were organized since the first was formed in 1829, but there are now, as we learn from the Evangelist, only four churches and one mission. Brooklyn had three Universalist churches fifteen years ago, and now it has only two, though the city has greatly increased in population. Unitarianism does not flourish in either city, though it may have sapped the faith of a minister or two of so-called orthodox churches.

—The Protestant Episcopal Convention meeting in Philadelphia continued its session four weeks. The principal work done was the revision of their prayer book, in which several changes were passed upon and referred to the next convention, which meets in three years. A re-examination of their rules in reference to marriage and divorce, looking to more care in guarding against divorces, and more liberty in degrees of consanguinity within which marriages may take place; and the discussion of a motion to strike out "Protestant Episcopal," and insert "Holy Catholic in the title of the prayer book, which resolution was lost by a vote of 73 yeas, against 170 nays. Nothing was done that will conciliate the Reformed Episcopalians and reunite these bodies.

CONVERTED CATHOLIC PRIESTS.—James A. O'Connor, pastor of the Reformed Catholic church, New York, writes to the New York Witness concerning this interesting class of converts, and the difficulty of providing for them such occupation as will give them support: "Two Roman Catholic priests have applied to me for admission to our ranks during the present month, and the question again recurs, What is to be done with those priests? I shall care for them, as I have done for others, the best I can; but as I have neither houses nor lands, nor anything of this world's wealth, not knowing from day to day where to turn for food and raiment, I am not able to do much. Ever since I came to New York to enter on this work I have welcomed priests and students from Rome, and, thanks be to God, none of those who applied to me were turned away. But what a strain it has been on me only those know who saw how we managed to get on. It will be said, Why do not those priests apply to some of the rich denominations, and they could be prepared for work and have pastoral charges assigned to them? Well, one of the most prominent clergymen in this city told me that some years ago two priests called on him to say that they desired to leave the Roman Catholic church and join his Protestant church. What did he do?—help them all in his power and bid them welcome? No, sir; he told me he gave them a letter to Cardinal McCloskey, asking him to see after them, and that by kind treatment they might do some good in the 'old church.' In a word, that minister, who has a dozen millionaires in his congregation, sent back those priests to lives of hypocrisy."

CHEAP MASONRY.—Freemasonry is getting to be quite cheap in Goshen. Within a short time past, four tired Masons gave it away on the streets, in Goshen, declaring that they had enough of the swindle; also declaring that it had few, if any, secrets to keep; that they had learned that Masons were being fooled in trying to keep secrets that almost everybody outside of the lodges were becoming familiar with, even many being better posted in the general history and character of Masonry than lodge members themselves.—The Rescue, Goshen, Ind.

THE

CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION

FARM NOTES.

TREE SEEDS, CUTTINGS AND TIMBER.

The months of October and November are the most favorable for securing most varieties of tree seeds. Walnuts, butternuts, hickory, chestnuts, acorns, etc., germinate more readily if not allowed to dry much. They may be planted as soon as gathered—may be buried or put into sand. All of them need freezing to open the shells. A small per cent of these nuts will germinate after being dried, if not dried too much. At this time of year they may be soaked, mixed with earth, and put out to freeze.

Mountain ash, white ash, box-elder and sugar-maple seed should be kept in earth during the winter where it is not warm enough to mould. Freezing will not injure them. Catalpa seed should be gathered in the fall and put in a dry, cool place until spring. When planted they will germinate as readily as beans.

It is an established fact that the hardy catalpa is one of our most important timber trees. It is a very rapid grower, and the wood is remarkably durable, probably the most durable we can grow. It is also a beautiful ornamental tree, with large, dark green foliage, having a tropical appearance, and a profusion of showy, fragrant blossoms. It yields seed when quite young, so that with a little care it may soon be extensively grown. I will give away a few hundred trees, one or two in a place, the coming spring. The box-elder deserves more extensive planting as an ornamental shade tree. When dug from the forests or bottom lands it is generally ill-shaped and rough, but when grown from the seed and transplanted when small and kept properly trimmed, it is almost equal to a hard maple in beauty. It can be trimmed in shape to suit, and its heavy, dark green foliage is always attractive. As a timber tree it is almost equal to the soft maple in growth and quality, while it is said to surpass the hard maple for sugar.

The soft maple is becoming an intolerable nuisance on account of its being so infested with worms. Soft maple groves in our section were generally stripped of their leaves the past summer, and the loathsome green worms, from one to two inches long, were crawling in every direction. I first noticed their depredations in Illinois fourteen years ago, and they seem to be rapidly spreading over the West. Many will cease to plant the soft maple on this account.

Scrofula, eruptions, dandruff and tan removed by Dr. Benson's Skin Cure. A great success.

Shaky, scrawny, diseased persons find a friend in Samaritan Nervine. $1.50 of druggists.

THE PUREST IS THE BEST.

In the selection of SUNDAY-SCHOOL PAPERS, the most important point to be considered is the moral tone of the subject matter. If this is of a questionable character, the papers should be shunned, no matter how large, how attractive, or how low the price. Such papers are

COSTLY AT ANY PRICE.

The country is being flooded with S. S. literature that is largely composed of what may be properly termed "RELIGIOUS FICTION," the tendency of which is to create a distaste for sound reading and foster an appetite for fiction of a more deleterious character.

The engravings of these papers are equally objectionable. In many cases a lady or girl dressed in the height of fashion is made the HEROINE OF A STORY, thus putting the highest sanction to extravagance and pride. With such instructors in our Sunday-schools we cannot expect the children to grow up with a love for sound literature and with correct ideas of Christian propriety. With a view of supplying S. S. papers, of a pure and elevating character, the publishers are issuing

FOUR MONTHLY PAPERS.

They are FREE FROM FICTION, and the cuts are chosen with great care. While they are thus carefully edited, they are not lacking in attractiveness. They are well printed on beautiful tinted paper. The children are delighted with them. The very low price at which this line of S. S. papers is issued, places them within the reach of even schools of limited means

IN BRIEF.

"There is no lead pencil," boldly exclaims a writer in the Scientific American, "and there has been none for fifty years past." The name of lead pencil came from the old notion that the products of the Cumberland mines, England, were lead, instead of being plumbago or graphite, a carbonate of iron, capable of leaving a lead-colored mark.

On Nov. 20. a wedding of giants will take place at the museum in Pittsburgh. The contracting parties are Patriek O'Brien, aged 29 years, standing seven feet eleven inches, and weighing 360 pounds, and Miss Annie Druz, of almost equal proportions. The parties first met two months ago at a Cincinnati museum.

Joseph Foster, who recently celebrated at Cairo the seventy-fifth anniversary of his marriage, is 99 years and 7 months old, and is now in failing health. He was born in Westerlo, Albany county. His wife is still living, and 95 years old May 1. Her maiden name was Elinor Ornhout, and she was born in the same town as her husband. He came to Greene county in 1823. He enlisted in the war of 1812, and came up the Hudson on the first steamboat that plied on the river. He landed at Athens with troops that had been discharged, and went from there to Westerlo on foot. The couple were married when he was 24 years old and she 19 years old. The family is remarkable for longevity. Joseph's father came to this country from Holland, and died in Pennsylvania at the age of 100 years, and Mrs. Foster's mother lived to be nearly 100 years old. Mrs. Foster has lost her reason. This, with one exception, is the only couple in the United States that has lived together seventy-five years.—Troy Times.

The Geodetic Congress, which is now being held in Rome, is likely to result in a decision of substantial commercial importance. When the congress was established a few years ago its object was a mere map-making one, but since then it has turned its attention to a variety of astronomical and mathematical questions. The object of the present sitting is to settle a common first meridian and, consequently, to give the world a universal hour. At present, as everybody knows, there is a difference of some hours between the times of most European countries. When it is 11 o'clock at night in Paris it is 1:15 in the morning at Moscow, 6:30 at Pekin, and 8:30 at Melbourne. When it is 1 in the morning in Paris it is only 8 o'clock the night before in New York, and 5 in the afternoon at San Francisco. It is clear that much confusion would be obviated if it were always the same time everywhere. It is almost a foregone conclusion that the congress will adopt the meridian of Greenwich, and it was this probability which alone moved the British authorities to send a representative. It is, we believe, arranged that the governments concerned will at once give effect to the settlement by the congress of a common hour.—Pall Mall Gazette.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary, the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. DR. JOHN BULL'S

Smith's Tonic Syrup

FEVER and AGUE

Or CHILLS and FEVER.

AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamp on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN J. SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, of Louisville, Ky. Examine well the label on each bottle. If my private stamp is not on each bottle do not purchase, or you will be deceived.

NIGHTS IN A BAR-ROOM

T. S Arthur's great temperance book, complete and illustrated. By mail, 5c each; 50c per doz. By express, $3.50 per 100.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC THE GREAT SOURCE OF CRIME.

Leaves from the diary of an old lawyer.—By Hon. A. B Richmond, author of "Court and Prison," etc. A book of intense interest, rivaling the famous "Diary of a Physician," and, in its truthful, terrible pictures of the power and crime of intemperance, excelling the well-known "Ten Nights in a Bar-room." The temperance issue of the present time is, Shall prohibition be partial or entire? Shall the branches of the death-bearing tree be pruned and trimmed, or shall the tree itself be cut down and its stump be torn up by the roots? The answer of "Leaves from the Diary" is, "Cut down the tree, tear up the roots, leave not a shoot or shred behind." It is certainly a very strong and eloquent volume Complete edition on fine, heavy paper, with colored lithograph of Sewall's stomach plates By mail, 30c each, $3 per doz. By express, $20 per 100. Abridged edition, by mail, 15c; $1.25 per doz. By express, $9 per 100.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC AND THE SOBER CITIZEN.

An able and telling work, by Rev. J H. Sherman which brings out the effects of the liquor traffic in a new light. The following are some of the commendations of the first edition.

"The author drives the nails of conviction through and clinches them."—N Y Christian Advocate.

"Speakers and workers in the temperance field will find valuable aid in this pamphlet. It is crowded with convincing facts"—Zion's Herald

"One of the ablest reviews of the drink curse ever issued from the press."—The Morning and Day of Reform.

"The arguments are put in telling form"—Judge Pittman.

New revised and enlarged edition. By mail, 10c each, $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

DRINKS FROM DRUGS.

A startling exposure of the liquor traffic, by El. Johnson. A book that cannot fail to arouse the American people to the gigantic swindle now being perpetrated. The writer was offered $10,000 by a leading brewer to keep still Liquor not only doctored, but made entirely from drugs Extracts from a whole library of secret books, giving receipts for making and doctoring; advertisements of essences, facsimiles of labels, engravings, etc. etc. Claret, port, sherry, champagne, whisky, brandy, gin, rum, etc., all out of one barrel, and made at less than 25 cents a quart. Wine that never saw grape juice; cider that never saw apples; beer factories in place of breweries, fine cream ale without barley or brewing; whisky from arsenic; millions of gallons of liquor that pays no revenue tax. The farmer's corn and barley "all in your eye." A wholesale liquor store in a ten-foot square cellar; more French wine sold in New York City than is produced in the whole of France. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By Express, $6 per 100.

W. C. T. U. ORGANIZATION AND WORK.

A book of general information on how to organize and run successfully a Woman's Christian Temperance Union. This book should be widely distributed among W. C. T. U. presidents, pastor's wives and other representative women. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

HOME PROTECTION.

A lawyer's view of it. By J. C. Wells, attorney-at-law. The question of female suffrage for the protection of home ably discussed from a lawyer's standpoint. A book for the times. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

BAND OF HOPE RECITERS.

172 pages. 164 choice recitations of poetry and prose, containing some of the choicest bits of temperance material for the platform ever uttered, accompanied by an article on elocution. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

GENERAL TEMPERANCE SONG BOOK.

"Temperance Songs," a Book for Adult Societies.—Eighty-three choice pieces, both words and music (old and new tune combination) choice selections from standard temperance collections; many choice new pieces. Book carefully edited by David C. Cook. Will prove just what is wanted by every temperance society Price in strong cardboard covers, by mail, 10c each; $1 per dozen; by express, $5 per 100.

TEMPERANCE ANTHEM BOOK.

Temperance Anthems.—A new idea; nothing else of the kind in existence. Will insure good music by the choir at temperance meetings. Forty-eight pages of choice anthems by ablest writers By mail, 15c each; $1.50 per doz. By express, $10 per 100.

BAND OF HOPE SONG BOOK.

Band of Hope Songs.—Fifty-seven choice pieces for juvenile temperance gatherings, Bands of Hope, etc. Old, familiar tunes, also choice new words and music. Words far in advance of anything else issued. By mail, 8c each; 75c per doz. By express, $4 per 100.

DANIEL'S BAND.

A temperance concert exercise, with parts suitable for all ages; entirely new Songs, recitations, dialogues, etc., of a thoroughly aggressive character; sure to carry weight with the rendering of it. By mail, 5c each; 50c per dozen. By express, $2 per 100.

THE COLD WATER ARMY.

For a primary temperance concert exercise. An entirely new exercise, containing songs and recitations, dialogues, etc., suitable for primary scholars. A pleasing and telling concert on temperance. By mail, 5c each; 50c per dozen. By express, $2 per 100.

SIZES.—Our small size Bible is 4x5½ inches. Our medium size, 4½x6½. Our large size, 5x7¾.

Our small and medium sizes are most popular ones. Large size for those desiring large type Bible.

$1.30 For $1.30, small size genuine Oxford Teacher; complete in every respect; same as the very best; strongly bound in morocco covers, with gilt edges; in large, clear print. Book of 1,408 pages.

Postage, 9cts.

For $2.20 Same style of binding as above described, Teachers' medium size, red edges instead of gilt. Postage, 12c.

For $5.40 Same style of binding, large size, gilt edges. Postage, 20c.

For $1.60 Small size genuine Oxford Teacher, gilt edges, flexible morocco cover, circuit, or protection, leather all around. Postage, 10cts.

For $2.50 The same style of binding, medium size. Postage, 12c.

THE PERSIAN SEAL BINDING

Is very handsome and durable. It is this style of binding which is so much admired by Bible readers. Please notice particularly that these Bibles are kid lined and silk sewed. Many Bibles in this style outwardly are lined with black paper and sewed with thread in place of silk.

For $2.30 we furnish a small size Oxford, bound in Persian seal, full flexible; can be bent back, doubled or rolled, without injury. Divinity circuit, gilt edges, kid lined, silk sewed, with book-mark and band. Postage, 10c.

For $3.30 The same style of binding, medium size. Postage, 12c.

For $5.75 The same style of binding, large size. Postage, 20c.

LEVANT MOROCCO BINDING.

The Persian Seal bindings are the best kept by most Bible dealers, and usually pass for the best teachers' Bibles made; and, to all appearance, they are so. There is, however, a better wearing binding, of which the Persian Seal is a good imitation; this is known as "Levant Morocco." In all respects the Levant morocco Bible corresponds with the Persian Seal description, except as to leather used for cover which, though looking like the Persian Seal, is stronger, and will last a lifetime.

Prices on genuine Levant Morocco bindings:

For $4.50—Small size. Postage, 10c.
For $5.50—Medium size. Postage, 12c.
For $8.00—Large size. Postage, 20cts.

Handsome Gift Bibles at Low Prices.

For 45c. Embossed morocco cover, gilt edges, gilt title on back. Very neat and durable. This is the handsomest 45c. gift Bible we have ever seen. Postage, 5c.

For 60c. Morocco cover, brass bound and plated, with handsome gilt clasp and gilt edges; two patterns; square and round corners. Exquisite lettering on side; printed in large clear type. Bibles no better are sold as high as $1 and $2. Postage, 6c.

For 70c. Similar size and style of binding to our 60-cent Bible; square corners, brass bound, with clasp and handsome tasseled book-mark; also medallion inserted on side in gold and red.

This was a new importation with the fall of 1882, and a very pretty design. It should be seen to be appreciated. (See cut.) Postage, 6c.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—The Fat Stock Show held in the Chicago Exposition building Nov. 14–22 has been one of the greatest exhibitions of the kind ever held in the country. There were 431 entries of cattle, sheep, hogs, and horses, and the competition, especially among breeders of short-horn, Hereford and Polled Angus cattle was sharp. Several large sales of stock were made during the fair. On Saturday about 40,000 school children were admitted free.

—The cold wind storm of last week was terribly fatal to shipping on the whole chain of lakes. The number of vessels stranded and lost number scores. The loss of life has also been heavy, but the Life-saving Service has been active at all the stations, and has rescued many crews. Such a week of disasters has seldom been experienced.

—Near Streator, Ill., Friday, a freight train on the C. B. and Q. road dashed into a passenger train, telescoping the two rear cars, killing four persons instantly, two persons dying later of their injuries, and wounding nine others, some fatally. The locomotive exploded after penetrating the cars, half the victims being scalded to death.

—Lynchburg, Va., was illuminated Monday night to celebrate Mahone's defeat, and a great demonstration was held. The resolutions passed guarantee the negroes full justice, and condemn partisan reports of the Danville riot.

—Wilbur's clothing manufactory and Robertson, Taylor & Co.'s wholesale grocery house, at Charleston, S. C., were consumed Monday afternoon, last week. Eight women and a boy were imprisoned by the fire in Wilbur's building, and two girls perished in the flames. The others jumped, one being killed and another mortally injured, while the boy escaped unhurt.

—The United States Hotel, Academy of Music, Opera House, two newspaper offices, and several other structures were destroyed by fire at Shenandoah, Pa., last Monday afternoon. The fire was burning all day Tuesday, but was under control. The loss is $600,000, with insurance of $150,000. The Philadelphia and Reading road, which has contributed $5,000 for relief, will transport supplies free of charge. Two hundred houses were destroyed, and 500 families are homeless, but contributions are coming in rapidly.

—John Waffen, a Prussian, won a wager of $1 at Cleveland Monday night by drinking fifteen glasses of whisky in fifteen minutes, but died from the effects Wednesday, leaving a widow and five children.

—The gale last week Monday was of a clyconic nature in northern Maine, $150,000 damage being done in Oxford and Franklin counties alone. Houses and barns were wrecked, and hundreds of cattle killed. Acres of timber land were destroyed.

—During a heavy wind-storm at Tama City, Iowa, Tuesday afternoon, fire broke out, destroying the Tremont Hotel, and three or four other structures, causing a loss of $30,000. Fire companies from Toledo, Belleplaine, and Marshalltown aided the local department.

— A terrible explosion of sulphur occurred at Eagle colliery, Pottsville, Pa. The whole neighborhood was shaken by the intensity of the shock. The bodies of two men were found fifty yards away and were terribly mangled. A door-boy was fatally injured.

—The storm on the Chesapeake on Monday was the most severe ever experienced, and the wrecks and loss of life are without parallel. It is believed that not less than twenty-five persons have been drowned, and a dozen or more vessels wrecked, and as many as forty ashore. The storm is described as simply terrific.

—Advices from all parts of the Northwest last Thursday showed the thermometer varying from 15 to 40 below zero. All trains were delayed on account of the wind. The river closed at St. Paul that night, and navigation was suspended several days before.

—At St. Petersburg, Thursday, Sofia Warkupensky, a lady student, was executed for Nihilism, and another female member of the Terrorist Society, named Ossinuky, hanged herself with a towel in a prison cell.

—Germany will send an envoy to Pekin to secure if possible, a peaceful solution of the Tonquin difficulty.

—The North German Gazette says the decay of French trade is due to the fear of an impending war with Germany, which is paralyzing all business.

—At Barcelona, Spain, it has been discovered that a conspiracy among the Frenchmen has been organized for the purpose of treating the German Prince Imperial with similar insults to those offered to King Alfonso while recently passing through Paris.

BETTER THAN EVER.

The Inter Ocean for 1884.

More new features have been introduced in THE WEEKLY INTER OCEAN in the last twelve months than in any other paper published in this country. Retaining all the old specialties and departments, the publishers have added illustrated biographical sketches of persons prominently before the public at the date of publication; illustrated articles on important historical and current events, or in elucidation of antiquarian research, or interesting engineering and mechanical problems; cable letters from London covering the field of European news for each week; special contributions devoted to reminiscences of army and political life; and new series of articles given up largely to personal gossip and recollections of prominent literary people.

THE INTER OCEAN will remain uncompromisingly Republican; will maintain its present attitude on the question of protecting American industries; will continue to devote special attention to trade, transportation, and economic questions; will retain the departments of The Curiosity Shop (a current encyclopedia of curious, interesting, and valuable information called out by inquiries of subscribers); The Woman's Kingdom (devoted to the progressive movements in which women are intcrested); The Farm and Home (covering topics of special interest to farmers, their wives, and their children); The Veterinary (containing answers to questions as to the treatment of horses, cattle, and other animals by one of the best veterinary surgeons in the West); and Complications (taking in puzzles, enigmas, conumdrums, etc.), all of which are peculiar to the paper; will give as much space as hitherto to serial and short stories, original and selected sketches and poems, and with increased facilities for newsgathering in the shape of special wires to New York and Washington, and experienced correspondents well placed at home and abroad will more than maintain its high standard for enterprise and accuracy in all departments of news.

While so many improvements have been made in THE WEEKLY INTER OCEAN, the price has been reduced to ONE DOLLAR PER YEAR, postage included. This puts a large eight-page (there are frequently twelve pages) paper in the hands of the reader at the low rate of two cents per week. The reduction in price and the recent improvements make THE WEEKLY INTER OCEAN not only the best family newspaper in the country, but the cheapest. The subscription price of THE INTER OCEAN is as follows:

Weekly Edition per year, postage paid	$ 1.00
Semi-Weekly Edition per year, postage paid	2.50
Daily (including Sunday) per year	12.00
Daily (excluding Sunday) per year	10.00
Wednesda'y Edition (with Musical Supplement) per year	2.00
Saturday's Edition (sixteen pages) per year	2.00
Sunday's Edition (sixteen pages) per year	2.00

Postage prepaid in each case.

TO THE 370

subscribers whose time expired in November a special request is hereby given to renew at an early date. To make it easier to attend to this matter at once, every one of the 370 who sends $2.00 cash by DECEMBER 1ST shall have the Cynosure for 1884 the whole year and your servants in the office will send the paper right on from the expiration of the old subscription, so that no number shall be missed.

OLD AND NEW

and something more. That is, let every subscriber whose time is out in November help his paper by a prompt renewal; and if he will add to his effort for a good cause the name of a new subscriber, enclosing $4.00 for both, the two subscriptions will be good till Jan. 1, 1885, and the sender may have also his choice of the following valuable pamphlets:

1. The Batavia Convention pamphlet, with the great speeches on that occasion, illustrations of the Morgan Monument, etc.; or

2. Egypt in History and Prophecy; or, Pharaoh proclaiming God, by the celebrated Robert Patterson, from Hasting's Anti-infidel Library; or

3. The Anti-masonic Scrap Book, a new and enlarged edition now in press, containing all the tracts published by the N. C. A.; or

4. The Island of Madagascar; the excellent history written by Gen. J. W. Phelps and noticed on the 9th page.

5. Copies of any of the pamphlets sold by the N. C. A., to the amount of 25 cents.

A CLUB OF FIVE

trial subscribers (two months for 25 cents) will just now be a valuable accession to the Cynosure list. To every friend who will get one up and enclose the $1.25 and addresses plainly written we will send either of the documents mentioned above.

FOR A CLUB OF TEN the sender may choose any two from the above list.

Get the Cynosure circulated in your town. The lodge does not thrive where it is read.

THANKSGIVING HYMN.

BY ALEXANDER THOMSON.

For ample store of garnered good,
For sheltering homes and healthful food,
For happy hearth and peace secure,
For blessings on the humble poor,
For this fair land from famine free,
God of our strength, we worship thee.

For time of seed and time of growth,
Freedom from canker, blight and moth,
For ruddy harvest's treasured gold,
For increase of the peaceful fold,
For orchard wealth, and wealth of mine,
Source of all mercies, thanks be thine.

For freedom, both of tongue and pen,
For kindly words from honest men,
For hopes that evils, strong to-day,
Like snows of March shall melt away
And leave our country grand and free,
The home and hope of liberty!

For reasoning minds to think and know,
For hearts that feel for others woe,
For hopes that like the star of day
Point to the Son's ascending sway,
And fear not death. Eternal Good,
Hear Thou our heart's deep gratitude.

Bartlett, Ill.

Three lottery agents were tried before the United States Court in this city last week and convicted of using the mails for their illegal business. This will be only a slight check to their operations for they can use the express companies. The local statutes are explicitly violated by them and they are liable at any time to answer in the county court, but under its present Masonic management it would do little good. One of these agents represented Dauphin's Louisiana lottery; another the Henry College lottery of Louisville, Kentucky. This scheme is denounced as a great fraud by the Agents' Herald of Philadelphia, a sharp exposer of fraudulent agencies, and its Louisville headquarters is in the Masonic Temple building! In the hall of that building the drawings are to take place. This swindle sugar-coated with fraud, a lottery in a lodge building, illustrates one of the beauties of Masonry, that system under whose patronage flourish all the liberal arts and sciences.

The opinion of Judge Harlan of Kentucky, dissenting from his associates on the Supreme bench in their decision on the Civil Rights Law has been published. It is of such length that few will read it, but those who can do so will find it a plain but most able argument for the personal rights of millions of people who have by act of God become our fellow-citizens. He argues that before emancipation civil and personal rights were denied to the colored race, and that the word citizen in the Constitution did not mean them. With a very conclusive reasoning he demonstrates that this condition was all changed when the Thirteenth Amendment was adopted. He argues also that the rights of railroads, hotels, theatres, etc., are granted by the public, of which the colored race is a part, and therefore not to be excluded from such public priveleges. Though he stands alone in the court, Judge Harlan has the sympathy and his logic will secure the convictions of candid men, North and South.

A singular manifestation of the lodge craze is heard of in Cleveland, Ohio, where some persons evidently bereft of sound sense are forming a secret order which they call the "National League for the Suppression of Pologamy." Their address to the public is a bombastic piece of rhetoric which suggests nothing new, nor gives any facts not known for years, and bears unmistakable marks of the swindling character of the whole concern, which is without doubt an attempt to ride the popular abhorrence of Mormonism to the best market, and make as much as possible by the sale of rituals, regalia, charters, etc., etc., for the new society. Such humbugs deserve prosecution as much at the lotteries—only when once the work of law begins it should not stop short of Freemasonry itself, the mother and model of all the six-penny swindling orders

Though the Mormon agitation has now a season of quiet in this country, a movement is beginning to take shape in England that may shame us into more energetic measures against this abomination. Mormon missionaries have been only too successful among the manufacturing districts of England, and large numbers of young persons have been lured into a life of abject bondage to the accursed system. A strong opposition has sprung up and many meetings have been held, especially in the north of England; members of Parliament and other influential persons have lent their aid and a petition addressed to the Crown has been freely circulated and presented to Mr. Gladstone. We are sorry to say that the premier gave little encouragement to the petitioners. He believed that not legislation but the improvement of the condition of the working classes would check the operations of Mormon proselyters. He regretted that he could not interfere, as young women went willingly and no illegal devices were used by the missionaries. Possibly, also, no illegal means are used by London gambling sharps and their victims are willing ones.

The Grand Army of the Republic lodges have not yet re-instated their late "Grand Commander," Vandervoort, in the employ of the Post Office department. Indeed, their appeals both to the government and the public have been shorn of their strength since Vandervoort attempted to speak for himself. His own evidence of habitual absence without having any order to show for it was a confession. And now his own lodge or "post" at Omaha, of which he is a member, declines to enter the fight for his cause and declares the charges of the Postmaster General well founded. This makes a big hole in the bottom of this bit of lodge arrogance.

An old veteran of the war and member of the Oddfellow order remarked the other day: "What do the boys want to keep up these soldier societies for anyway? The war is over and everybody knows we don't want another. But, you see, its all for politics! They want to get into office, and so long as there are offices to get they will keep up their Grand Army and their Veteran Clubs, whether there are any veterans or not." Vandervoort's case displays much of this spirit; the general meetings of the Grand Army are always so full of political scheming that it is not attempted to hide it. Last week the chief organizing officer of the Union Veteran club in this city issued a call urging veterans to organize State, county and township "political" clubs "to preserve the ballot even by the bayonet!" One object, plainly stated, being to get offices for members of these clubs. Now, when everybody outside the lodges and many—a majority—within them are condemning the interference of secret societies in politics, such a proclamation seems a wickedness and folly. But there will be many responses. So when the lodge clears a murderer or a thief every vicious person who expects to need that kind of assistance gets into Freemasonry. The evidence of the Chicago Conclave that to be a Knight Templar Mason was to be a companion of saloonists and libertines did not prevent thousands of young men joining during the next three years.

If the North has a controversy with the South on the subject of caste and of equal civil rights under the law, we at the North may thank our Southern friends for rebuking our intemperance and unchastity. In no part of the country are the efforts of Miss Willard, the sweet-voiced messenger of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, more welcome than in the South, where she is now speaking; and in no part of the country, Kansas and Maine excepted, is prohibition more effectually maintained than in some portions of the same Southern States. In the matter of suppressing impure literature we have also from the same region a good example. The grand jury at Richmond, Va., has indicted all the newsdealers in that city for selling such papers as the Police Gazette, Police News, Week's Doings, etc., and the penalty to which they are liable is a fine of $500 and imprisonment. The publisher of the Police Gazette sent down an agent a while ago from New York to Atlanta, Georgia, to introduce his paper which had been for five years suppressed by law. A test case was made up and the venders of impurity were given the alternative of paying a $1,000 fine or twelve months in the chain gang. This is wholesome.

UNITY OF THE CHURCH.

BY REV. W. T. HOGG.

The church of Christ is one and only one. "There is one body and one spirit even as also ye were called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is over all, and through all, and in all." Eph. 4: 4–6. "For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the save office, so we, who are many, are one body in Christ, and severally members one of another." Rom. 12: 4, 5. "The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ? The bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ? Seeing that we, who are many, are one bread, and one body; for we all partake of the one bread." 1. Cor. 10: 16, 17. "For in one spirit were we all baptized into one body." 1 Cor. 12: 13. And "Ye all are one man in Christ Jesus." Gal. 3: 28. Thus do the New Testament Scriptures declare the unity of the Christian church.

The Son of God, before he returned from this world unto the Father, prayed for his church in the fervid, solemn and affecting language which follow: "That they all may be one; even as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us, that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou hast given me, I have given unto them, that they may be one, even as we are one; I in them, and thou in me, that they may be perfected unto one," etc. Jno. 17: 21–23. And for the preservation of his people in spiritual unity and peace he still makes intercession before the throne of God in heaven.

The true church is one with Christ and one in Christ. First, it is one with Christ. The Father "gave him to be head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fulness of him that filleth all in all." Eph. 1: 22, 23. The church then is the body, of which Christ is the head, and together they are one. The same idea of unity is taught in the parable of the vine and the branches. John 15th chap. Christ is "the true vine"—believers in Christ are "the branches." A vital union exists between them. The relation of Christ and the church is also frequently represented under the similitude of a marriage union. Eph. 5: 23–33; Rev. 21: 2, etc. And the author of the epistle to the Hebrews expressly affirms that "Both he that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one (that is, they constitute one family); for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren," chap. 2: 11. The church is also one in Christ. All true believers of every age, nation, name, persuasion, rank or station, are bound together in Christ by the strongest, holiest ties. By "one Spirit they are baptized into one body." All who are one with Christ are also one in Christ.

"One army of the living God,
To his command they bow."

The unity of the church is not an outward or visible, but is rather a spiritual unity. Doubtless there will be, ultimately, a visible unity of Christ's followers. "There shall be one fold, and one shepherd." But that will be when "the Chief Shepherd shall appear" to separate the sheep from the goats, and to fold his own dear flock in eternal safety and felicity. At present the union is not external and visible, and in vain do men look for such a unity before the Lord's return. There is, however, a spiritual bond of union between all God's people, to whatever particular organization of religious society they may belong. A visible unity is not insisted upon in the sacred Scriptures, but we are exhorted to "keep the unity of the Spirit, in the bond of peace." Those who decry church organization as opposed to Christian unity, and who un-Christianize all sects and members of various sects, are in gross error, and in their zeal for a visible unity, do themselves depart from "the unity of the Spirit." Church organization may be abused so as to become a hindrance to spiritual unity, but the existence and multiplication of organizations for Christian work in extending the Gospel of Christ, is not, of necessity, at variance with the New Testament idea of Christian unity. Unity and diversity do not necessarily antagonize each other.

Says Canon Farrar:

"Unity does not exclude diversity—nay, more, without diversity there can be no true and perfect unity. Where there is no unity there is distraction, but where there is no diversity there is death. . . . Unbroken unanimity may be the boast of a deadening Buddhism, a withered Confucianism, a mechanical Islam; it cannot exist in a free and living Christianity. If it exist at all, it can be only as a uniformity of indifference and ignorance—a uniformity of winter and night. The uniformity of the noonday is only for the Infinite. For finite beings, if there be any light at all, there must be the colors of the sun-set, and the seven-fold lustre of the rain bow, which is only sun when there is rain as well as sun."

The divisions most to be deplored among God's people are heart-divisions. True Christianity is catholic in spirit. Denominational walls cannot restrain it, nor do they stand in the way of its union in spirit with all pure and holy souls. Modern "no-sectism" is the most deficient in Christian catholicity, and the most abundantly productive of that acerbity which is ever destructive of Christian unity, of all the sects and isms we know of. With all their diversity of creed and custom the adherents of the various orthodox churches show a spirit of toleration, and fraternal sympathy toward each other such as the "no-sect" people show to none beside those whose lips mechanically repeat their sworn Shibboleth. "By their fruits ye shall know them." So long as the "no-sect" tree is more prolific in thorns than in fruit, and so long as we find the fullest manifestation of that choice fruit called "charity" among those who adhere to the various sects and labor in organized capacity for the propagation of truth and righteousness, so long we shall be content to live and labor with unabated zeal under the organized system of things, "endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

TO SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHERS.—II.

BY REV. C. C. FOOTE.

In my recent discourse to you, many truths that should have been uttered were omitted lest I should occupy too much space. A few of these I will now give you.

1. It is important that you learn the method by which you can most effectually secure in your pupils a supreme desire for their own salvation. Children are naturally of diverse dispositions, and through some one of these they are most easily affected. It is by reason of this that the Bible contains such a diversity of inducements to a godly life. Of these peculiar characteristics you should take advantage. Do you find the reasoning factlty predominent? Press home God's invitation to "reason together," as this is the door through which you may gain access to arouse the mind to seek God. Show the child that nothing is so reasonable as a godly life. And nothing so unreasonable as a godless life. Hold the mind firmly there' and you may expect the Spirit will render this method effectual.

2. There may be in others a keen sense of the beautiful. Is anything more lovely or beautiful than child piety? A child so in love with the infinitely lovely and loving Jesus as to forsake all things for love to him is an object on which angels gaze with supreme delight.

3. If you find in a child an active play of fancy, make heaven a study till your own soul is overwhelmed with its glories, then instill into that imaginative mind these transcendant pictures until it turns away from all earthly attractions and yearns with irrepressible longings for a fitness for the heavenly state. You cannot exaggerate that state. Explain the wondrous love of God in preparing so beautiful a place for those who love him, and the nameless wickedness of slighting it.

4. Do not presume too much on the knowledge of your class. As an illustration: An eminent minister, now in his grave, once said to me that when in his boyhood, he heard people talking of the grace of God, he thought they meant the grease with which wagon wheels were lubricated! Test these young minds and you will find many in utter darkness as to the meaning of that sweetest of all words, the grace of God, and the gift by grace. "For the grace of God hath appeared, bringing salvation to all men." Rom. 5:15; Titus 2: 12. What a sermon from these texts you may pour on the sensitive hearts of those you would save, showing that grace is the glory of heaven, flowing into the world's great ocean of sin. Grace is the Son of God, vacating the throne of the universe for the manger of Bethlehem and the cross of Calvary; submitting to a life of trial, and poverty, and the hate of his deadly foes, bearing in his own person the sins of a world of sinners. Grace is God's cure and expiation for sin, changing death to life, and sin to holiness, whereby countless myriads of sinners have been changed to saints and fitted for the habitation of heaven. No wonder in the universe is equal to this; and Christ is the fountain and fulness of grace. Fill, and overwhelm and captivate the minds of your charge with this wonder of wonders; then bring them to a decision, Will you now have this Christ for yours?" Enforce the infinite ingratitude of rejecting this grace secured to them at such a cost.

5. It is of fundamental importance that children are taught the difference between the motives for becoming Christians and the results or consequences of obedience. A vitiated or selfish motive is the fatal bane in multitudes of professed conversions. A child has the idea of oughtness, of obligation, and of duty as clearly as adults. The thing to be accomplished is a spiritual change of the will, and affection, a winning the heart to loyalty to the Lord Jesus as the world's Sovereign and Saviour, to lovingly trust and obey him in all things because he is worthy and because of his rights in us. This is the duty and these are the motives and the indespensable condition of salvation. No more a prodigal, but a loving child, and this is salvation. The new Michigan Central depot at Detroit, rests on a foundation of 3,000 piles driven forty feet into the earth, and this solidity is for time. With what care then should you lay the foundation on which you build for eternity.

As a consequence of this change of supreme preference for God, his will and service there will be an infinite wealth in God's love conferred on the obedient child, more precious than rubies and diamonds; and in the end everlasting bliss and glory in heaven. While over against all this the world proffers only its fading garlands and deceitful pleasures for a brief space; and in the end irretrievable ruin.

6. You are at liberty to employ any truth that will create a deep solicitude in these you would save; but you must not think that mere solicitude will prepare them to receive the Gospel. They must be made to see and feel both their sin and their ruin so clearly that their hearts will break and their wills subdued and become as yielding as water; and they yearn for deliverance as they that wait for the morning. It is by this method that the Holy Spirit prepares the mind to listen in docility to the claims of the Saviour, to appreciate his infinite love. The reasons why they should yield to his claims you should be able to clearly explain to them. Make clear to them that they should receive the Saviour to accomplish in them all that for which he came into the world; and that they may serve him, that they may know him, that they may adore, praise and worship him; that he may be their Saviour, Lord and King; and that they may become like him. Get their minds so thoroughly imbued with these precious truths that they will abide in them and bring forth fruits for life.

7. God's method for saving the young is just as philosophical and logical as for saving adults. Hence the means are to be accomplished by the right means and the right truths. If these means and truths are wisely employed we have good reasons for expecting success. But a failure here may be fatal. Many a child has been deeply convicted of sin and yet failed of salvation for lack of right instruction. This is certainly appalling and is a loud warning to Sabbath-school teachers to make the study of the philosophy of conversion a specialty till they are able to make the subject intelligible to the weakest and most ignorant. The result will pay a thousand fold.

8. The great danger with children is the creating in them false hopes. To urge them to accept the Saviour before their self-righteousness is completely destroyed (for they are just as prone to a good opinion of themselves as adults) and without a thorough conviction of sin, is to invite them to build on a false foundation. With what profound solicitude and care then should we lay the foundation on which hopes for immortality are built. And above all things don't fail to discriminate between tears caused by an appeal to the sympathies, and the cries and anguish caused by a deep consciousness of sin. Heaven and earth are not wider asunder than are these two mental states; and yet one is often mistaken for the other.

9. Procrastination is one of the great dangers to which young persons are exposed. Even when powerfully convicted of sin, and with a clear conviction of duty, multitudes have perished by the seduction of this temptation. Hence the necessity of wielding the strongest possible motives to induce immediate submission to Christ. Ring the warning in their ears that now is God's time; now the Spirit woos them; that he may be fatally grieved away; that they are now fast by the gate of heaven; that Christ bends over them and waits to welcome them in; that to refuse is an awful insult to him; that to despise his proffered love is among the most daring and aggravating sins, and if they treat him thus he may cut them down at any moment; that procrastination hardens the heart and blinds the eyes and creates a habit that has ruined millions; that heaven or hell may turn on the present decision; that Christ will confer an infinite treasure upon them, if they now for love of him forsake all for him and give him their hearts. Embrace then this golden opportunity which you will never regret. And dear teacher, if you are properly qualified, as you may be, your success is sure.

GOOD MEN DECEIVED.—So many honorable and sincere men have been deceived into Masonry, became disgusted and left the lodge and have exposed its foolishness, that little has been left as a secret except a few local pass-words which are changed occasionally. Aside from the violation of the Gospel in the profane oaths, or any oath—for all swearing is forbidden by Christ—and the un-Christian selfishness of Masonry, we would have nothing very sinful to lay to its charge; but the foolish and unmeaning ceremonies of the lodge are enough to outrage the feelings of any humble follower of Christ. We would as soon be caught playing "blind man's buff," or marching around a chair singing "did you ever go around the rosy-bush?" as to join in the initiation of a new recruit into the mysteries of Hiram Abiff.—Brethren's Evangelist.

A TRUE WITNESS.

The following testimony of Bro. J. F. French of Canterbury, at the last annual meeting of the N. H. C. A. impressed every candid hearer as timely, just and true:

"It is well known that I have left the Independent Order of Odd-fellows, and I am willing my brethren and neighbors should know the reason. I took all the degrees including the Encampment, at an expense of about $75. The obligation of the Degree of Friendship which I took, included the following clause: 'And I hereby pledge myself to help and support my afflicted and persecuted brother, and warn him of approaching danger, whether it be from his own imprudence or from the evil designs of others, or from some accidental cause.' That promise troubled my conscience continually till I left the lodge forever. I was subsequently drawn on a jury and suffered great distress of mind lest an Odd-fellow 'brother' on trial should give me the sign for relief, but happily no 'brother' was on trial at that court. I soon after learned that the name of my Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ is intentionally excluded from every prayer, and Scripture quotations used in the Odd-fellow ritual. These things fully satisfied me that an Odd-fellow's lodge is no place for a Christian and I left the fraternity for conscience's sake. Grosh's Manuel which I hold in my hand, and from which I learned Odd-fellowship, is the same book used by Prof. Bailey in his lecture. His lecture accords with my knowledge and experience of Odd-fellowship. I am not used to public speaking but am willing to bear my testimony to the truth that others may be led out of darkness into light."

REBUKE SIN.

Wesley went into a coffee-house in London for some refreshments. There were several gentlemen at the other end of the room, and an army officer who swore outrageously. Wesley saw he could not address him a reproof without much effort and difficulty. He asked the waiter to bring him a glass of water. When it was brought, he said aloud, "Now carry it to your officer in the red coat, and ask him to wash his mouth after his oaths." The officer rose up in great fury and threatened an assault, but the bystanders laid hold of him saying very decidedly, "Nay colonel, you gave the first offence; you see the gentleman is a clergyman, and it is an affront to swear in his presence." They restrained the enraged officer and permitted Mr. Wesley to depart. Years after Wesley was walking in St. James' Park. A gentleman approached and after some quiet conversation enquired if he had any recollection of meeting him before. "No, sir." "Well I am the officer you met with a stinging rebuke in the coffee-house. Since that time, sir, I thank God I have feared an oath; and as I have never forgotton you, I rejoice at seeing you, and cannot refrain from expressing by deep gratitude to you and to God."

Perhaps no vice is so prevalent as profanity; yet how many cowardly professors tacitly tolerate the sin by silence, or a cringing smile, while some impious blasphemer pours his polluted gabble in their ears. Such insult to a holy profession demands an instant, stern and personal reproof.

The early Methodists were an army of reprovers.

Let profane or filthy talk pass unrebuked and we virtually approve it! Such piety is sickly and decayed. Failure at this point will neutralize all Christian effort and render it abortive. Open sin may never be tolerated in our presence. Up! Christian, and do your duty. Reproof is imperative. Shame on that professor who will not silence obscenity, or vile profanity! —Sel.

—The Emperor of Japan has taken the initiative in the cause of temperance in his empire by appointing a commission to devise methods for the suppression of the liquor traffic.

—For every five persons who use tobacco in England, France and Russia, there are 15 in Germany and North America, 24 in Belgium, and 28 in Holland. The medical fraternity are comparatively unanimous in condemning its use in every form, and rank it only second to intoxicating liquors as the foe to longevity and the promoter of insanity.

THANKSGIVING AND PRAISE.

TUNE, AMERICA.

Our nation's God to thee,
Father of mercies free,
To thee we sing.
Build we our altar fire,
Tune every harp and lyre,
From templed dome and spire
Let praises ring.

Our country, blest of thee,
With peace and liberty,
Land of our pride.
Echo from hill and grove,
Anthems of praise and love,
Bless we the God above,
Our strength and guide.

Years roll the seasons round,
All in rich gifts abound,
Crowned with thy care,
Buds, dews, and vernal show'rs,
Fruitage and vintage bow'rs,
Bring thoughtful hearts to hours
Of grateful prayer.

Join in thanksgiving praise,
For all that autumn days
Bring from thy store.
Thanks for her golden sheaves,
For goodly roots and leaves,
For all the earth receives,
Praise evermore.

Songs of rejoicing raise
Incense of prayer and praise,
To thee ascend.
Graciously from above,
Join in our feast of love,
Thy Spirit, like a dove,
On us descend.

Fron Heav'n, thy dwelling place,
Vouchsafe to us thy grace,
Father of love.
May we united be,
Strong in our liberty,
Evermore praising thee,

FRIENDS HAVE NOTHING TO FELLOWSHIP IN THE LODGE.

Our attention has been called to the subject of secret societies by a communication from a correspondent in Indiana, which propounds several queries on this subject. Our long-settled belief has been, that Masonry, Odd-fellowship and similar organizations were associated with so many objectionable and evil things, that no member of our society could consistently be connected with them. But we have supposed that the members of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, and those elsewhere among whom our paper circulates, were so generally preserved from being entangled in this snare, that there was no necessity to refer to the subject in these columns. The queries of our Indiana friend have led to some reflection and inquiry; and to the belief that it may be right to caution some of the younger members, who may be tempted to enter into such associations.

In the general diffusion of light and intelligence which mark the present age, the objects and methods pursued by the most prominent of these secret societies are clearly set forth in various reliable works, which are readily accessible. These show that they claim a field of usefulness in the obligation which they impose of assisting and relieving their fellow-members when in distress. This is indeed their strongest claim on the respect of the community, and the most effective argument to persuade others to enter their ranks. But statistics prove that only a small portion of the fees received by the lodges are so used—a large part being wasted in regalia, processions, buildings and other useless expenses. The sin and responsibility for such waste, and for the idle ceremonies, destructive of self-respect, which the ritual of these organizations prescribes, must rest on the members. The obligation to render mutual help has often been applied, not only to the extension of pecuniary aid to those in distress, but to the shielding of one another from the just punishment due to crime; and thus has obstructed the course of justice and promoted immorality.

The discipline of our Society enjoins upon us the duty of caring for those of our number who are in want—and the query is often in each year read in our meetings, "Are they relieved or assisted in such business as they are capable of?" There is no reason, therefore, why our members should seek to provide for future contingencies by such outside methods, which involve much expense and are attended with many evils.

The frequent meeting of the lodges; the participation in their foolish ceremonies; the close affiliation with men of corrupt minds; the use of flattering titles, so conspicuous a feature in their prescribed forms; and the withdrawal of men from their families; all exercise a hurtful influence. But the mysterious secrecy with which they endeavor to shroud their proceedings is one of the strongest reasons that should keep a Friend away from such organizations. There is no need of secrecy for any honorable and good work—"He that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest." Under the shelter of darkness men will often do that which they would shrink from exposing to the public gaze; and the more thoroughly the proceedings of an association are hidden from view, the more danger there is of its influence being used for corrupt and baneful purposes by ungodly and designing men. The exhortation of the Apostle may well be given to all who are asked to join such societies—"Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them."

The disciplines of some of the Yearly Meetings of Friends contain specific prohibitions of their members joining with such secret societies. That of Philadelphia contains no distinct reference to the subject. It has, we believe, always been regarded as so openly at variance with the whole tenor of our profession, that no true Friend could be expected to take such a step. Our discipline is not merely a series of specific rules, which leaves our members at liberty to do everything they may please, that is not enumerated therein. While it lays down a general course of procedure in conducting the affairs of the church, one of its objects is to provide for such a supervision of the conduct of our members as may assist in preserving them faithful to our principles. In accordance with this, if a member should become a Mason or Odd-fellow, we believe it would be the duty of the overseers of the meeting to which he belonged to endeavor to convince him of his error and to induce him to withdraw from such associations, so dangerous to his spiritual growth or life, and so derogatory to our holy profession. But such cases have so seldom occurred or been known that it can scarcely be said any practice in reference to them has become established among us.

When the Grange Associations were formed in the farming community a few years ago, some Friends residing in the rural districts joined with them. There are probably fewer evils connected with these than with the societies above referred to; yet they are liable to some of the same objections; and the principle of secrecy and the adoption of passwords, known only to the initiated, ought to deter every Friend from remaining in them. They have been a cause of concern to many of our Friends from a fear (which experience has confirmed) that they would prove unfavorable to the best interests of those who joined them.

Our correspondent queries: "Are there many known instances of members of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting who are Masons or Odd-fellows?" "Would your members who have taken the oaths or obligations of these dark organizations be allowed a public testimony in meetings while they adhered to the principle of secrecy?'

"Is Philadelphia Yearly Meeting apprized of the extent to which Friends in some—even many—western localities are bound in secrecy, and yet are active members?"

As to the conditton of things in this respect in distant Yearly Meetings, we know but little. To the other two queries, what has been said may be a sufficient answer.

Since the preceding paragraphs were written and sent to the printer, a letter has been received from a Friend in Iowa, expressing "feelings of gratitude for and unity with the editorial remarks in 'The Friend' of 10th mo. 6th, in regard to Good Templarism in particular, and to secret societies in general; and to the truth that a true Friend cannot enter into such a work as 'the missionary in the South,' says in the British Friend, he is engaged in.

With all the falling away from the truth for which our forefathers suffered, this lethargy, ignorance or indifference in regard to secret societies has crept in, until, in some places, it is no obstruction to the recording of a minister, or the filling of any office in the (so-called) Society of Friends."

This letter confirms the impression given by our Indiana correspondent, as to the need of calling attention to this source of evil. We hope that the neighborhoods are but few, where any under our name have been entangled in this snare; and that such as may have entered into secret obligations without sufficient reflection, will be led to give up all connection with such associations. For we believe that the Divine power and Spirit of Christ, which has heretofore preserved our Society and made it in measure as a light in the world, will never lead any of its members into such hidden ways of darkness.—Friend's Review.

So far as Monsignor Capel has represented the truths of the Christian religion common to us all, we have commended and honored him. But he must not expect more from Protestants, whom the church of Rome consigns to purgatory as often as she prays. The Christian amenities have thus far been on the Protestant side. Nor can this prelate expect to escape scathing criticism of his defence of Jesuitism in this land, especially when he lauds it as a blessing to a free country. It ought to be a source of gratulation to him that it is even tolerated here. Neither can he expect favor in any defence of the Pope's temporal power, for this will bring up at once the question of supreme loyalty to a foreign head, a question vital in every American conception of free government. He cannot expect more of Protestant America than the order he eulogizes has received in Catholic countries, from whence the Jesuits have been expelled. As a Christian minister, we should be sorry if he did not receive courteous treatment.—Presbyterian.

—Sampson got his honey out of the very lion that roared against him. The Christian often gets his best blessing out of his greatest seeming calamities.—Good Way.

—The Washington Star, in an editorial on the labor question not long since, said: "One fact is made patent by the Senate committee's inquiry, and that is, that strikes do not pay the laboring men. They usually result in failure, and the loss entailed upon the working man means suffering for himself and family, while the capitalist has a bank account to fall back upon."

SECRET SOCIETIES IN IRELAND.

A careful reading of the subjoined extracts from papers widely differing in political and religious character as well as location, must convince candid men that there is some truth in the opinion of some that the Irish question will be an unsettled one so long as the secret lodges are allowed to slander, to deceive, to mob, and to murder in that unhappy island:

THE MURDER OF IRISH INFORMERS.

[From the Milwaukee Catholic Citizen.]

Some Irishmen imagine that the killing of Carey, says the Chicago Tribune, will interfere with England's supply of information, and that the fate of the chief of the Invincibles will make fidelity a necessary virtue in Irish conspirators. There are not sufficient grounds for the belief. Irish informers have been killed before this as Carey has been. With the exception of the military informer, Massey, almost all the Fenian informers were put to death. Pierce Nagle was murdered in the city of London; Talbot was shot in the streets of Dublin, and his assassin was acquitted; Warner, the Cork informer, was slain; Corydon, the American Fenian informer, was killed in Melbourne; and an informer of later times named Meara was shot in Western Australia. Carey and Lamie, Farret, Kavanagh, Hanlon, and the half-dozen or more other informers of the Invincible Society knew of these facts. The fate of the old crowd of traitors was talked over in their presence. They no doubt expressed satisfaction at the punishment awarded their predecessors, but it did not deter them from taking the same chances in order to save their necks or to obtain a reward. Outside the Invincible Society a score of informers have turned up in Ireland during the present year. Every ribbon-lodge and murder society had its pair of traitors. There are over forty men awaiting trial now in Ireland on the evidence furnished by fellow-conspirators who have turned informers. This has been the case not only in the time of the Invincibles, but since Strongbow landed in Ireland. Yet no country has been so prolific in that class of traitors. The fate of Carey will not prevent other Irish informers from coming to the surface as long as Irish secret societies are made up of reckless, ignorant, and brutal characters. The only way to prevent the manufacture of informers is to suppress the secret societies.

SECRET SOCIETIES IN IRISH POLITICS.

[From Redpath's Weekly.]

But, what business has a secret organization to control, or even to try to control, an open political party, whose policy and principles alike permit all men lawfully to join it? Such a course is not manly, and it is not honest, and it is not worthy of Irish patriots. It wins, of course, for a time, but the open organization instantly suffers from the dry rot of disaffection. Nothing but an overwhelming sense of duty to a crushed people, for example, keeps within the ranks of the Irish National League of America to-day, large numbers of men, as loyal to Ireland as any men in the world, because, although only good representatives were elected to office in Philadelphia, yet they believe that the result was controlled by the predetermined action of a secret body. Gentlemen do not care to be used as manikins, and as soon as they find that they are mere puppets in hidden hands they generally save their self-respect by withdrawing.

Until all attempts to control Irish patriotic politics by secret societies are abandoned, there never can be—and there never ought to be—a perfect union of the Irish people, either in the old home or abroad.

THE SCHOOL OF ASSASSINS.

[From the New York Freeman's Journal.]

To put the matter on the lowest plane, it is evident that the man who connects himself with a secret society and plans wholesale murder in the name of "patriotism," takes his life in his own hands—or, rather, gives it into the hands of miscreants like Carey. To put it on the highest, he refuses to hear the church; he turns his back on our Lord; excommunicates himself. The man who shot Carey was probably ordered to do so by the counsel of the Carbonari to which both Carey and he belonged.

The member of a secret society may be ordered to face death physical and death eternal at a moment's notice. The command given, he goes out from his fireside to kill or be killed. If he flinches, death awaits him. If he go forward, death awaits him. If he succeed, death awaits him. The beginning and the end of these societies is death. The best he can hope for is only the respite between assassination and the rope of the hangman. * * *

Let Irishmen beware how they express sympathy with the assassins and assassination—beware how they smooth over the evil of secret societies.

Secret societies have brought disgrace and ruin to families and dishonor on the name of Ireland. The man who joins one of them denies the faith for which his fathers suffered. There is no escaping this conclusion.

Secret societies are chosen places for informers as a matter of course. The Christian unfaithful to his baptismal vows cannot be trusted when he swears by that Sacred Name which he has renounced. The man who trusts him is a fool.

A HORRIBLE TYRANNY AS CONFESSED BY A MEMBER.

[London Cablegram, Nov. 20.]

LONDON, Nov. 20.—The Standard publishes a long letter from a correspondent whose good faith, it states, is beyond question, and who professes to be a member of an American-Irish secret society. The writer regrets having joined the organization, and says everyone watches the other; that he is a paid officer, receiving $13 weekly; he must keep himself acquainted with the whereabouts of 228 men who are under him, and to whom he is required to hand sealed orders; that everything is done with the greatest secrecy by ballot, and no one knows the other's business, although several may have similar tasks to perform. The writer believes that some employes of the postoffice are members of the society, as it is known at headquarters when a member receives a letter, from where and from whom. He says "an old man" reorganized everything since the last great failure, and some new movement is contemplated, as thirty of his party left some time ago, for (to him) an unknown destination, all of whom received sums of English money. The writer concludes as follows: "This is cruel tyranny; once the oath taken, a member surrenders his liberty and spies watch his every step."

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE WISCONSIN AGENT.

CHIPPEWA FALLS, Wis., Nov. 17, 1883.

I have arranged here for two services next Sabbath, one in the Methodist Episcopal church and the other in a hall occupied by the Presbyterians, Odd-fellows, Good Templars, and owned, I believe, by the Knights of Pythias. Pray that Dagon may fall before the Ark of the living God. I understand that both the Methodist Episcopal and the Presbyterian preachers are Masons, and yet both asked me to preach for them. The Baptist preacher is by profession an Anti-mason, but he would not let me occupy his pulpit. One of his members said, "I am ashamed of our preacher," and he repeated it over several times. I suppose others will report our State meeting, but I wish to say it was good from beginning to end, and a good many said that it would do good and had already. I think the cause is very much strengthened by it in Menomonie. I. BANCROFT.

THE PHILADELPHIA CONVENTION.

To the Friends of Christianity and Good Government in Pennsylvania and the adjoining States:

The Christian Association for Southeast Pennsylvania have called a convention to meet in Association Hall, corner of Fifteenth and Chestnut streets, Philadelphia, Pa., Dec. 18 and 19, 1883. No more central and commodious hall could be found in this city, and no city in the nation is in greater need of such a convention or more likely to be benefited as the result. Here the opposing influences of organized secretism and practical Christianity seem strongest. Here is the grandest Masonic temple and the greatest number of lodges and here too are a larger number of churches bearing testimony against the Secret Empire.

This city too is historic ground. Here rang out the peals of national independence; here was organized the first anti-slavery society and here was held, in 1830, the first National Anti-masonic convention. Nowhere has Christian testimony against this iniquity been more faithfully or Christian discipline been more carefully exeeuted. There are more than fifty congregations in which members of the secret orders can claim no right to participate, and probably not less than 10,000 communicants who desire to "have no fellowship with these unfruitful works of darkness."

But for the profound moral lethargy, that with abounding prosperity, has come over the people, there is, even now, a numerical and moral power that would make the promoters of this great conspiracy to blush with shame and tremble with fear.

The object of this convention is to awake and consolidate these sleeping churches to united opposition to their common enemy and to quicken the public conscience in reference to one of its monster iniquities. It is believed that not only Christians, but all property holders will be ere long led to see the common danger which comes from a secret, irresponsible tribunal whose edicts are continually triumphing over the laws of the land.

What most is needed is means. We want to put anti-secret literature into every Christian family. We want to faithfully warn all Christian ministers of the common danger, and strengthen the hands of those who desire to stand up against the workers of iniquity. We need to push the battle all along the line, but are to remember that these great cities are the centers of influence, and if we will prevail we must take them in the name of the Lord.

We want $200 to carry out present plans of work in this city. Who will respond? All letters sent to the office of the Christian Instructor 1522 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, will meet prompt attention.

FROM SOUTHERN ILLINOIS.

SPARTA, Ill., Nov. 17, 1883.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—I have been working for the cause a little over two weeks and with very good success. I find a great many Christian people who think there is nothing wrong about Freemasonry, because so many "good men" are connected with it. Therefore they conclude it is a good institution. Others think because they cannot see the evil effects of it as they do intemperance, therefore it does no harm; forgetting that the one strikes its victim with a warning, like a rattlesnake, and it is no trouble to discover the enemy; but the other, like the silent, sneaking copperhead, strikes its fangs just as deep and with as deadly a poison, but it is not so easily discovered. I find about one-half of the professing Christians don't know and don't care whether the lodge is right or wrong, but as they peruse some of those tracts I hope they will get their eyes open.

I attended a National Reform meeting at Jordan's Grove last Tuesday (Nov. 13). Anti-secrecy was well discussed by ministers of different churches, and we are glad to see them take hold of this subject. We expect to have one lecture every week in this part of the State, if we can get the speakers.

I ask the sympathy, support and prayers of the friends of the cause. J. K. HUNTER, Colporteur.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

THE OUT-AND-OUT-POLICY THE ONLY SAFE ONE.

HILLSDALE, Mich., Nov. 24, 1883.

There are a few even in Hudson, Mich., who are not silent on the sin of secret lodges. From them I received financial and other encouragement during my brief stay. Rev. J. Pixley and J. Phillips were especially helpful and I am indebted to the latter for a comfortable home, wise counsels and a liberal offering to the Washington enterprise. Last evening I met with the Free Methodists in their regular meeting for prayer. The number present was not large, but the Spirit's power was sweetly manifested. It is, so far as I have knowledge, the only religious body meeting in Hudson that the lodge does not so far control as to suppress all testimony on the "vexed question," and there may be a slight hesitancy on the part of some of the "Pilgrims" to make a square issue, at least Bro. Webster, the class leader, advised against any discussion of the subject just now, while most who were consulted favored having lectures.

I am waiting here for a train to Angola, Ind., and have been looking for "old friends." Some who used to meet and greet me warmly are among the "honored and sainted dead," and are greatly missed. Father Reynolds and his companion are absent on a visit to friends. Prof. J. C. Rideout, wife and son, are here at their work, and free from the entangling alliances of secretism. From him I learned that the College is prosperous, but nothing is said or done to equip the young men and women who gather here for the fight against the lodge that is upon us. It really seems too bad that a body of Christians with a record like that of the Free Baptists should sustain a large and leading college in the denomination under the presidency of a man who has been "regularly entered, passed and raised to the sublime degree of a Master Mason;" but who, unlike to the sainted President Finney, has no word of warning for his pupils, but whose silence is construed to be an endorsement of the order by many. My observation is that the silent policy, and quiet opposition to the lodge proves a failure almost without exception. The only way to deal successfully with this is, as with other moral questions, to make a square issue and then fight it out on that line. The say-nothing, do-nothing method is playing into the hands of the enemy, and the longer it is pursued the more desperate will be the struggle when it comes. "Get thee behind me, Satan," is the only sensible and safe method to pursue. May God help us all to adopt and practice it. J. P. STODDARD.

CHRISTIAN REFORM IN PHILADELPHIA.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Nov. 19, 1883.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I came to Philadelphia on the 7th inst., and except a brief visit to Vineland have devoted my time mainly to visiting and talking with individuals, principally ministers of the Gospel, in this city. I find a good deal, and I think increasing interest in our reform, and am more and more impressed with the importance and practicability of lifting up a standard of righteousness in the great cities. Here, if anywhere, we ought to cry aloud and spare not, lift our voice like a trumpet and show to the people of God the awful danger that threatens both the church and the state.

There are a large number of ministers and congregations that, while in real sympathy with us, yet hesitate about giving prominence to the discussion of this subject. They see that a local congregation taking an advanced ground on this question would at once become the mark for all the shafts of persecution that the secret empire can hurl against them.

Hence, with one consent, they have favored the plan of a convention that shall meet in a central and popular place and be addressed by able speakers. This explains why such a convention has been called to meet in Association Hall on Tuesday and Wednesday, Dec. 18th and 19th, and why I find it easier to raise money for such a meeting than for almost any other object connected with our reform. And yet it should not be forgotten that the churches which have embraced our principles are in the main struggling churches, a number of them are engaged in church building and others have debts hanging over them, so that any aid we may get from abroad in sustaining our somewhat costly, but we trust effective convention, will be needed. Surely it will not be misapplied.

Occasionally I find myself "in the wrong pew" and am brought face to face with some man who has sold himself to the lodge and scruples at no untruths or abusive language in his justification, but in the main my reception has been courteous even by those who dissent. The Society of Friends so far as I have visited them approve of our work. They affirm that they have no members who belong to secret societies. Their two leading papers, The Friend and Friend's Review, have recently published articles condemning the secret orders. The editors of both have contributed to the expense of the convention, while the Review has promised to commend it editorially. Nor should the Bible Banner be forgotten. It has for years borne a faithful testimony and published the able articles of Elder Barlow. Its editor is in hearty sympathy with our work.

My first Sabbath in the city was spent with the Free Methodists. I preached twice in their church, corner of 21st and Master streets, and attended their holiness meeting in the afternoon.

This congregation is having a good degree of prosperity under the able pastorate of Bro. Eakins. They warmly espouse our cause, and more than any other church suffer reproach for Christ's sake.

Yesterday (18th) I attended the semi-centennial services of the reorganized Reformed Presbyterian church of this city, at corner of 17th and Bainbridge streets. The pastor, Rev. T. P. Stevenson, gave two very able historical discourses. The first gave a history of the Covenanters in Scotland, and in the afternoon their history in Philadelphia. In the afternoon there was an able defense of their distinctive principles, not omitting their testimony against the secret lodges. The house was filled to overflowing, and an excellent impression was produced. The commemorative services are to be continued during the week, and on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings addresses are to be given by Dr. J. C. K. Milligan of New York, Dr. A. M. Milligan of Pittsburgh, Dr. Kennedy of New York, and Rev. D. McAllister. These addresses will review the history of the church on Temperance, Missions, Anti-slavery and National Reform. Let me say in conclusion that we expect as the result of our convention to do much for our work in Washington, D. C.

H. H. HINMAN.

SAC COUNTY, IOWA.

A letter in the Wesleyan reports some good work by Bro. Grinnell in western Iowa. This good work was done some time ago, but it will be of interest to every reader to know of it:

Some time during last year there was a committee appointed by the quarterly conference to secure the service of a lecturer to lecture against the kingdom of darkness in the form of Freemasonry and other kindred societies. Said committee arranged with Rev. E. I. Grinnell, who accordingly put in an appearance on the 29th of August, and went to work with a right good will, showing the monster in its political, social, and religious relations.

On account of the extreme hurry of the season, and the stupidity of some who think that great is Diana of the Ephesians, the congregations were not large; but those who came and listened without prejudice, were convinced, if not before, that they who inaugurate and sustain these things, love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil, and that those who do the truth come to the light that it may be made manifest that their deeds are wrought in God.

He gave three lectures at the Delaware and three at Wall Lake appointments, giving opportunity to those of conflicting opinions to vindicate their cause if they could. But little or nothing was said by the fraternity, the braying being mostly done by jacks. Bro. Grinnell manifested a kind and fearless spirit. We leave the result with the Lord Almighty, trusting that the right will finally triumph over error. May God speed the day.

SECEDER'S LIST.

It is with the greatest pleasure that we add four names to the seceder list, in addition to the twenty reported in last Cynosure. They are:

John Simkins, Vineland, N. J.

John Cannon, Philadelphia, (Royal Arch Mason, Odd-fellow and Red Man.)

William Collins, Leesville, Mo.

Daniel Green, Albany, Mo.

When prayer is offered for our reform let these friends be remembered, and all others who should be coming out of the lodge to join them.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

JONATHAN BLANCHARD,

OF ILLINOIS.

For Vice President,

JOHN A. CONANT,

OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

A NEW YORK INSTANCE.

The election in New York resulted in the election of all the Democratic nominees on the State ticket except the Secretary of State. Carr, the Republican candidate, was ahead by several thousand votes. And for this vote we have herewith the reason—the DREADFUL reason for it. The New York Witness said of the defeated candidate before election:

Judge Maynard, the Democratic candidate for Secretary of State, is a Christian of irreproachable character. Our authority for this statement is the pastor of the United Presbyterian church at Bovina, N. Y. From his letter, though not intended for publication, we take the liberty to quote: "I have known Judge Maynard intimately for twenty-seven years, for he was born and raised in my congregation. All of the family are members of the U. P. church, and the Judge is a true Christian gentleman."

As every Christian ought to be Judge Maynard is also a prohibitionist, and he has acted consistently with his principles throughout his public life.

Because of this noble record, which should have been a high recommendation with every honest citizen, a large element in his party worked for his defeat. A letter in the Albany Times said:

I hold that it is time to teach the politicians of this State a lesson—to strike one blow that they will feel, and let them understand once for all that they cannot select a man to head the ticket who is only known as a temperance fanatic and expect to see him elected. If they do it for one year for Secretary of State, another year they will do it for Governor. Men who value their personal liberty have no time to lose in this matter. This prohibition business is threatening the whole country. Now is the time, in this State, to nip it in the bud.

The Retail Liquor Dealers at Albany

Resolved, That we individually and collectively will use all legal and honorable means in our power to defeat, not the Democratic ticket, but the man at the head of it, Isaac H. Maynard, or any other candidate of any party who may have allied himself to any organization that declared "open war" on our business; and while we do not want to be considered a political organization, being associated merely for the protection and elevation of our business, we pledge ourselves to carry out these resolutions irrespective of party.

Carr, the Republican candidate, was not only the choice of the rum power but was also a Romanist, and received the Democratic Roman Catholic vote. Republicanism in New York therefore represented, in its leading candidate, both Rome and Rum? What Christian or patriot could conscientiously stand by that party in such a contest?

A REMINISCENCE OF GEN. GRANT'S SECOND TERM.

During Gen. Grant's political campaign for a second term of the presidential office, he made a direct appeal to the secret organizations of New England through the Knights Templar of that section of the country. The Knights Templar are a Masonic body numbering some fifty thousand men or more, who can pull the wires of several millions of votes. One of the orders issued by the Eminent Commander, as given below, will show how the wires are pulled. Schuyler Colfax, head of the Odd-fellows and of the Rebekah sisterhood of that order, assisted General Grant on the occasion to which this now historic document refers. The event is recorded in detail in Gen. Phelps' "Secret Societies Ancient and Modern."

Who will be the next aspirant to the Presidential chair that will come into office through lodge wire pulling?

CONNECTICUT VALLEY COMMANDERY.

Sir Knight:

It is hereby ordered that you appear in full Templar Costume, to take part in the ceremonies of laying the corner stone of the new Post Office in the city of Boston, on Monday, the 16th day of October, in presence of the President of the United States and other distinguished individuals.

An extra train will leave Shelburne Falls on the morning of the 16th at 4 o'clock via Fitchburg, returning the same day.

Let every Sir Knight be in prompt attendance.

By order of

W. S. SEVERANCE, Et. Commander.

C. F. FOSTER, Recorder.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A MASONIC SERMON.

Rev. Wm. P. Corbitt, of George St. M. E. church, New Haven, Conn., gave notice in the city papers that he would preach on Freemasonry, and invited all members of the order, and Anti-masons especially, to attend. He took for his text the words of the Judge at the last great day: "For I was an hungered and ye gave me meat. I was thirsty and ye gave me drink. I was a stranger and ye took me in; naked and ye clothed me. I was sick and ye visited me. I was in prison and ye came unto me." What a strange text for a Masonic sermon! Add to each assertion in it the words because I was a Freemason, or if I was a Freemason, and then it would not be so incongruous. But, you say, then it would not be the Bible. No indeed it would not. Vain is every attempt to make Bible religion and Masonry agree. "Come out of her my people, that ye be not partaker of her plagues," is the voice of God to all ensnared in oath-bound secret orders.

SOUTHERN MASONRY FROM A MASTER MASON'S STANDPOINT.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I feel disposed to write you the confessions of a Master Mason made to me a short time back. He was from Walker county, Ala., and stopped near my house to camp. I visited his camp to learn if our reform was gaining ground in his section of country. I have sent some eighteen copies of our paper (the Cynosure) into his settlement. I asked him if he had heard anything said about them. He said they were scattered over the county and the people were getting their eyes open. He asked me about the reform in this section and what the people thought of it, and about the revelations in book form. I proceeded to give him all the information I could, and told him that I had the expositions of the first seven degrees. He at once began to question me on the first, second and third degrees. (I knew at once that he was a Mason.) I answered his questions according to the forms laid down in my book. After about half an hour's talk he said that Freemasonry was the grandest swindle and the most abominable and devilish institution that had ever been organized by man. He said they had swindled him out of $35 to simply learn him a set of foolish signs, grips and passwords and to strip him half nude and make him swear obedience to the higher Masonic powers. Besides this, he said that it was a common thing at almost every lodge meeting that he had attended to give something to get some brother out of trouble, or some like purpose, with the promise that said brother would pay it back; but that he had never received anything but was constantly paying out. For this and other causes he had left the lodge some four years past to never return to it again. He said Masonry was running our government, our churches, and changing our courts of justice to courts of injustice.

Said he, "If you and I were Masons and you had committed some bad crime and I was on the jury and you should give a Masonic sign every Mason present is bound by his oath to do all he can to clear you of the charge, even if you are wilfully guilty."

He told me that about eight years ago there was a man sent by the Grand Lodge of Alabama to the lodges in his county to change the sign of entering the lodge, for which they paid him $25. At his lodge he said this was done to keep book Masons from imposing on them. He said he had never seen any of the expositions, but from what he had heard others say and what I told him he was satisfied the first three degrees were correctly exposed, and that he would be glad to see the time when an adhering and affiliating Mason could not be elected to office or a Masonic preacher be allowed membership in a Christian church. Many other things he told me that I will not mention. I gave him copies of the Cynosure and of the Sword. He was much pleased with them, said he would send you a club of ten or fifteen subscribers before New Year's. I am sending my papers around hoping that they will do some good. Yours in love,

T. W. Huckabee.

EXTREMES MEET.

The visit to Chicago of Monsignor Capel, the famed Jesuit and apostle or "social missionary" of Romanism, twice in Central Music Hall, suggests a few remarks. It is well that Mr. Capel has so transparently shown the wolf under his lambskin that our leading secular papers, the Times, the Tribune and Inter Ocean have felt called upon to strip his plausible pretences of their sophistry and show their utter absurdity. There is hope for our people so long as they cannot be deluded by the plea that the principles of Rome and our Republic are identical. We are only surprised that so skillful a casuist as Capel should have attempted to persuade any large assembly in Chicago that such was the fact. That he did so, and repeated his plea with very doubtful compliments to his critics, proves his own self confidence, and that he has the support of the Roman Catholics as a body. He is an attractive speaker and will have influence with many who do not see the difference between an argument and an assertion. The divine right of the Pope to rule kingdoms or empires or republics is of course unquestioned by true Roman Catholics, but American Catholics are not so surely to be relied upon. The public schools do not raise mere worshipers of Rome. The school windows are open, and the sunlight shines into them more fully than was imagined by popes in past days, when Bibles were burned and printing was an inspiration of the devil—when the sun went round the earth, and the blood did not circulate through the body—when Luthers were criminals, and such massacres as that of St. Bartholomew were worthy of songs of praise and public thanksgiving. Yes, and never yet has true Romanism shown any other spirit. May it never be that Rome shall rule any part of this great continent. None shall ever more readily defend their equal civil rights with our own, but when they seek ecclesiastical control of government the issue must be resisted to the death by every one who would leave the legacy of liberty of conscience to their posterity.

OUR POLE STAR.

THE CYNOSURE BEAMS TRULY AS EVER.

Rev. T. H. Hanna, Pastor of the First United Presbyterian Church, Monmouth, Ill.:—"The paper is undoubtedly improving and stands fairly in the front ranks of weekly religious journals now."

J. C. Young, Custer City, Pa.:—"I look anxiously for your weekly visits. Secrecy, big and little, is on every hand. I hardly meet a man who has not donned a badge of some order. Our people are ostensibly opposed to secrecy and speak their minds, but are afraid of hobbies. I would to God a David came this way once in a while to stir up our pure minds by way of remembrance. Success to the Cynosure and its cause."

Miss M. Higgins, Ithaca, N. Y.:—"Yours is a noble paper, ably edited, and is doubtless doing a great amount of good. The Lord continually bless your labor of love in giving publicity to the horrid evils of secret fraternities."

Rev. Levi Wood, N. Chili, N. Y.:—"It is a wonderfully good paper. I cannot afford to be without it."

W. H. Gerrard, Mt. Vernon, Ia.:—"We have been reading your excellent paper ten years, and think it the best in the country on all moral and religious subjects, and especially do I like it with regard to the stand it takes against the empire of darkness or secretism. I read Capt. Wm. Morgan's book about forty five years ago and have been a decided Anti-mason ever since. I believe that Masonry has, and is still doing more to destroy vital godliness in the churches than all other sins combined. My testimony has been and shall continue to be against it so long as our kind Father gives the ability, and my constant prayer shall be for the success and triumph of truth, as promulgated by the Cynosure, over error."

Rev. W. W. McMillan, Topeka, Kans.:—"May our common Lord and Saviour bless you in your great work."

Mrs. A. E. Tyler, Cohocton, N. Y.:—"The Cynosure has been read with much pleasure. Hoping and praying for its success, I believe it will yet come off victorious."

C. Cowles, M.D., Baraboo, Wis.:—"I like the paper and so does my wife. I read Morgan's book when I was but thirteen years of age, together with the incidents connected with the conspiracy and murder of Morgan. That fixed me for all time. Then the paper is much higher in its religious and moral tone than most of the religious journals of the day."

George Wm. Worster, Marshfield, Mass.:—"I like the paper very much, and hope and pray that it will succeed in its mission of purging the Christian church from secrecy. After reading it I send it to some to whom I think it will do some good, and if I learn of a young man that is thinking of joining a society talk with him on the subject and lend him books to read (exposures) and so try to dissuade him from his purpose and prevent his falling into a snare. I have belonged to two secret societies, first a temperance society and afterward to the I. O. O. F., but I have left both, chiefly through reading your valuable paper, also through the efforts of two friends, Mr. and Mrs. J. Tanner, Jr. Both were earnest friends of the reform, as I have good reason to know, having lived in the family during the winter of 1881–2."

Bible Lessons.

LESSON X.—December 9, 1883.—David's Friend—Jonathan. 1 Samuel 20: 32–42.

Golden Text.—A man that hath friends must show himself friendly; and there is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother. —Prov. 18: 24.

"Saul cast a javelin," etc. Or, brandished it (chap. 18: 10, 11). We see here Saul's ungoverned violence. What a scene to enact before his whole court on a solemn feast day! And what impolicy with such dangerous neighbors as the Philistines ever on the watch, to alienate his own heroic son, and his chief warrior, and lay the seeds of disunion among his subjects at the same moment.—Cook.

"Went out into the field." Out into the country, as we should say. The distinction between the lines of city and country is much clearer and sharper in the East than with us. Suburbs are rare. To be outside the city is to be in the field or country. There are fields about Gibeah which must have been beautiful under ancient cultivation. —Hanna. "Time appointed." At the time agreed upon with David (vers. 18 24). The place of meeting was by the stone Ezel, well known in the neighborhood of Saul's residence. The stone is evidently named Ezel (departure, separation) from the memory of this parting of the two friends from each other at this place. The name is therefore given in the passage above by way of anticipation.—Hackett.

"Only Jonathan and David." We are accustomed to speak of "David and Jonathan." But the Scriptures say "Jonathan and David." Jonathan, by his superior rank, by his divine unselfishness, by his unsought and unstinted love, is rightly the superior character. In him we see how it is more blessed to give than to receive.—Hanna.

"They kissed one another." There is not, in the Old Testament, a more affecting scene than this. These two young, brave, noble hearts bound by a love more strong than death, and conscious that the shadow of death rested upon them, poured out their hearts each upon the other's neck. Love, glorious and beautiful, pure as the light of the morning, untainted by earthliness, defiant of chance or change, of time or the grave! How radiantly, oh, with what surpassing splendor it stands out against the darkness and violence of Saul's gloomy reign, like the morning star between rifted clouds! This was David's dark hour, and the love of this frieud his only earthly comfort. But when the Saviour passed through that night, "dark with more clouds than tempests are,"—that night in which he was betrayed,—the traitor's kiss was the only kiss he received. So that not even the sorrow of David was like unto his sorrow.—Hanna.

"In the name of the Lord." David designates the covenant of friendship which Jonathan had made with him as one which he made with him in the Lord. It was, therefore, not a friendship which rested merely on mutual good feeling, but was based on a recognized common union of heart with the living God. Jonathan's heart clung in firm faith and trust to the Lord; this was the root of his heroic courage and his victorious prowess. David's whole life course showed Jonathan the direct, wonderful, gracious leading of the Lord to which he humbly submitted himself. The two hearts were one in looking to and hoping in the living God, in humble obedience to his holy will. This was the foundation of their communion of love and life in the Lord.—Toy. The best service Jonathan and David rendered to each other was that of religious cheer and consolation. We should ask ourselves in regard to our friendships these questions: Is this friendship helpful? Does it bear good fruit? Does it improve my mind, my manners, my morals? Does it stimulate my best powers? Does it kindle aspiration for the best things? Does it make wrong doing harder, right- doing more easy?—Monday Club Sermons. This friendship of Jonathan and David teaches us the true lessons of the higher friendship with Jesus. First, we must be friends to him, as well as he to us. He loves us, whether we do him or not; but we are not friends unless we also love him, nor can we claim the benefits of that friendship. Second, the friendship with Jesus is founded on self-sacrifice. He left his kingdom for us, gave himself for us while we were yet sinners; and we should offer living sacrifices to him. And third, by this friendship, we become like him. "We shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." And dwelling in his companionship, we will grow into his image.—Peloubet.

"A false friend." Some years later than this friendship with Jouathan, there came into David's family auother friend, of very similar name, but very different character. His name was Jonadab, and his story is told in the 13th chapter of Second Samuel. David's son Amnon was tempted to commit a crime. He might have overcome, "but," saith the Scripture, "he had a friend," Jonadab, who aided him in the crime instead of preventing him. A great deal of evil comes from false friendship. The danger is doubly great because it comes under the guise of friendliness,—a wolf in sheep's clothing. "Give me," says one, "a roaring devil, rather than a sleeping one; for a sleeping devil makes me slumber, but roaring oues provoke me to run to my Master." How many young people are ruined by bad companionship! How large a part of drunkenness comes from the custom of social drinking! How many are kept away from Christ and heaven by fear of their friends! Beware of the Jonadab friendship, whose test is, that it is willing to lead you or join you in sin.—Peloubet.

BAND OF HOPE BIBLE LESSON.

THE WORKS OF THE FLESH AND OF THE SPIRIT.

19. Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these; adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness,

20. Idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies,

21. Envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like; of the which I tell you before, as I have also told you in times past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God.

22. But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith,

23. Meekness, temperance; against such there is no law.

24. And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh, with the affections and lusts. Gal. 5: 19–24.

Golden Text.—And let us not be weary in well doing; for in due season we shall reap if we faint not. Gal. 6: 9.

Central Truth.—Christians must fight against the flesh.

1. "The works of the flesh are manifest" i. e., they are easily distinguished from the works of the Spirit.

2. Gross violations of the Seventh Commandment are not necessarily meant here. All impure thoughts and vile reading, and all vulgar or profane language is included under this head.

3. The habit of using tobacco is a work of the flesh.

4. This is "manifest" from the fact that it is a harmful and filthy habit, universally condemned by the pure and good.

5. The fact that not only criminals, but the low, the dissolute and the vicious are almost always tobacco users is another proof that it is a work of the flesh.

6. Witchcraft, or sorcery, was very common in Asia. Indeed it is always united with idolatrous practices.

7. Freemasonry is thus proved to be a work of the flesh, for it leads men from the worship of the true God, and bewilders their minds with pretended miracles, similar in many respects to the sorceries practiced by the heathen priests in St. Paul's day.

8. Hatred, variance, etc., are manifestly works of the flesh, because true Christians are always meek and humble.

9. In St. Paul's time the Roman world was divided into two classes, upper and lower, masters and slaves. There was no middle class. The poor envied and hated the rich, and the rich, made cruel and arrogant by unlimited powers of life and death over those under them were always trembling in fear of a servile insurrection.

10. Christianity has so altered the world that there is probably now no civilized country where society is in quite so bad a state as it was in ancient Rome, but the trouble between labor and capital at the present day springs from the same spirit; and now as then Christianity offers the only remedy.

11. Murders are classed with drunkenness and revellings, which shows that a large majority of them, in ancient times as well as now, were caused by strong drink.

12. Love is mentioned first because it is the greatest of the Christian graces, and includes all the others.

PRACTICAL TRUTHS.

Our lives show whether we walk in the flesh or the spirit.

The works of the flesh are the same to-day that they were two thousand years ago.

The only way to put them down is to become Christ's. Then we shall lose the desire to sin, or in the language of the lesson—we shall have crucified the flesh.

LESSON TALK.

The great trouble with us when we try to conquer the sin in our hearts is that it will not stay conquered. Even when we are certain that a bad habit will never trouble us again it is a good deal like the Irishman's snake that wriggled after its head was cut off, "dead but not sinsible of it." When one temptation is overcome another is sure to start up. So we see there is no discharge in the Christian warfare until death comes and takes us home. This is what makes our Golden Text so precious. It is like hearing our Heavenly Father say to every one of us, "Don't give up, my child because the way is hard. Keep right on doing your duty, aud I will take care that you shall have all the strength you need." The works of the flesh are all the thoughts, words and actions that come from the low, base side of our natures. The works of the spirit are the thoughts, words and actions that come from the conscience side of us, the side that opens toward heaven, and from which God speaks to us, as he is speaking to you now in this lesson. When you are tempted to use tobacco be like the boy who, when his companious taunted him because he could not chew the vile weed, bravely answered, "I can do more than that, I can eschew it." Take some sweet, encouraging verse out of the Bible, like our Golden Text, every morning when you wake up, and see how it will help you. A little boy was once ou a ship in company with wicked men. He was a pious, praying boy. The sailors wanted to teach him to drink rum and chew tobacco and to swear, but he would not. At last one of the sailors said to the rest, "We might as well give up. We canuot spoil the boy, for he is chock full of the Bible." The Word of God was the only weapon our Saviour used when Satan tried to make him do wrong, but it made the devil flee. It is such a mighty weapon that the strongest can have nothing so powerful, and so easy to wield that the weakest can use it.

LESSON HYMN.

A charge to keep I have,
A God to glorify.

HIS OWN EXECUTOR.

A WELL-KNOWN GENTLEMAN'S PHILANTHROPHY AND THE COMMOTION CAUSED BY ONE OF HIS LETTERS.

(Rochester Democrat and Chronicle).

We published in our local columns yesterday morning a significant letter from a gentleman known personally or by reputation to nearly every person in the land. We have received a number of letters, protesting against the use of our columns for such "palpable frauds and misrepresentations;" therefore, to confirm beyond a doubt the autbenticity of the letter, and the genuineness of its sentiments, a reporter of this paper was commissioned to ascertain all the possible facts in the matter. Accordingly he visited Clifton Springs, saw the author of the letter, and with the following result:

Dr. Henry Foster, the gentleman in question, is 63 or 64 years of age, and has an extremely cordial manner. He presides as superintendent over the celebrated sanitarium which accomodates over 500 guests and is unquestionably the leading health resort of the country. Several years ago this benevolent man wisely determined to be his own executor; and, therefore turned over this magnificent property worth $300,000, as a free gift to a board of trustees, representing the principal evangelical denominations. Among the trustees are Bishop A. C. Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, Buffalo; Bishop Mathew Simpson, Philadelphia, Methodist Episcopal; President M. B. Anderson, of the University of Rochester; Rev. Dr. Clark, Secretary of the A. B. C. F. M., Boston. The benevolent purpose of the institution is the care: 1st.—of evangelical missionaries and their families whose health has been broken in their work. 2nd.—of ministers of any denomination, in good standing. 3rd.—of members of any church, who otherwise would be unable to secure such care and treatment. The current expenses of the institution are met by the receipt from the hundreds of distinguished and wealthy people who every year crowd its utmost capacity. Here come men and women who were once in perfect health, but neglected the first symptoms of disease. The uncertain pains they felt at first were overlooked until their health became impaired. They little realized the danger before them, nor how alarming even trifling ailments might prove. They constitute all classes, including ministers and bishops, lawyers, judges, statesmen, millionaires, journalists, college professors and officials from all parts of the land.

Drawing the morning Democrat and Chronicle from his pocket, the reporter remarked, "Doctor, that letter of yours has created a good deal of talk, and many of our readers have questioned its authenticity."

"To what do you refer?" remarked the doctor.

"Have you not seen the paper?"

"Yes, but I have not had time to read it yet."

The reporter thereupon showed him the letter, which was as follows:

CLIFTON SPRINGS SANITARIUM CO. }
CLIFTON SPRINGS, N. Y., Oct. 11, '83 }

DEAR SIR: I am using Warner's Safe Cure. and I regard it as the best remedy for some forms of kidney disease that we have. I am watching with great care some cases I am now treating with it, and I hope for favorable results.

I wish you might come down yourself, as I would like very much to talk with you about your sterling remedy and show you over our institution.

Yours truly,
[Signed] HENRY FOSTER, M. D.

"I do not see why anybody should be skeptical concerning that letter," remarked the doctor.

"Isn't it unusual for a physician of your standing and influence to commend a proprietary preparation?"

"I don't know how it may be with others, but in this institution we allow no person to dictate to us what we shall use. Our purpose is to cure the sick, and for that work we use anything we know to be valuable. Because I know Warner's Safe Cure is a very valuable preparation, I commend it. As its power is manifested under my use, so shall I add to the completeness of my commendation."

"Have you ever analyzed it, doctor?"

"We always analyze before we try any preparation of which we do not know the constituents. But analysis, you know, only gives the elements; it does not give the all-important proportions. The remarkable power of Warner's Safe Cure undoubtedly consists in the proportions according to which its elements are mixed. While there may be a thousand remedies made of the same elements, unless they are put together in proper proportions, they are worthless as kidney and liver preparations.

"I hope some day to meet Mr. Warner personally, and extend fuller congratulations to him on the excellence of his preparations. I have heard much of him as the founder of the Warner Observatory, and as a man of large benevolence. The reputed high character of the man himself gave assurance to me in the first place that he would not put a remedy upon the market that was not trustworthy; and it was a source of a good deal of gratification to me to find out by actual experiment that the remedy itself sustained my impressions."

The couclusion reached by Dr. Foster is precisely tbe same found by Dr. Dio Lewis, Dr. Robert A. Gunn, ex-Surgeon-General Gallagher and others, and proves beyond a doubt the great efficacy of the remedy wbich has awakened so much attention in the land and rescued so many men, women and children from disease and death.

Those Beautiful Church Bells.

It is both a gratification and pleasure to note the great and general gatisfaction which the McSHANE CHURCH BELLS give wherever sent. Following is a letter published by permission of the firm, and it speaks for itself; after stating that he was glad that his Bill was settled, he says, "Now, I have another Bill to square and settle; I mean the Bill of honor with respect to your Bell. It is for me a duty, both of justice and courtesy to acknowledge, as highly as possible, that you have fully and entirely settled your obligation towards me. Your BELL is very nice, very strong, very sonorous, giving general and entire satisfaction. Its way to the church from the Railroad Station (some ten miles), was a triumphal one. The people, as it passed along, being roused by its mighty voice.

The HENRY McSHANE & CO., BELL FOUNDRY, Baltimore, Md., can supply the world with superior and perfectly sasisfactory Bells.

CATARRH CURED.

A Clergyman, after suffering a number of years from that dreadful disease Catarrh, and after trying every known remedy without success, at last found a prescription which completely cured and saved him from death. Any sufferer from this dreadful disease sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to DR. J. A. LAWRENCE, Brooklyn, N. Y., will receive the recipe free of charge.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 29, 1883.

EDITORIAL LETTERS.

THE WASHINGTON PAPER.

Mr. Needels proposes one thousand shares of $100 each—or $100,000 capital subscribed. Donald Kirkpatrick of Syracuse, whose money-judgment is excellent says "Needel's proposition is the best yet;" and he thinks it both wise and practicable; and none too large for so vast an enterprise in so vast a country. Whether attainable at once, or not, I think it should be strenuously attempted; and the least that should be attempted. Mr. Kirkpatrick is confident that one thousand shares of $100 each, can and will be taken in a Washington political paper. If Pomeroy is nominated unanimously, in a strong convention at Washington, I think a thousand shares will be speedily taken after a powerful New England ratification meeting in Northampton, where young men used to "hurrah" for him (Pomeroy), as future governor of Massachusetts, and President of the United States!

I shall be satisfied with, and endorse the determination of Capwell, Kirkpatrick, Needels, Norris, Brittan, Conant, Bourne, and men of their stamp—all of whom will be at the Washington Convention; whatever that determination shall be. The judgment of Mrs. Jones of Boston, should also be taken. She says she intends to be there. Perhaps Capt. Wilson and others, too numerous to mention, would like to give their opinion on the subject; and then a large committee will put the thing in shape. The heavens are very propitious, and, "There is a sound of abundance of rain."

THE NATIONAL CONGREGATIONAL COUNCIL.

WEST CHESTER PARK, BOSTON.—The National Congregational Council was organized at Oberlin, Ohio, and chose Dr. A. H. Quint its secretary, its only permanent officer, to keep its records, to represent the Puritan Congregationalism of the United States to the nations, and to bring Masons to the front, and give good men, like Dr. Deloss Love, back seats in the counsels of Congregationalism. Dr. Quint voted with Democrats during our long national agony down to Buchanan, and turned Republican when John A. Logan did, who, like Dr. Quint depends on secret societies for promotion. Gen. Butler's great Worcester convention a year or two ago, was opened with prayer by Quint, who served for years as Grand Chaplain of Freemasons; also about the time the National Congregation Council was organized, spent several weeks at a Chicago hotel to cure his bronchitis by our cold lake fogs! About that time Masons in Chicago wrote to a friend of mine, who is a Mason, offering plenty of money to build Central Block in Wheaton, and organize a Royal Arch Chapter in its upper story. If any sincere and capable man will carefully lay the above facts together he can draw his own inferences from them.

But Dr. Quint has been dropped from the secretaryship of the Congregational Council. A little before its late meeting, the Advance demanded his removal because, among other reasons, of his activity about "Masonry!" Rev. Henry A. Hazen who is appointed secretary in Dr. Quint's place, was born in Hartford, Vermont; graduated at Dartmouth College, just across the river; graduated at Andover; preached in Plymouth and in Lime, New Hampshire and in Billerica, Mass., where my father was born. Mr. Hazen is now in the Congregational House, Boston, and, blessed be God! is neither Odd-fellow or Mason. "And further, this deponent (at present) saith not."

WASHINGTON, Nov. 22.—Some little idea of the complete dominion of secret societies and their worships over mind in this District is gained by noting the food which the daily press gives it. I clip the four following from yesterday's Post:

THE NATIONAL GRANGE MEETING.—The seventeenth annual session of the National Grangers' association will begin in this city to-day at the hall over the Bank of the Republic, corner of Seventh and D streets. The visiting husbandmen will be welcomed by Mr. William Saunders, of this city. The business of the meeting will consist of reading the reports of the officers for the past year, and social intercourse. Nearly every State in the Union is represented. Many of the Grangers are accompanied by their wives, and have taken up the Metropolitan as their headquarters. The officers of the association are: president, J. J. Woodman, Michigan; secretary, W. M. Ireland, District of Columbia; treasurer, F. M. McDowell, New York. Thirty-seven delegates arrived last night.

THE GRAND ENCAMPMENT I. O. O. F.—The session of the Grand Encampment I. O. O. F. held last night was for the purpose of receiving through the Grand Representative the report of the legislation made by the Sovereign Grand Lodge at its last session. Brother John T. Given submitted a very interesting and instructive report, showing the large growth in numbers, wealth and liberality of this benevolent and humane organization.

INTERESTING INDIAN RELICS.—The Anthropological society held its seventy-third meeting at the Army Medical Museum last night. In the absence of the author, Prof. O. F. Mason read a paper prepared by Mr. L. A. Kengla, on "Stone Mounds and Graves in Hampshire County, West Va." A discussion of this paper followed, in which Major Powell, Prof. Mason, Prof. Gore, Dr. Reynolds and others participated. The frequency of such structures in this region and other parts of West Virginia is not generally known. They seem to resemble in many respects the more celebrated mounds in the Mississippi valley, forming a connecting link between their builders and the contemporary Indians. A paper followed by Rev. J. O. Dorsey on an Osage Secret Society, which covered a very claborate account of tribal organizations, with the traditions, rituals and thanks of the secret society with which he had become acquainted while resident in the tribe. This paper led to a very interesting discussion, after which the society adjourned.

Supposing the National Grange meeting was open to the nation's citizens I went to the "Bank of the Republic" and asked if thete was "a convention up stairs?"

"There is some kind of a lodge up there some where," said the clerk.

I climbed three flights of stairs, long and narrow to find the hall curtained and the door beside it locked. I went down one story and rang a bell which brought an intelligent looking woman to the door.

"Madam," I said, "do you know if the meeting overhead is open to the public?"

"No, sir;" she answered; "but you might find out by ringing a bell."

I went back up stairs again, but there was no bell there to ring, and all was close.

Thus this National Grange, charged with the farming interests of this country, met in a little secret skylight den, after proclaiming itself and inviting the public, by the above notice.

MORE STILL.

The Star here of Nov. 22, contains a complaint and appeal by Stilson Hutchins, proprietor of the Washington Post (Dem.) of a column length and a most extraordinary character, from which the following excerpts are taken:

For a month thc local columns of the Republican and the advertising columns of the Star have contained villainous libels of myself or reports of the actions or boasts of my libellers. Neither in my own paper, nor elsewhere have I made any reply until now. The time has arrived when I propose not only to defend myself from these falsehoods and slanders, but also to discover whether there is not some law in this District that will protect a man, who is quietly and honorably conducting a legitimate business, from the attacks of irresponsible men, who strike from the cover of secret assemblies, anonymous circulars, and unsigned advertisements.

Then follows the extraordinary affidavit below:

To Mr. Stilson Hutchins, Proprietor of the Post:

We desire, now that we have your permission to do so, in justice to ourselves as well as in justice to you, to answer certain statements made by the Columbia Typographical Union, frequently, for the last four weeks in the newspapers and before different trades unions, that we are paid "starvation wages," and are obliged to labor from ten to twelve hours per night to earn them.

Both statements are maliciously false. We make the following declarations and voluntarily qualify to them by affidavit:

1. That the first-grade workmen on the Post average, as the pay-roll shows, from $18, to $35 per week, for from six to seven days' work, and seven to eight hours per night.

2. That we are not required to stand around without work, thereby losing time, except at rare intervals on Sunday night; and that we are not obliged to submit to furloughs or loss of time, to give one-fourth or one-half work to others. That to fifteen full compositors there are but four apprcntices.

3. That the price paid us for piece work—and this we desire especially to call the attention of the public to as being made under oath—if not in excess of, has been for the past nine months equal to the Union scale, to-wit: forty cents per 1,000 ems—owing to the "fatness," so-callcd, of the Post type in comparison with that of the Republican. We have also another advantage in that the great bulk of the type used by the Post is smaller than that used by the Republican.

4. We desire also to say that our pay is prompt and regular; that we are accommodated, when the proprietor deems the case a worthy one, with advances; that the very best provisions are made for our comfort; and that our characters as honest, industrious and temperate men will bear comparison with those of any craftsmen in this city. That out of the twenty-thrce persons employed in thc composing-room seven have families, and that a number of us havc bought and are paying for our own homes in this city. That we have made no war on the Typographical Union and do not try to prevent anybody from joining it.

Thomas Taylor, [and twcnty others.]

Subscribed and sworn to by each person signing the above before me, a Notary Public in and for the District of Columbia, this 21st day of November, 1883.

[Seal.] A. B. KELLY.

Precisely what the quarrel of these secret societies with the Post, is, does not appear. Mr. Hutchins says they wish to blackmail him. Very like, but how helpless is he, and how secure are they.

The only possible cure for secret societies is to VOTE always against their members. That will quash them.

Mr. Pomeroy returns here to-day. Mr. Milton Ford is here putting last touches to our building, which he has beautified by his toil and taste.

Mr. Ford has been assisted by good Mr. Grisham, who differs from Mr. Needels and Donald Kirkpatrick, as to the size of the prospective paper. He is in favor of beginning small, and creeping up. But the man who leaps for the ridge-pole, rises to the eaves. While he who leaps low, breaks his head against the underpinning. A great convention, a unanimous nomination of Pomeroy; and a large, cool, capable committee will settle all questions. B.

A COINCIDENCE.—It somehow happens that the amount needed to finish paying for the Washington property is the same paid for the Morgan monument. It is probable that some of those who put a brick in the monument at Batavia, and have not made an offering to this enterprise, might like to put another in the building at Washington. How is it, fricnds? Your treasurcr, Bro. Phillips, would like to hear.

—The well-known burlesquc on the lodges, "The Jiners," was read in a popular concert given in Farwell Hall Thursday evening to the members of the Chicago Y. M. C. A. and their friends.

—Secretary Stoddard left the N. C. A. office on Thursday afternoon for several points in Indiana and Ohio, going on farther east as the way may be providentially opened. He is invited to spend Thanksgiving Day at the home of Bro. Capwell in Dale, N. Y., and Bro. Hinman wishes his help in Philadelphia.

—Word comes from Lexington, Ill., of the death of William Mahan, "the first and oldest Anti-masonic advocate" in all that region. His death occurred on the 5th inst. He died at his post, ncver ceasing his efforts while he was able in the anti-lodge reform.

—Bro. Hogg, pastor of the Free Methodist church in Buffalo, N. Y., writes in this issue on the subject of church unity with a courage born of conviction and doubtless of practice backed by that conviction. Bro. Hogg writes excellently for Christian unity which is the condition of the church which many desire to see who protest with the Cynosure against sectarian divisions, and wc hope, too, that the visible unity of Christ's people shall be accomplished before the time set by Bro. H.

—In connection with Bro. C. C. Foote's article, to which we call the especial attention of parents and Sabbath school teachers, it will be of especial interest to know that a Sabbath or two ago he visited a small school in Detroit, which was for a little time placed in his charge by the superintendent, and at the close of an hour nearly every member of the school was "hopefully converted." It will not do to neglect the study of methods that prove so successful.

—Our Band of Hope Bible lesson on the 1st inst. reminded a good brother in Des Moines, Iowa, of the passage in Shakspeare (King Henry VI. second part):

> "It is great sin to swear unto a sin,
> But greater sin to keep a sinful oath."

These lessons are full of suggestions week by week and will repay careful study.

—Bro. P. S. Feemster, Kansas State Agent, in a note to this office says: "I expect soon to be in the work again as Kansas agent. The work here is now better organized than ever before and I am hopeful that it will go forward successfully. If the Lord takes pleasure in it, I am sure it will." Kansas friends please note this and communicate with Bro. Feemster at Pearlette.

—Elder S. C. Kimball, New Hampshire Agent, started on the 12th inst. to fill a series of engagements in his State. The excellent State convention at Canterbury has given the reform an impetus in New Hampshire which will carry on grand work through the whole year. Bro. Kimball will report often in our columns, and will not forget, either, the value of the Cynosure for his constituents. Our list will have some accessions through his efforts.

—Bro. W. M. Love, editor of the Banner of Truth, Osceola, Mo., has a controversy with the Tebo Baptist Association which attacks him for his Anti-masonry by calling him a "disorderly" man and a "disturber and divider of churches." That is the enviable reputation (Matt. 5:10–12) those who speak the truth in righteousness and love often have to bear.

—Bro. James G. Laughlin, of College Springs, celebrates a happy Thanksgiving. His labors have been blessed, his lands has yielded abundantly, and his orchards have given him nearly 2,500 bushels of apples. He helps others to hearty thanksgiving by sending $25 to the Washington fund, and $50 to the Publishing fund. He has also just sent $100 to Wheaton College. And to sweeten all these good gifts he sends three two-gallon cans of strained honey, as delicious as ever dropped from Judea's hills: one for Pres. Blanchard, one for Bro. Hinman, and one for our treasurer, Bro. Phillips.

ORGANIZATION.

A great want of the anti-secrecy movement has been from the first and still is organization. We have been striving in many instances single handed, or at best in detached companies. No one has seen the disadvantage of this state of things more clearly or deplored it more sincerely than I have. I have given some thoughts to the subject in the hope of finding a solution of the question and striking on some plan that would meet the conditions of the case. The difficulties encountered and that must be overcome are many, and it may not be amiss to mention some of the most prominent.

First, reformers are of necessity persons of original thought and positive convictions. It is this element that makes them aggressive and independent. They form their opinions from what information they have, and then tenaciously adhere to those opinions and boldly defend then. Where there exists, between men of this character, an honest difference of opinion, as is often the case, it is not always easy to secure that harmony without which united effort is impossible. In cases of formal union where it is not a real sentiment, it is a source of weakness rather than of strength.

Second, very many whose sympathies are with us in the end we seek do not approve the methods employed. They stand identified with some church and feel that what they do as distinctive and direct religious or reform work should be done through the church. Such persons necessarily look upon organized movements outside the church with some degree of suspicion and hesitate to give them their support. Some are fearful that a new sect may result, or the established order of God's church be interfered with, and so conscientiously stand aloof.

Third, the tendency is to centralization in religious bodies, and the leaders of those bodies are suspicious of any movement that diverts the attention of their members or divides their efforts. They convince themselves and seek to convince others that the articles and rules that they have adopted cover the whole field and contain all that is necessary to bring about the desired results if faithfully lived up to, and naturally infer that more is superfluous. They have a testimony against secret orders and enforce it to the exclusion from their communion of all adhering members.

Fourth, the combined influence of the secret system is against us and the apathy of many good men and their positive aversion to "trying experiments" is a serious obstacle in the way.

These with many other hindrances hedge up the way to successful organization on a religious basis and add to the difficulties in the way of its attainment. As heretofore we may join our efforts in common cause against a common foe, and come more and more to see eye to eye, but our immediate hope for an organization that shall bring greater method into the work, lies as it seems to me in the direction of our duties as citizens.

Upon the line of political action men of each particular Christian faith and order can join hands and stand upon the platform of a political party, without even a suspicion of disloyalty to mission boards, church orders or religious instructors. However much Christians may differ in modes of worship or religious tenets held, they are under one civil government in this country, and equally interested in maintaining purity and justice in its administration. Then, too, there is much less danger of collision between friends in civil matters, than where questions of church are involved. If we accept the state as God's appointed ordinance for enforcing justice and judgment among men, there is no reason why all believers should not employ this instrument and work together without jealousies or divisions.

I can conceive of no reason why the work of political organization should not proceed with Washington for a center, until our whole forces are brought into line, and the friends who wish have an opportunity to "vote as they pray." This need not and should not interfere with the unsectarian, non-partisen work of the National Christian Association and the Christian Cynosure, but the rather add to their strength and usefulness. Our great work for the present is to educate the people and this can be done in large measure from our Western headquarters which will be less subject to criticism than a political or partisan movement at the seat of government. Every effort should be made to extend the circulation of the Christian Cynosure, and to put the books, tracts and literature of our reform into every household. This will in God's time and by his blessing work out political as well as social and ecclesiastical revolution on the secret society question in our country. The eastern and western wings of our army are one in their aims and efforts and each will supplement and help the other. Let us push both with renewed vigor.

THE NATIONAL REFORM ASSOCIATION.

A Cleveland dispatch announces that preparations are being made in that city for the annual meeting Dec. 11 and 12, of the National Reform Association, the Hon. Felix R. Brunot, of Pittsburg, president. Bishop Bedell, of Cleveland, Dr. David McAllister, Professor of Political Science, Geneva College; Dr. Scovel, President of Wooster University; Dr. Helwig, late President of Wittemberg College, and others are engaged to speak.

COLLEGE NOTES.

Wheaton College fall term closed on Tuesday and the students are many of them now enjoying Thanksgiving day among home scenes and the delightful intercourse of friends. The term has been a prosperous one, the attendance being more than one-third larger than last year, and a constant, quiet but blessed religious influence has resulted in conversions almost every week through the term. The Conservatory of Music under Prof. Martin is a very efficient department of the institution, a number coming from great distances to secure its advantages. The Art School, under Mrs. Nutting also increases in numbers and popularity. One of her pupils took the first prize for the best work by students in the United States, which was offered by the Dixon Crucible Co. of New Jersey. The winter term opens December 12th.

Avalon College yet prospers and grows in the esteem of all good people in northwestern Missouri under the energetic control of Pres. C. J. Kephart. During the fall term 164 students were in attendance, and in this respect the institution ranked second in the State. During the past two years the attendance has increased 333 per cent. The town has no saloons and provides good religious privileges, and the influence of the College in Christian reform is felt by every transgressor in all the region about.

Park College, located at Parkville, Mo., is a Presbyterian institution conducted on somewhat original principles, but is making for itself an enviable record in that denomination. President McAfee, realizing that hundreds of young men and women would gladly avail themselves of educational privileges if the expense could be brought within their reach, has invited all who come to join themselves to a large family contributing largely their labor for their support. They put up their own buildings and do their own work, thus developing the practical side of their education. A large proportion of the students enter the ministry.

LITERARY.

The latest literary adventure of that deserving publisher, John B. Alden, of New York, is the Irving Library, which in some respects deserves more praise than former publications, since while the price is very low the type is enlarged and makes very agreeable reading. One of the latest issues of this Library is a sketch of Madagascar by Gen. J. W. Phelps, of Brattleboro, Vt., a frequent contributor for the Cynosure.

The work compromises the history of the island, the labors of missionaries through whose teaching it has within the century become Christianized, the sufferings of the Christian martyrs, the attempts at French and English colonization down to the present year. The religious and civil customs of the natives, their domestic habits, the abolition of the slave trade, and the revolutions that have taken place within a generation—all these particulars which go to make up the story of an interesting people are told in graphic language. The interest in Madagascar since the grasping ambition of France seeks to gain part of the island is general. We know of nothing to compare with this little book on the subject.

A new history of Illinois is thus announced by the Union Signal in graceful terms: "Miss Mary Allen West, who was unanimously pressed into the service of the Illinois W. C. T. U. as its president for another year, has been for some time under contract to an Eastern publisher of note to furnish a new history of Illinois. The dilemma in which she is placed in being called in two directions to serve the State of her adoption is trying, but the Illinois constituency did their best to relieve her of the difficulty by voting her a three months' vacation, which she expects to spend at Washington, D. C., largely on account of the facilities offered by the Congressional Library. Illinois is proud of its president, and gladly yields thus much to the literary demands made upon her."

A portrait of Peter Cooper, engraved on wood by Thomas Johnson from a photograph taken a few months before his death, is the frontispiece of the December Century. Mrs. Susan N. Carter, who is at the head of the Woman's Art School of the Cooper Institute, contributes an anecdotal paper which throws much light on Mr. Cooper's ideas and his generous aims in promoting the education of young women for skilled occupations. Other biographical papers in the same number are Miss Anna Bicknell's character sketch of "The Pretenders to the Throne of France," illustrated by portraits; and Mrs. Schuyler van Rensselaer's critical essay on "George Fuller," with engravings of three of his best pictures. A fine descriptive paper on Devonshire "The Fairest County of England" is charmingly illustrated with nine sketches. Mrs. Jackson, "H. H.," closes her series of illustrated articles on Southern California with an account of Los Angeles, entitled "Echoes in the City of the Angels." Professor J. Rendel Harris, of Johns Hopkins University, writes of "The Original Documents of the New Testament," and gives an interesting illustrated account of a discovery which the author believes that he has made with regard to the text of the Bible and other ancient manuscripts.

The November North American Review opens with an article presenting the favorable side of a government telegraph in reply to Dr. Norvin Green last month. The writer, Gardiner B. Hubbard, shows from the experience of several European countries the benefits to be derived from the incorporation of the telegraphic with the postal service. Prof. J. Laurence Laughlin, of Harvard University, shows the "Evils of the Sub-Treasury System," in its absorbing and withholding from circulation the specie that is constantly needed to insure stability in the world of finance. "The Day of Judgment," by Gail Hamilton, is a caustic review of the less amiable moral traits of Thomas Carlyle. Henry George writes of "Overproduction," an idea which he declares to be preposterous, unless more wealth is produced than is wanted. Other articles are "Causes of Felicity" by Dr. B. W. Richardson, "National Defense" by Gen. W. B. Franklin, "Railroad and Public Time" by Prof. Leonard Waldo of Yale, and "Morality without Religion" by F. A. Kider and Dr. A. A. Hodge.

Dio Lewis's Monthly for November is truly a home number. Dr. Crosby's rebuke of female vanity and slavery to fashion brings out some excellent points from other writers showing how men may fail in making home a reality. Dr. Justin D. Fulton, Helen M. Loder and the editor make some excellent and practical contributions to this discussion. Lucy M. Hall, physician in charge of the Reformatory Prison for Women at Sherborn, Mass., writes on the causes and effects of Inebriety in Women; Sarah K. Bolton on Employers and Employed, an article full of interesting information respecting successful efforts at popular instruction for working-men; Lillie Devereux Blake on "One Thanksgiving Eve;" Dr. Samuel Hopkins of Auburn Theological Seminary on "The Rights and Wrongs of Doubting;" and Dora Darmore on a "New Remedy for Polygamy," which is, in brief, that our young men give up their sweethearts at home and go to Utah on the missionary errand of marrying the surplus young Mormon women. Dr. Lewis writes voluminously and well as usual. Frank Seaman, publisher, Bible House, New York.

The Fruit Recorder continues month by month at all seasons to print page after page of choice and valuable reading for the fruit grower and gardener. Conducted by an honest and practical man, whose long and successful labor in growing and selling small fruits eminently fits him for advising others, such a paper becomes a necessity to those who hope for like success. A. M. Purdy, publisher, Palmyra, N. Y.

—The current number of St. Nicholas is one of the richest of the year in illustrations, and the list of contributors is adorned with such names as John G. Whittier, Julian Hawthorne, H. H. Bayeson, Louisa M. Alcott, Charles Dudley Warner and Mayne Reid. The magazine shows on every page what effort the publishers make to please their young friends. Profit with pleasure would exclude most of the fairy and sensational matter that has appeared during the year. Century Co., New York.

—Rev. F. N. Zabriskie writes to the Christian Intelligencer this estimate of the new Hindoo theology, the Brahmo Somaj:

"This movement might seem hopeful, if it were indeed the groping of a half-enlightened mind. The trouble is that the position is deliberately taken in full view of the Christianity of the New Testament, and with a lordly assumption of superiority to it. Mozoomdar, in his book just published, "The Oriental Christ," charges failure upon foreign missions in India, and puts it upon the absurd ground that 'England has sent to them a Western Christ,' and that 'the Christ who has come to them is an Englishman!' The fact is that we have sent them simply and precisely the Christ of the Gospels, neither Eastern nor Western, English or Hindoo, but the Son of Man, the Saviour of the whole world. The demand for an 'Oriental Christ' reminds us of the old pagan notion that each race and land must have a god of its own, so that the Syrians attributed their defeat by the Israelites under Jehoshaphat to the fact that the battle had been fought in the hill country, and that the gods of Israel were 'gods of the hills.' This whole Brahmo Somaj is but a form of rationalism and mysticism combined.'"

—The Olathe, Kansas, Free Press reports a meeting of the county association and the determination to hold a convention in tha city in the near future. Committees were appointed to draw up a call and to circulate it.

THE HOME.

HYMN OF THANKSGIVING.

Praise to God, immortal praise,
For the love that crowns our days;
Bounteous source of every joy,
Let thy praise our tongues employ!

For the blessing of the field,
For the stores the gardens yield,
For the vine's exalted juice,
For the generous olive's youth;

Flocks that whiten all the plain,
Yellow sheaves of ripened grain,
Clouds that drop their flattering dews,
Suns that temperate warmth diffuse;

All that spring with bounteous hand,
Scatters o'er the smiling land;
All that liberal autumn pours
From her rich o'er-flowing stores;

These to Thee, my God, we owe—
Source whence all our blessings flow!
And for these my soul shall raise
Grateful vows and solemn praise.

Yet should rising whirlwinds tear
From his stem the ripening ear,
Should the fig tree's blasted shoot
Drop her green, untimely fruit;

Should the vine put forth no more,
Nor the olive yield her store,
Though the sickening flocks should fail,
And the herds desert the stall;

Should thine altered hand restrain
The early and the latter rain,
Blast each opening bud of joy,
And the rising year destroy—

Yet to Thee my soul should raise
Grateful vows and solemn praise,
And, when every blessing flown,
Love Thee—for Thyself alone,

—Anna Lætitia Barbauld.

THE PILGRIMS' FIRST THANKSGIVING.

The first day of Thanksgiving in the history of America was observed in 1621. The manner of its preparation and observanee is described in the following extract from a letter, written by Edward Winslow, dated Dec. 11, 1621. "Our harvest being gotten in, our government sent four men on a fowling that we might, after a special manner, rejoice together after we had the fruit of our labor. They, four, in one day, killed as much fowl as, with a little help beside, served the company almost a week. At that time, among other recreations, we exercised our arms, many of the Indians coming among us, and among the rest, their great king Massasoyt, with some ninety men, whom for three days we entertained and feasted, and they went out and killed five deer, which they brought to the plantation and bestowed on our governor and upon the captain and others. And although it be not always so plentiful as it was at that time with us, yet, by the goodness of God, we are so far from want that we often wish you partakers of our plenty."

The great abundanee of wild turkeys abounding in the neighboring forests no doubt supplied the Puritans with the fowl sufficient for their hospitality. The turkey which now is so highly prized by the people of the United States for Thanksgiving dinners may have in this way obtained its peculiar prominence among the viands of our annual festivity.—Sel.

TRUSTING IN PROVIDENCE.

"It's goin' to be snappin' cold to-night, mother, and so I tell you," said Miss Elsa Robbins, warming her claw-like fingers over the blaze of an armful of pine logs which she had just flung on the fire. "And I am very glad, mother, that we've got the russet apples safe into the cellar, for it's on them I place my main dependence for the interest money this year."

Mrs. Robbins sat knitting in the cushioned rocker—a wrinkled, bright-eyed little old woman, whose caps were always spotless clean, and whose dresses never seemed to wear out.

"Frost, eh?" said she.

"I rather guess so," responded Elsa with a shiver. "Stars shinin' like so many little diamond specks, and a new moon behind the pines!"

"Well, it's a good thing we ain't stinted for wood," cheerfully observed Mrs. Robbins.

"You're always findin' out some good thing, mother," said Elsa, a little petulantly.

"La, child, the world is full of 'em!" said Mrs. Robbins, who had a sweet plaintive voice like a whip-poor-will. "The Lord, he's a deal better to us than we deserve."

"Well, then," quaintly remarked Elsa, "I may as well tell you, now as ever, that the roof's leakin' dreadful bad."

"Leakin', is it?" said Mrs. Robbins. "Where?"

"Up garret," said Elsa, "over the west store-room."

"Well, it's lucky it ain't leakin' over the rooms we live in," said the inveterate old optimist. "If it was to leak at all, it couldn't have selected a better spot."

"And the fence is down in the north lot," remarked Elsa, "and neighbor Carter's cattle are all in!"

"Bless me!" said Mrs. Robbins. "Well, there ain't much but rock and mullein-stalks in that lot anyhow, and neighbor Carter don't half feed his cattle. I'm glad the poor creatures can have a good bite for once in their lives!"

"And I have a letter from Walter's widow," added Elsa; "and she wants to come here with her children."

"Tell her to come," said Mrs. Robbins. "It ain't a fine city place, and maybe she and the little ones will find it hard to make out on mush and molasses and baked potatoes, as we do. But she's my nephew's widow, and shall be welcome here."

"But, mother," said Elsa, "think what you are doing. Another family in this cramped-up little house—a lot of noisy children, racing and screaming about—a fine lady to be waited on, who certainly is as able to take care of herself as we are to take care of her. And you know that we owe a large bill at the grocer's, and we haven't paid for the cow yet, and the tailoress business is getting duller every year now that folks have taken the notion to go to the city for their little boys' suits. And—"

"Well, child—well," serenely interposed the old lady, "God will provide. He always does. And its a dreadful thing to be a widow and homeless. Write to her, Elsa, and tell her to come."

"But she has no money to travel with," bluntly added Elsa. "She wants us to send her twenty dollars. She has written to Cousin Marret, up at the Grange, and they won't even answer her letter."

"Dear, dear! that's bad!" cooed Mrs. Robbins. "No money at all. Poor soul! poor soul!"

"Well—but, mother," pleaded Elsa, "we haven't got any money, either—to spare."

"There's the chicken money," said Mrs. Robbins, looking wistfully up.

"But that was to buy you a warm, new cloak, mother."

"Well, I'll make the old gray shawl do for another year," said Mrs. Robbins. "And Walter's widow must have money to pay her traveling expenses—poor thing!" It is very wrong of Olivia Marret not to answer her letter—very. But Olivia and her husband was always close. It's their nature I do s'pose."

And Elsa broke out laughing with a tear in the corner of her hard gray eyes.

"You dear old mother!" said she, "I believe I should have lost faith in human nature and everything else, long ago, if it hadn't been for you. Let Walter's widow and her children come. We're poor, and in debt, and can't find bread for our two selves; but I believe for once I'll follow your example mother, and trust in Providence."

And she sat down and wrote to Walter Robbins' widow, inclosing that last twenty dollar bill, which was to have bought the warm winter cloak for the old lady, who was so contentedly knitting in the glow of the firelight.

Mrs. Walter Robbins was sitting by the fire also, but not such a fire as illuminates the farmhouse kitchen with a softer shine than any electric light. It was a mere handful of coals, in a broken grate, over which she bent with a shudder, as the wind howled by, shaking the windows and rattling the paper shade. She was mending the children's stockings, and as she worked a little girl crept out of the bed and stole across the floor to her side.

"Mamma, I can't get warm," she said. "Isn't there any fire?"

"There's a fire, dear," said Mrs. Robbins; "but we can't have much, for there's only a peck of coal left in the box."

"Mamma," went on the child, "why don't our fires shine red and bright like the fires I see through other people's windows sometimes?"

"We can't afford it, dear," sighed the widow. "If you let the coal blaze and crackle it soon turns into ashes, and we must economize."

"Mamma," spoke up a tiny voice from the bed, "I didn't eat quite enough supper. Can't I have another half slice of bread?"

"There is no more, Bessie," said Mrs. Robbins, with a pang, sharper than any serpent tooth, at her heart. "Go to sleep, dear; you'll soon forget that you are hungry, and in the morning we are to start for the country, you know."

Bessie's eyes sparkled.

"We can have all the milk we want then, mamma, can't we?" said she.

"And pick up nuts where they grow among the leaves, and eat apples without paying two cents apiece for them," chimed Lillie. "Oh, mamma, why don't every one live in the country? Mamma, don't you love Cousin Elsa? Is she a little girl? Will she play with us?"

"I don't know," said Mrs. Robbins, with a quiver in her voice. "No, she is not a child; she is a woman, like me. But I think she must be an angel in her heart."

For Elsa Robbins' had been the first helping hand which had been stretched out to lift the poor little widow out of the abyss of trouble which had almost overwhelmed her since her husband died, in the far-away Mexican lands whither he had gone to make his fortune, which, alas! was never made.

She had become sadly used to sharp words and cold glances, but kindness, sympathy, tender recognition of her claims to kinship, were new and precious to her.

Just then there came a heavy, creaking footstep on the floor—a tap at the door.

Little Lillie jumped up and scampered back to bed. Bessie drew her curly yellow hear under the sheets.

"It's a mistake," said Mrs. Robbins, spiritlessly. "Nobody ever comes here."

But she rose and opened the door. There stood a stout, middle-aged man, with cheerful blue eyes, a ruddy complexion, and leg-of-mutton whiskers, slightly sprinkled with gray.

"Does Mrs. Walter Robbins live here?" he asked.

* * * * * *

Miss Elsa had made waffles for supper and had fried some fresh crullers, brown and light as butterfly wings. She had brought in the parlor lamp, and hunted up two little china mugs, handleless, and with the gilt inscription faded off, which had been hers and her dead sister's as children long ago.

"They'll please the little ones," she thought.

And Mrs. Robbins, in her clean cap, sat smiling by the hearthstone, when Walter's widow came in, her black dress powdered with snow, which had begun to fall at the gathering of dusk, and with two little girls clinging to her hand.

"My dear," said Mrs. Robbins, "you are welcome—kindly welcome—you and the dear little girls!"

And Elsa came in, her face softened for the moment, and led them hospitably to the fire.

"It's a poor place," said she; "but mother is right—you are welcome!"

The children looked timidly around at the black beams which traversed the roof overhead—the deep set windows, with their broad ledges filled with musk-plants and fish geraniums—the strings of red peppers above the mantle—and the brass candlesticks, which glittered as if they were made of gold, and then the fire—the great, open chimney place—the blazing logs—the funnily-shaped andirons, with round heads, and the great Maltese cat, asleep upon the gaudy rag rug. Was it all true? or were they dreaming?

But when it came to hot waffles, and maple molasses cookies, with fennel-seeds in them, and milk—just as much as they could drink out of those dear little antique mugs—the children decided the matter in their own minds, that they were not dreaming at all. And after they had gone to sleep in a bedroom just off the kitchen, where the sheets smelled of sweet clover, and the wall was covered with bunches of cabbage roses, with impossible green leaves and blue ribbon filled around the stems, Mrs. Walter Robbins found courage to thank the friends who had been so good to her in her necessity.

"But there's something I haven't told you yet," she said, timidly. "I couldn't write it, because I did not know it myself at the time I appealed to you. I am not so poor as every one thought. Poor dear Walter's mining ventures have turned out better than any one expected. A lawyer from the South came to see me last night, and told me that I am to have at least a thousand dollars a year."

"Eh?" said Elsa, almost incredulously."

"It ain't possible?" chirped Mrs. Robbins.

"And," went on Mrs. Walter, "if you will allow me to live here and share it with you—"

"No," said Miss Elsa. "We have no right to it."

"But," pleaded the widow, "you were willing to share all that you had with me?"

"That is quite another thing," said Elsa.

"No, it isn't," said Mrs. Walter. "It's the same exactly. And I have always longed for a home in the country, and it is so lovely here; and—and I feel that I love you already, and I should be miserable anywhere else. Please—please let me stay."

And what could Mrs. Robbins and Miss Elsa say but "Yes?"

And when the gentle widow retired to her room, Miss Elsa looked at the old lady with tears in her eyes.

"Mother," said she, "you were right. Providence has provided. The moment I made up my mind to leave off caring and planning, and trust in God, he has laid a blessing at my feet. I think I will never doubt or despair again."—American Reformer.

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

THANKFULNESS.

For all that God in merey sends;
For health and parents, home and friends,
For comfort in the time of need,
For every kindly word and deed,
For happy thoughts and holy talk,
For guidance in our daily walk,
For everything give thanks!

For beauty in this world of ours,
For verdant grass and lovely flowers,
For song of birds, for hum of bees,
For the refreshing summer breeze,
For hill and plain, for streams and wood,
For the great ocean's mighty flood,
In everything give thanks!

For the sweet sleep which comes with night,
For the returning morning's light,
For the bright sun that shines on high,
For the stars glittering in the sky,
For these, and everything we see,
O Lord, our hearts we lift to Thee,
For everything give thanks!

A STORY FOR THANKSGIVING DAY.

In the autumn of 1574, in the city of Leyden, there was a terrible famine. For weeks the people had endured the pangs of huuger and the intense agony of starvation, with no prospect of relief. The most repulsive food had been eagerly sought. Perhaps some of you toss aside a biscuit beeause it is too brown to please you, or erumble a cake, beeause you looked for raisins in it and found none. What do you think the people in that eity were glad to eat? Why, even dogs and eats and rats and horses were esteemed as luxuries! The very leaves from the trees, and the bark itself, were stripped off for food. Children dropped down dead iu the streets from want of uourishment; and everywhere there were gaunt, starving men and women, who were obliged to lie down beeause they were too weak to stand up, from the effeet of hunger.

The city was besieged by the Spaniards who wanted to eonquer Holland; but the brave Hollanders fought for life, religion, and the freedom of their fatherland. The Spanish troops had surrounded Leyden so that no food could be taken into the city. Everything had been devoured that was eatable; and there seemed to be nothing left for the people but to die, or else give up their eity to the euemy. But to surrender Leydeu was to give up the very key of their country into the hands of their conquerors, who would at once have entered into its eomplete possessiou. So these brave men and women agreed to die within the walls of their eity, rather than give it up to the cruel Spaniards. Those ferocious troops had plundered the homes, and murdered eruelly the people in other eities they had eonquered, and the people of Leyden said that they would die in their home, but they would not give it up. Our freedom is one of the blessings for whieh we thank God on Thanksgiving Day; and it was for civil and religious liberty that the Hollanders fought; they valued it then. even as we do now.

Upon a low bed within a small house in one of the short streets of Leyden lay a ehild who, judging from appearanees, was dying from eonsumption. His eheeks were so thin and his skin so fair that his great blue eyes looked unnaturally bright as they were fixed upon his mother who sat beside him. She too, poor thing, was wasted away almost to a skeleton, aud her wan faee looked seareely larger than that of the sick ehild over whom she was watehing.

"O mother, mother," moaned the little one, "if I only had a morsel of bread!" And the woman sobbed, and looked up in agony with a mute prayer to God for help.

"O my little Wilhelm, if I only had it to give thee!" she eried. Theu the little fellow seemed sorry that his words had added another pang to the poor mother's heart, and he tried to raise his feeble hand to elasp hers as he said: "Never miud, mother dear, help will come yet. Our good Prince of Orange is working for us, aud God will help him." The words were spoken very feebly, for the ehild had not much strength left. Presently the street door opened slowly, and an older boy entered on tip toe, as if he feared to disturb his little brother.

"No news yet, Ian?" faiutly asked the mother. Ian shook his head sadly.

"No news, mother," he said; "the Spaniards have sent another message to the eity to surrender, but their summons was not answered."

"Then I fear we must die, ehildren," said the mother sadly. "Little Wilhelm ean't stand it mueh longer."

"O don't say so, mother dear, help will come yet. They say that there are great ships loaded with food for us. They are only waiting for the levelling of the dykes and the rushing in of the strong tide of the North Sea to eome to the very walls of our eity. Theu the Spauiards will be drowned out if they do not go away; and we shall have food, mother dear." And then the boy tenderly put his arms, thin enough they were, around the mother's neck, and again and again kissed her thiu cheeks.

"But the oeean is fifteen miles away, Iau," she said.

"Why, mother, did you not know that the ships had already eome part of the way? They have reached the great dyke, the Land-scheiding, and that is only five miles off. Only five miles off there are ship-loads of bread!" The mother shook her head sadly. She kuew that within those five miles there was a chain of sixty-two forts, and that all of them were held by the enemy, with a force four times as strong as that of the friends who were trying to come to their reseue.

"O mother," moaned the sick child. "is there no hope?" The old eloek ticked solemnly in the eorner. There was no sound in the street. The very stillness of death had settled over the eity. The passing feet were of those who were carrying the dead to burial.

"I will go out and look again if I see the ships eoming to bring us bread. mother," said Ian; but he did not speak so hopefully as he had done before, for he had been looking intently in the face of his little brother, and it seemed ta him as if death was near, unless the food should eome very soon. Another hour passed in uubroken silenee. One might have thought the ehild was sleeping, he lay so silent; but his eyes were wide open and stariugly fixed on his mother's face. Quietly again the door opened, and Ian silently entered.

"No help eomiug?" asked the mother.

"None, mother," replied the boy.

"Oh! my God," she sighed, and he erept out into the street again as stealthily as before. Another hour—and this time Ian eame with a somewhat quieker step. He held in his hand a sliee of bread. True, it was hard and dry, such as you would throw away into the gutter, not even caring to offer it to your pet dog; but it was bread, and Ian held it up joyfully before his mother.

"Where did you get it, my son?" asked the mother, houest and upright eveu under the pangs of starvation.

"Petrus Dyke from the Breede Straat gave it to me to save our little Wilhelm from dying. He shot a bird that was flying over the eity, and he said that to have both the bird and the bread was more than his share. He kept the bird for his own ehildren, and he sent you the bread. Wasn't it kind, mother?" They soaked the bread in water, and fed the weak child with it, a few erumbs at a time. It worried the little fellow that it was only for himself, and, to satisfy him, Ian and his mother also took a morsel of the erust.

"I think now that Willy may stand it through the night, don't you, mother? Won't it give him strength?" The mother saw too many symptoms of extreme weakness to feel eneouraged; and yet she could not allow herself to think that the beautiful ehild who had been the light and joy of their home would be taken from theu. The elder brother had always been so loving and teuder towards little Wilhelm, had petted him and tended him when their mother was at her work, and had at all times watched over him with a depth of affeetion that was uusual, even between kind-hearted brothers and sisters; and now as Ian saw that there was very little hopefulness in his mother's faee as she looked elosely iuto the blue eyes of the little one, he sobbed aud stole away again into the street. He did not returu even when the twilight elosed over the famishing eity, and the stars eame out, oue by one, to keep their watch over the huugry, the dead and the dying. Soou, however, dense clouds eovered the sky, and the night beeame intensely dark. Strange sounds were heard from aeross the blaek waters that surrounded the eity. Suddenly with a loud erash that started at midnight the eehoes through the towers upon the ramparts, a long stretch of the city walls fell with a tremendous erash. There was but one thought among the suffering eitizens: "The Spaniards have entered Leyden! All our suffering has been in vain; our heroism, our saerifiee, are all in vain!" A great mystery pervaded the silenee that followed. So long as the darkness of night covered the eity no one eould tell what had happened.

Little Wilhelm, who had been startled iuto a flush of red upon his thin eheeks, looked inquiringly into his mother's faee aud asked feebly, "Have the Spaniards eome, or is it our Priuee?" There was not one iu Leyden who could have answered that question. The day dawned, but Ian had not yet eome home. He had run away beeause he eould not bear to see his little brother die. Wandering he did not eare where, or how far from home, he had at last found himself so uear the fort that he had discovered—what no one else in Leydeu as yet knew—that the Spaniards had goue away in the darkuess of the night! Was it not almost a miraele, that at the very time when the walls had giveu away so that they might have easily entered the eity, the Spaniards were panic-stricken by the sound and had fled?

Ian stood waving his hat on the battlements. The eity was relieved; the fleet sailed up to the quays of Leyden and entered the eanals. They threw the loaves of bread from every ship into the famished crowd. Every one was wild to eateh the good food, for the waut of which they had for two months been slowly starviug. Men, women and children, poor, thin, tottering ereaturcs, crawled to the cauals to eateh the bread as it was tossed ashore. Ian was the first to get his loaf. With activity whieh the day before would have been impossible, spurred on by the exeitemeut of relief for Willy, he now ran wildly down the street, shouting as he ran: "Help, help has come. God has driven out the Spaniards!" One door after another was opened as he passed. Hungry womeu looked after him, almost doubting if he was in his right mind. Had not waut made him insane as it had done many others? No, for there was the loaf in his hand. Little childreu crowded to snateh it from him, but for onee he heeded not even the ery of the dying—fearing that his owu beloved little Willy might be as they if instant relief were not given. So he ouly pointed in the direetion of the quays as the plaee where they might get food, and on he ran. "Oh, if the child is ouly living we can save him," he exclaimed.

Yes, the child was yet alive. They fed him with a few crumbs at a time, and then the mother sank down from exhaustion. Ian was equal to the ueeds of the oeeasion. He broke the bread into small bits, and gave from time to time to his mother until he saw her revive. He watched by them both until the crisis was past. He felt as if they had been snatched from the very jaws of death. Thankfulness, such as he had never felt before, overeame our little hero. He saw crowds of people going towards the great church to thank God for deliverance, and he joined the throug. The noble admiral, eommander of the vessels that brought them food, led the way. The burghers, the soldiers, the sailors, the magistrates, and all the people who were strong enough to reaeh the chureh, joined the procession; and there they knelt before the Lord in prayer, offering up heartfelt thauksgiving for their deliveranee. Then they tried to sing a hymn of praise, but they were so overcome with joy that their voiees failed, and the hymn could not be continued for the sobs of those who eame to listen to the music. The ehange was so sudden from despair to deliveranee that the multitude, moved by emotion, eried like children. They all kneeled in prayer and thanksgiving. The words of the Psalmist were theirs:

"Give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good; for his mercy endureth forever. Let the redeemed of the Lord say so, whom he hath redeemed from the hand of the euemy . . . Hungry and thirsty, their soul fainted in them. Then they eried unto the Lord in their trouble, and he delivered them out of their distresses."

Was not that a glorious Thanksgiving Day?—Christian Intelligencer.

FRANK'S OFFERING.

Little Frank had been led to the Saviour by his mothe while he was very young. He had, from the time of his conversion manifested a deep love to the cause of Christ and a great interest in missions.

One day, while his mother was readiug to him about missions, the tears kept rolling down his cheeks, and when the reading ceased he said he was so sorry he could not give more to the heathen.

A few days afterwards he eame to his mother carrying with him a box in whieh he had carefully kept all his childish playthings.

"Mother, could I sell my playthings and get some money to give to missions?"

"Why, Frank, if you would be williug to let your nicest playthings go you might get some money for them. Do you want to sell theui?"

"I want to get some more money to send to the heathen."

Then Frauk begau and laid out oue after another of his toys, asking each time if his mother thought any money could be realized for that.

There were, however, two keepsakes, one from his teacher and one from his uncle, which he still kept baek in the box.

When all the other things were laid in a pile, Frank sat beuding over the box with its two reserved treasures. The tears at last began to eome.

"Mother, Uncle F—— gave me this to keep, to remember him by, and told me to see how long I could keep it. But, mother, Uncle F—— loves Jesus too. Do you think he would be angry if I were to give this to Jesus?"

"No, Frank, if you really want to give it to Jesus, your uncle will not be angry with you about it."

"Mother, I do love Uncle F——, but I do want to give this and all that I've got, aud my teacher's keepsake too, all of them to Jesus, if you think it will uot be wrong."

"Would it be wrong, Frank, for you to love Jesus more than you love me?"

"No, mother. I must love him more than I do you or anybody else, and I do love him more than I do Uncle F—— or anybody else."

So the little soul struggle was over. The two reserved treasures were laid upon the pile with the rest.

Other members of the family came in and said Frank should not strip himself of all his playthings; but his mother ordered them to let Frank alone. "If he wants to give all he has ou earth to Jesus, no one shall hinder him."

"But these toys are of no value to missions, and would not bring any money."

"They are of great value to Frank, and the gift is his all, and I know the Lord will not spurn the child's offering."

So the toys were taken to town. Their simple story was told at a public meeting, and oue after another eame up aud bought until all were sold.

At the close of the sales it was found that teu dollars had been realized.

There was no auctiou or high pressure of any sort, but Frauk's gifts brought ten dollars.

When the mouey was takeu and giveu to the child, one of the family said, "Frank, five dollars a year is more than some of the big rieh members of the chureh give. You might keep half the money to buy more toys, and still make a big eontributiou for a little child."

His mother stood eagerly watching, not willing to interfere, but trusting in her heart that the child would uot keep back part of the price. Frank said very positively, "No, I gave it all to Jesus, and I am so glad there is so much. It is all the Lord's."

Not long after this, a gay, worldly chureh member, who had been fond of fashiou and of dress, came to Frank's mother and said to her, "I was present when little Frank's toys were sold. The story of that child's offering of his earthly all to Jesus has haunted me day and night ever sinee. The empty, shallow nature of my own professions of devotion to Jesus eame like a revelation to me as I listened to that story. I wept over it, I prayed over it, I dreamed about it, until I found rest in following dear little Frauk's example. And uow, by the grace of God, I too have laid my earthly all forever on Christ's altars."—Am. Messenger.

THE CHURCHES.

—The Independent church at Streator, Ill., has engaged the services of Rev. N. E. Gardner who has removed his family from Haldane, Ill., and begins his new work with a good courage. May the arrangement be a blessed and harmonious one.

—Rev. H. Hull of Elgin, Iowa, makes mention of a glorious revival at West Union in which faithful work is done against the lodge.

—Bro. W. O. Dinius corrects the Cynosure in a note printed on the 1st inst. Instead of a revival at Montpelier, O., it should have been stated that there was a revival spirit in the Montpelier circuit. This was most felt at another class where some were reclaimed from a backslidden state. Early in the month Bro. Dinius, assisted by Elder Alwood of Morenci, Mich., began a protracted meeting at Union Chapel. The quarterly meeting was a time of victory for the church, and Elder A. did thorough work against lodgery as well as the rest.

—The new Congregational church at Winnebago, Ill., which has been built since Rev. Geo. R. Milton first visited them a year ago, was to have been dedicated with all bills paid on the 15th. The pastor writes the glorious news: "Our church here is not troubled by having members of the lodge in it. We are free from that curse and wish all other churches were in the same condition." Amen and amen! This is the blessed condition to which the Illinois State Convention looked forward when they resolved to send an agent or a memorial to all the meetings of churches or ministers during the year.

—The revival in the Wesleyan church of Syracuse, N. Y., has continued since the General Conference meeting. Bro. Bruce who was assisting pastor Emory Jones having returned home to Michigan Rev. Wm. Schenck of Vineland, N. J., a faithful man, was sent for to assist in the good work.

—The Sabbath school begun by Bro. Wm. Catlin in the northwestern suburbs of Chicago, as a Christian school opposed to secret societies, saloons, dancing, tobacco, etc., has been greatly prospered, until the necessity of a larger place of meeting is a constant question. Conversions have been constant and frequent and cheer the hearts of all engaged in this good work.

—The refitted auditorium of the Chicago Avenue (Moody) church, in this city, was reopened last Sabbath to a Sabbath school that has grown to the wonderful number of 1,641 under the able management of Bro. J. M. Hitchcock, for several years the superintendent. There was also a special service announced in the morning to be addressed by John V. Farwell, Pres. C. A. Blanchard and Rev. G. S. F. Savage, treasurer of the Congregational Theological Seminary. The last time Dr. Savage met Pres. Blanchard in a similar relation was when as chairman of the Elgin Association in 1878 he refused to allow the latter the privilege of speaking in behalf of the College church, Wheaton. Times change and sometimes men change with them.

—At the last regular monthly meeting of the North Side Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Chicago, it was announced that the Rev. and Mrs. Amos Bailey would hold a series of Gospel meetings at the rooms of the Union, commencing Sabbath evening. Mr. Bailey is rother of the New England agent.

—The Rev. J. B. Cutter, pastor of the Congregational church, Hebron, Conn., preached a sermon denunciatory of Mormonism. Some statements deeply offended J. B. Fillmore, a rich member of the church who had been three times married and thrice divorced. He tried to work up an influence against the pastor, and when he thought he had secured a sufficient number of votes to insure a dismissal, called a meeting of the church people. To his great surprise the strength developed was on the other side, and he himself barely escaped being expelled from the congregation. He at any rate got so unmistakable a hint that on the following Monday he advertised all his property for sale and announced his determination to remove from the town.

—A London dispatch of Nov. 18th says: "The first fortnight of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's mission at Islington closed on Sunday. They held four services yesterday in Priory Hall, which was densely crowded at each meeting. The pressure of auditors during last week became greater with each successive service. Tickets were eagerly sought for days beforehand, and standing room was barely obtainable."

—The National Woman's Christian Temperance Union having failed through their committee to secure a day of prayer for temperance in the customary programme of the week of prayer, have decided to set apart the second Tuesday in January next as a day for special prayer in the churches for the work.

—The question of "caste" came up in the recent meeting of the American Missionary Association, the subject being the work in the South. The Advance says: "Shall we organize 'caste' churches in the South? No. Because 'caste' is un-Christian, equally in Georgia and in India." No discrimination is the wise policy proposed.

—At a recent meeting of Congregational ministers and missionaries recently held in New York, Miss Carter pleaded earnestly against war as a remedy for Mormonism, and affirmed that Christian schools were solving the problem by creating a public sentiment averse to polygamy. Multitudes, she said had turned from Mormonism, and the young people especially who have seen their mothers suffer, will have nothing to do with it.

—The General Conference of the Free Baptist church, at its recent session at Minneapolis, adopted an important resolution recommending that greater care be exercised in the reading of the Scriptures. The office of corresponding secretary was also created. The offer of M. A. Shepherd to give the association property valued at $50,000 for a publishing and school fund was accepted, and steps taken to utilize the liberal donation.

—The missionary committee of the M. E. church accepts the offer of Mrs. Philander Smith, of Little Rock, Ark., of $10,000 for a medical college at Nankin, China. The Rev. Mr. Goucher, of Baltimore, gives $3,000 conditionally for an Anglo-Japanese college at Tokio and $7,000 for theological schools at Foo Choo.

—The reports of colportage made to the October meeting of the Board of Managers of the American Bible Society, shows that in August 245 colporteurs visited 75,184 families, and supplied with Scriptures 7,272 families that were destitute of them, and 3,702 destitute individuals besides. The value of books sold was $11,832, and of those given away $2,201. Four new Bible societies were recognized as auxiliary—one in Dakota, one in Montana, and two in Texas. The total receipts in September were $39,606.55. The number of volumes issued was 96,017.

—The American Missionary Association is to have a series of twenty-seven meetings in New Hampshire and Vermont, to be addressed by able speakers from the North, the South and Africa, black and white, for the purpose of giving the churches and the entire public the best of fresh intelligence in regard to the successes, the condition, magnitude, reach and requirements of its work.

—The Indian Mission School at Fort Wrangel, Alaska, in which Mrs. McFarland is teaching, has increased in numbers and interest the past year, and many of the pupils have become Christians. One of the oldest girls has been married to a Christian Indian, and gone as a missionary to Upper Chilcat, where they both are doing faithful service. Several more of the girls are prepared to engage in mission work in their tribes as soon as the way opens.

—The Sunday school work in the State of Minnesota shows signs of a healthy and vigorous vitality. The first Sunday school in the State was organized at St. Paul thirty-seven years ago; now there are 1,444 schools with 76,000 scholars and 11,000 teachers and officers. During the last year there has been a net gain of 118 schools, nearly 4,000 scholars and 100 teachers and officers.

—The following are the Presbyterian churches in the United States with over 1,000 members: The Tabernacle, Brooklyn, 2,755; Third, Chicago, 2,085; Lafayette Avenue, Brooklyn, 1,920; Fifth Avenue, New York, 1,899; Fourth Avenue, New York, 1,463; Bethany Mission, Philadelphia, 1,407; First, Rochester, N. Y., 1,335; University Place, New York, 1,226; West Church, New York, 1,077.

—Thirty colporteurs are now employed by the British Amerieau Book and Tract Society, in Canada. They distribute Bibles and religious literature through the thinly populated districts of the interior, where book stores are scarce, and among the seamen and fishermen of the coast. Colportage is found to be the most effective way of reaching the Roman Catholic element, which constitutes a large factor in the population of the Provinces.

CONDEMNED.

The Congregational church of Tabor, Iowa, J. Whitman Cowan, pastor, adopted the following resolutions at a meeting Nov. 1st. The action is self-explanatory; and though we might say the brethren, through their charitable feelings for men who have been led aside into idolatry, err in exposing the fellowship of the Christian church to serious abuse, yet if the spirit of their resolution is carried out in the fear of God the lodge will be practically banished. The resolutions read:

WHEREAS, Difference of opinion exists as to the advisability of admitting members of Masonic and other secret orders to membership in this church, therefore, by the Congregational church of Tabor, be it

Resolved, That we, as a church, disapprove of secret, oath-bound orders in general, and of the Masonic society in particular, believing the last named especially to be anti- Christian in tendency and productive of great evil,

Resolved, That we are convinced that some members of secret societies are honest Christians according to their light, and give credible evidence of piety and Christian character,

Resolved, That all persons are qualified for admission to this church who give credible evidence of piety and Christian character, and consent to our Confession of Faith and Covenant.

Resolved, That while active membership in a secret order is a real and in the opinion of some, a sufficient objection to admission to this church, yet that we, as a church, do not deem it sufficient of itself, but that our church officers are hereby instructed to employ all due caution to ascertain the beliefs of candidates belonging to secret orders, in order to discover whether such candidates have a conscience void of offense, as touching their oaths and obligations to this order.

MOODY INSULTED IN IRELAND.

The Chicago Times, referring to Mr. Moody's recent brief visit to Ireland on his way to London, says:

"He engaged in no political controversy, but pursued the course he has pursued in the different cities in this country He advertised his meetings in the newspapers, hired halls in which to hold services, and paid his bills. He made no attack on any form of religion. He read the Bible and commented on passages selected from it. For doing this he was mobbed in one of the largest cities in the country. Every night his meetings were disturbed. Crowds of roughs surrounded the building where he preached and endeavored to drown his voice by their cries. They openly insulted the men and women who entered the hall where he was preaching the gospel. It was found necessary to invoke the aid of the government to protect his person and the building where he preached. The patriot papers of the island were silent in regard to these outrages. Irish patriots here and elsewhere do not appear to be indignant about them.

Brother Moody has preached in most of the countries where the English language is spoken, and was never treated with disrespect till he went to Ireland. People who did not sympathize with all his views, and did not entirely approve of all his methods, after all entertained a high respect for his honesty of purpose, and his devotion to what he considered his duty. The worst roughs in the wickedest city of America could not be induced to show disrespect to a man who has enjoyed the confidence and esteem of every community he has visited till now."

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

OBITUARY.

Died in Tyro, Seneca county, New York, May 2, 1883, ROBERT H. GOODWIN, in his 82d year. He was born at Queenstown, Canada, June 8, 1801, and in 1811 his father and mother moved to New York State, Seneca county, and bought a farm which he helped clear up. The country then was new and an unbroken forest—no roads, no conveyances whatever. Here he lived until a young man, then he went to Genesee county, town of Coverton. He bought a farm of seventy-five acres and lived there until his father died, in 1825, when he returned to his mother. His father left a family of eleven children including himself. Here he lived and here he died.

He experienced religion when quite a young man, and joined the Baptist church and was chorister a number of years. He was a sweet singer, a Bible scholar, a great reader, a searcher after the truth as it is in Jesus. He was always engaged in every good work, and his uniform kindly Christian character ever appeared in his home life and won the affection of all classes in the community. In his life all the graces of the Christian blended in beautiful harmony. A more upright man as well as brother could seldom be found. Although advanced in years he was vigorous both in mind and body until the last day of his life. He fell in the barn from the haymow, hurting his head and causing concussion of the brain. He lived forty-eight hours after the fall, but was unable to speak. He passed calmly and peacefully away. His funeral was held at his late residence. Rev. P. E. Smith preached from Job 14: 14; the Dutch Reformed and the Methodist minister taking part in the services. He was buried in the family burial ground. We miss thee, dear brother, we miss thee everywhere.

A VOICE FROM HEAVEN.

I shine in the light of God,
His image stamps my brow,
Through the shadows of death my feet have trod,
I reign in glory now.

I have found the joys of heaven,
I am one of the angel band,
To my head a crown is given
And a harp is in my hand.

Oh friend of my mortal years,
The trusted and true,
You're walking still the vale of tears,
But I wait to welcome you.

This story is told of the late Rev. Dr. Muhlenburg. It seems to have been a rule of St. Luke's Hospital that no religious services not Episcopalian should be conducted there. A terrified nurse once ran to the doctor, saying, "Doctor! doctor! a Methodist preacher is praying with one of the patients!" "Stop him," said he, "before his prayer reaches heaven."

The Need of the Nation

Can only be supplied by an acknowledgement of Christ's authority and an acceptance of His Divine Law as the

BASIS OF NATIONAL LIFE.

To secure this, and maintain all existing Christian features of the American government, is the object of the National Reform Association, an organization undenominational in character, with a membership of many thousands, including leading ministers, educators, authors and jurists all over our nation.

THE CHRISTIAN STATESMAN,

A large, elegantly printed sixteen-page journal, advocates the principles of this Association, and discusses all public questions in the light of the Christian religion. The Maintenance of our Sabbath Laws, and of the Christian Law of Marriage and Divorce, the use of the Bible in the Public Schools, the Prohibition of the Liquor Traffic, the Mormon Question, the Rights of the Indian and the Chinaman, receive constant attention in its columns. It gives thorough expositions of the International Bible Lessons, and their bearing on national questions is not overlooked. Price, $2.00 per year. ☞Sample copies free. Address,

Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the Lodge, thus showing the principles on which the order is founded. By a careful perusal of this work, a more thorough knowledge of the principles of the order can be obtained than by attending the Lodge for years. Every Mason, every person contemplating becoming a member, and even those who are indifferent on the subject, should procure and carefully read this work. An appendix is added of 32 pages, embodying which gives every sign, grip and ceremony of the Lodge together with a brief explanation of each. The work contains 429 pages and is substantially and elegantly bound in cloth. Price, 75 cents.

THE PUREST IS THE BEST.

In the selection of SUNDAY-SCHOOL PAPERS, the most important point to be considered is the moral tone of the subject matter. If this is of a questionable character, the papers should be shunned, no matter how large, how attractive, or how low the price. Such papers are

COSTLY AT ANY PRICE.

The country is being flooded with S. S. literature that is largely composed of what may be properly termed "RELIGIOUS FICTION," the tendency of which is to create a distaste for sound reading and foster an appetite for fiction of a more deleterious character.

The engravings of these papers are equally objectionable. In many cases a lady or girl dressed in the height of fashion is made the HEROINE OF A STORY, thus putting the highest sanction to extravagance and pride. With such instructors in our Sunday-schools we cannot expect the children to grow up with a love for sound literature and with correct ideas of Christian propriety. With a view of supplying S. S. papers, of a pure and elevating character, the publishers are issuing

FOUR MONTHLY PAPERS.

They are FREE FROM FICTION, and the cuts are chosen with great care. While they are thus carefully edited, they are not lacking in attractiveness. They are well printed on beautiful tinted paper. The children are delighted with them. The very low price at which this line of S. S. papers is issued, places them within the reach of even schools of limited means

LADIES' SOLID GOLD WATCHES!

Almost every young gentleman prides himself upon carrying a watch of some kind, and gentlemen can with perfect propriety, carry a silver watch, an imitation gold, or a nickel watch, provided it is a good time-keeper. Although ladies have the same pride about carrying a watch, and take the same pleasure in doing so that gentlemen do, still the great majority of ladies do not carry watches. There are two reasons for their not doing so. First it is not considered quite the proper thing for a lady to carry any but a Gold Watch, and second, Gold Watches have heretofore been so high in price that the majority of young ladies could not afford to own one. Realizing this condition of things, we have, after much time spent in experimenting, and at great expense perfected a Beautiful Ladies' Watch, with solid Gold Hunting cases, which we are enabled to sell at the extremely low price of FIFTEEN DOLLARS, making it the

and placing it within the reach of almost every young lady in the land. This watch is sold by retail firms at $25.00 each and upwards, but we sell thousands and are satisfied with a very small profit. Young gentlemen who have desired to make their favorite sister or sweetheart a present of a Watch, and who have been prevented by the high price of watches from doing so, can now purchase An Elegant Gold Watch, without feeling impoverished a whole year afterward. We make the cases of our New Ladies' Watch of Solid Gold, Elegantly Engraved, and in very truth, they are "Things of Perfect Beauty." They have fine Nickel Movements, and are fully guaranteed for time. Every Watch is put up in a beautiful velvet lined Case and sent by Registered Mail on receipt of $15.00. Or we will send the Watch C. O. D. if you send $3.00 on account, the balance to be paid on delivery. If you order before Christmas, and send full amount of cash, we will ENGRAVE YOUR INITIALS FREE OF COST. We send a Double Extra Fine Gold Plated Opera or Long Chain with the Watch on receipt of $3.00 additional. Send money by Registered Mail, Post Office Money Order, or Draft on New York to World Manf'g Co. 122 Nassau Street New York

We feel a real pleasure in calling our readers' attention to these splendid watches. A careful inspection satisfies us that it is one of the most beautiful, useful and thoroughly well made watches that ever adorned a lady's person. It is indeed an extraordinary bargain.

A MUSICAL INSTRUMENT

that will play any tune, and that any one, even a child, can operate.

The Organette has gained such a world-wide reputation, that a lengthy description of it is not necessary. It will be sufficient to say that it is a PERFECT ORGAN that plays mechanically all the sacred airs, popular music, songs, dances, etc. etc. It consists of three strong bellows and set of reeds with EXPRESSION box and SWELL. A strip of perforated paper represents the tune, and it is only necessary to place the paper tune in the instrument, as shown in the picture, and turn the handle, which both operates the bellows and propels the paper tune. The perforations in the paper allow the right reeds to sound and a perfect tune is the result, perfect in time, execution, and effect, without the least knowledge of music being required of the performer: even a little child can operate it as is shown in the picture, a little girl is playing a song and her playmates are singing the words. It is tuned in the key best suited for the human voice to sing by. It interests and entertains both old and young, assists in training the voice and AFFORDS HOURS OF SOCIAL AMUSEMENT. The Organetta is perfectly represented by the picture. It is made of solid black walnut, decorated in gilt, and is both handsome and ornamental. The price of similar instruments has hitherto been $8, and the demand has constantly increased until now there are over 75,000 in use. We are encouraged to place the Organetta on the market at this greatly reduced price, believing that the sale will warrant the reduction. The Organetta though similar in construction is an improvement upon our well-known Organette, which sells for $8 and $10. It contains the same number of reeds and plays the same tunes. Our offer is this: On receipt of $7 we will send the Organetta by express to any address, and include FREE $3.50 worth of music, or on receipt of $5 we will send it with over $1.50 worth of music FREE, or for $3.50 we will send it with small selection of music FREE. The price includes boxing and packing. These are agent's prices, and we will appoint the first purchaser from any town our agent, if be so desires. Address,

FARM NOTES.

NEED OF MORE FARM HOMES.

The tendency to monopolize and appropriate large tracts of land by one or more individuals and hold them for speculative purposes is exceedingly objectionable to the welfare of the community surrounding or contiguous to them. It is a well known fact that in every sparsely settled district there are but few churches, schools, postoffices, mills, manufactories, and transportation facilities.

In nearly every community there are some men who never seem to be happy unless farm after farm is added to the already great number of, but indifferently cultivated, acres of their original possessions. The tendency in all the oldest settled sections of country is to sell out to land-accumulating neighbors, who have been more prosperous than themselves, and go where land is cheap and buy larger farms. There is no fault more common than this. Farming operations, like many others, are often attempted on too large a scale for the means of the owner. No farmer should occupy more land than he can cultivate thoroughly, and constantly improve its fertility. Small farms, as a rule, are the most thoroughly tilled, and improved husbandry is the result. Small farms adorned with humble homes of reading farmers are important elements in estimating a nation's strength, greatness, and power of endurance in a struggle for national life or supremacy. The owners of large tracts of land too often have few conveniences of life, read but little, think but little, and manifest no disposition to make farm life what it should be—attractive, the home beautiful, and the center of a higher intellectual and moral life.—Farm and Fireside.

THE EFFECT OF COLD ON MILK.

The effects of a low temperature on milk have been fully examined. If cow's milk is immediately, or soon after being being drawn, placed in vessels at a temperature between freezing and 90 deg. Fahrenheit, and the initial temperature is maintained for twenty-four to thirty-six hours, it will be found that the nearer the temperature of the milk is to the freezing point the more rapid is the collection of cream, the amount of butter is greater, and the skimmed milk, the butter and the cheese are of better quality. These facts may be explained by Pasteur's observations on ferments and their effect, or the media in which they lie. It is possible that the refrigeration arrests the evolution of the living organism, which sets up fermentation and hinders the changes which are due to their growth. The facts stated indicate room for improvement in the methods of storage and preservation of milk. To keep milk at its original quality, extreme cleanliness and a low temperature are absolutely necessary. In the north of Europe the value of cold is already recognized, and in warmer climates the need for its assistance is greater. In this there is nothing impracticable, since running streams can be used to aid refrigeration. When the quality of the milk is of great importance, ice may be employed.—Sel.

SPOILING HORSES FEET.—It is almost impossible to get a horse shod without having the frog cut away. All veterinary surgeons, all horsemen, all leading blacksmiths agree that the frog should not be pared one particle—not even trimmed. No matter how pliable and soft the frog is, cut it away smooth on all sides, and in two days it will be dry and hard as a chip. You might as well cut all the leaves off trees and expect them to flourish as to pare away the frog and have a healthy foot. The rough, spongy part of the frog is to the foot what leaves are to the tree—the lungs. Never have a red-hot shoe put upon the foot to burn it level. If you can find a blacksmith who is mechanic enough to level the foot without red-hot iron, employ him. If you do not think so, try the red-hot poker on your finger nail, and see how it will affect the growth of that. There are many other important points in shoeing horses; but these two are of more importance than all the rest, level to the apprehension of men not skilled in horses, and the two most disregarded.—Our Dumb Animals.

DR. JOHN BULL'S

FEVER and AGUE

Or CHILLS and FEVER.

AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamp on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN J. SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, of Louisville, Ky. Examine well the label on each bottle. If my private stamp is not on each bottle do not purchase, or you will be deceived.

NIGHTS IN A BAR-ROOM

T. S Arthur's great temperance book, complete and illustrated. By mail, 5c each; 50c per doz. By express, $3.50 per 100.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC THE GREAT SOURCE OF CRIME.

Leaves from the diary of an old lawyer.—By Hon. A. B Richmond, author of "Court and Prison," etc. A book of intense interest, rivaling the famous "Diary of a Physician," and, in its truthful, terrible pictures of the power and crime of intemperance, excelling the well-known "Ten Nights in a Bar-room." The temperance issue of the present time is Shall prohibition be partial or entire? Shall the branches of the death-bearing tree be pruned and trimmed, or shall the tree itself be cut down and its stump be torn up by the roots? The answer of "Leaves from the Diary" is, "Cut down the tree, tear up the roots, leave not a shoot or shred behind." It is certainly a very strong and eloquent volume Complete edition on fine, heavy paper, with colored lithograph of Sewall's stomach plates By mail, 30c each, $4 per doz. By express, $20 per 100. Abridged edition, by mail, 15c; $1.25 per doz. By express, $9 per 100.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC AND THE SOBER CITIZEN.

An able and telling work, by Rev. J. H. Sherman, which brings out the effects of the liquor traffic in a new light. The following are some of the commendations of the first edition.

"The author drives the nails of conviction through and clinches them."—N Y Christian Advocate.

"Speakers and workers in the temperance field will find valuable aid in this pamphlet. It is crowded with convincing facts."—Zion's Herald

"One of the ablest reviews of the drink curse ever issued from the press."—The Morning and Day of Reform.

"The arguments are put in telling form."—Judge Pittman.

New revised and enlarged edition. By mail, 10c each, $1 per doz By express, $6 per 100.

DRINKS FROM DRUGS.

A startling exposure of the liquor traffic, by Eli Johnson. A book that cannot fail to arouse the American people to the gigantic swindle now being perpetrated. The writer was offered $10,000 by a leading brewer to keep still Liquor not only doctored, but made entirely from drugs. Extracts from a whole library of secret books, giving receipts for making and doctoring; advertisements of essences, fac similes of labels, engravings, etc., etc. Claret, port, sherry, champagne, whisky, brandy, gin, rum, etc., all out of one barrel. And made at less than 25 cents a quart. Wine that never saw grape juice; cider that never saw apples; beer factories in place of breweries, fine cream ale without barley or brewing; whisky from arsenic; millions of gallons of liquo: that pays no revenue tax. The farmer's corn and barley "all in your eye." A wholesale liquor store in a ten-foot square cellar; more French wine sold in New York City than is produced in the whole of France. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By Express, $6 per 100.

W. C. T. U. ORGANIZATION AND WORK.

A book of general information on how to organize and run successfully a Woman's Christian Temperance Union. This book should be widely distributed among W C. T. U. presidents, pastor's wives and other representative women. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

HOME PROTECTION.

A lawyer's view of it. By J. C. Wells, attorney-at-law. The question of female suffrage for the protection of home ably discussed from a lawyer's standpoint. A book for the times. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

BAND OF HOPE RECITERS.

172 pages. 164 choice recitations of poetry and prose, containing some of the choicest bits of temperance material for the platform ever uttered. Accompanied by an article on elocution. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

GENERAL TEMPERANCE SONG BOOK.

"Temperance Songs," a Book for Adult Societies.—Eighty-three choice pieces, both words and music (old and new tune combination) choice selections from standard temperance collections; many choice new pieces. Book carefully edited by David C. Cook. Will prove just what is wanted by every temperance society Price in strong cardboard covers, by mail, 10c each; $1 per dozen; by express, $5 per 100.

TEMPERANCE ANTHEM BOOK.

Temperance Anthems.—A new idea; nothing else of the kind in existence. Will insure good music by the choir at temperance meetings Forty-eight pages of choice anthems by ablest writers By mail, 15c each; $1.50 per doz. By express, $10 per 100.

BAND OF HOPE SONG BOOK.

Band of Hope Songs.—Fifty-seven choice pieces for juvenile temperance gatherings, Bands of Hope, etc. Old, familiar tunes, also choice new words and music. Words far in advance of anything else issued. By mail, 8c each; 75c per doz. By express, $4 per 100.

DANIEL'S BAND.

A temperance concert exercise, with parts suitable for all ages; entirely new Songs, recitations, dialogues, etc., of a thoroughly aggressive character; sure to carry weight with the rendering of it. By mail, 5c each; 50c per dozen. By express, $2 per 100.

THE COLD WATER ARMY.

For a primary temperance concert exercise. An entirely new exercise, containing songs and recitations, dialogues, etc., suitable for primary scholars. A pleasing and telling concert on temperance. By mail, 5c each; 50c per dozen. By express, $2 per 100.

LEVANT MOROCCO BINDING.

The Persian Seal bindings are the best kept by most Bible dealers, and usually pass for the best teachers' Bibles made; and, to all appearance, they are so. There is, however, a better wearing binding of which the Persian Seal is a good imitation; this is known as "Levant Morocco" In all respects the Levant morocco Bible corresponds with the Persian Seal description, except as to leather used for cover which, though looking like the Persian Seal, is stronger, and will last a lifetime.

Prices on genuine Levant Morocco bindings:

For $2.50 The same style of binding, medium size. Postage, 12c.

THE PERSIAN SEAL BINDING

Is very handsome and durable. It is this style of binding which is so much admired by Bible readers. Please notice particularly that these Bibles are kid lined and silk sewed. Many Bibles in this style outwardly are lined with black paper and sewed with thread in place of silk.

For $4.50—Small size. Postage, 10c.
For $5.50—Medium size. Postage, 12c.
For $8.00—Large size. Postage, 20cts.

Handsome Gift Bibles at Low Prices.

For 45c. Embossed morocco cover, gilt edges, gilt title on back. Very neat and durable. This is the handsomest 45c. gift Bible we have ever seen. Postage, 5c.

For 70c. Similar size and style of binding to our 60-cent Bible; square corners, brass bound, with clasp and handsome tasseled book-mark; also medallion inserted on side in gold and red.

This was a new importation with the fall of 1882, and a very pretty design. It should be seen to be appreciated. (See cut.)
Postage, 6c.

For 60c. Morocco cover, brass bound and plated, with handsome gilt clasp and gilt edges; two patterns; square and round corners. Exquisite lettering on side; printed in large clear type. Bibles no better are sold as high as $1 and $2. Postage, 6c.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—Washington news is now all about the intrigues to secure the next Speakership of the House.

—It is reported that a body of Mormon lobbyists, headed by ex-Delegate Cannon, have settled in Washington for the winter, with plenty of money to prevent legislation hostile to the church.

—Early after the opening of Congress a bill will be introduced by a Northwestern member to amend the pre-emption, homestead and timber culture laws. It is not proposed to repeal the pre-emption law, but to exclude from its operation fine timber lands and provide for the sale of the timber at public auction after appraisement.

—Ex-Senator Spencer, of Alabama, has been arrested at his home in Nevada, and is now in the custody of a United States Marshal, charged with contempt of court. He was employed by the Postoffice Department to work up testimony in the star-route cases, and was regularly subpœnaed as a witness, but failed to appear, and fled to Europe to avoid testifying.

—In the Proteus court of inquiry Dr. Harrison, surgeon of the Proteus, testified that the crew acted in a most villainous manner; in fact, were perfect pirates. They did nothing toward saving the provisions. Captain Pike told witness he had no power to keep the men from stealing. They were a set of scoundrels.

—A vandal has cut some thirteen pages out of an encyclopedia on chemistry in the Chicago Public Library. The pages stolen contained an article on nitro-glycerine. A reward of fifty dollars has been offered for the apprehension of the person or persons.

—The Hon. Emory A. Storrs, Saturday, at Central Music Hall, this city, delivered for the benefit of the Woman's Hospital a lecture on "Creeds in Politics," the lecture being an eloquent refutation of Mgr. Capel's assertion that the Roman Catholic church is the mirror of republicanism.

—Three persons—two architects and a contractor—are by name charged with responsibility for the disaster at Madison, Wis., three weeks ago to-day. The two architects are blamed for their bad plans. The contractor is reprehended for not mending a pier when it gave evidence of weakness.

—A tornado last Thursday morning passed over Arkansas and Southern Missouri, going northwestward, and reached as far as Carmi, Ill. At Melbourne, Ark., the funnel ruined many houses. The home of the sheriff was demolished and the family buried in the debris, the sheriff being killed and six people wounded. A Batesville, Ark., special says the cyclone nearly destroyed the village of La Crosse. The fine academy was destroyed and only six houses are left. Three persons were killed and several were seriously injured. There is great suffering at Melbourne and La Crosse.

—Two terrible human butcheries occurred last week, one near Jackson, Mich., in which a whole family was murdered and a large amount of money stolen; the other at Laconia, N. H., where a whole household excepting one was murdered, the only object being apparently to conceal another murder.

—The German Crown Prince reached Madrid at noon Friday and met with a warm reception. In the evening the Spanish Royal family and the Prince attended the opera. Madrid newspapers oppose an alliance between Spain and Germany.

—Edward Wolff, a socialist, was arrested at London for having infernal machines and explosives in his residence, with which, it is alleged, he intended to destroy the German Embassy. Among his documents was a threatening letter to Count Von Munster, the German Embassador.

—The North China Herald publishes a secret imperial document appointing Lun Generalissimo of the Black Flags in Tonquin. The Chinese Government will supply funds and munitions of war to the force now raising in the Province of Yun Nan. These troops will assist the Black Flags in repelling the French forces, should they invade the Southern Province of China, but must not cross the frontier. The Chinese Embassador has informed the British Foreign Secretary at Paris that war is certain between China and France.

—The counsel for the prosecution of O'Donnell have abandoned the charge that the murder of Carey was deliberately planned, and admitted to-day that the prisoner was probably unaware that Carey was on board of the steamer on which he was also a passenger until its arrival at Cape Town. This excludes a mass of evidence obtained for the defense at great cost in Cape Colony, but it will simplify the trial and is regarded as a preliminary victory for the defense.

—The London Standard publishes a communication giving the outlines of the workings of an Irish-American secret society, to which those who take the oath surrender their entire liberty. In it every member watches his fellow, and spies are so plentiful that the movements of all the conspirators are vigilantly watched.

—A dispatch to Reuter's Telegram Company, dated Cairo, Egypt, Nov. 22, says: The army of Hicks Pasha has been destroyed by the forces of El Mahdi, the False Prophet. Intelligence of the disaster was brought to Khartoum by a Coptic official. The fighting is said to have continued from the 3d to the 5th inst., and to have resulted in the complete annihilation of the Egyptian troops. It is stated that a European artist was the only person who escaped. The forces of El Mahdi comprised, it is estimated, 300,000 men, and included dervishes, Bedouins, mulattoes, and regulars. The battle was fought near El Obeid.

A PRESENT.

Have you thought of making your friend a New Year's present of the Christian Cynosure? It will be sent 14 months, from Nov. 1, 1883, to Jan. 1, 1885, for only $2.00, if ordered before Nov. 15. Can you spend that amount of money in a more acceptable or profitable way than to make sixty visitations to your friend through the agency of our paper? WILL YOU TRY IT?

NOTICE.

Persons write occasionally, saying, "I sent a remittance so and so, but the tag on my paper it not changed." Such inquiries are proper, and the explanation is this: when a subscription is received it is entered at once on the book and the letter filed for future reference if needed, but the printed mailing list is not changed until a sufficient number are received to require the printing of a new list. If but few subscriptions are received, the change may be delayed for a month or more, but when the list fiills up rapidly it requires frequent revision. If the date on your paper is not changed within four weeks after you remit it is the safest way to drop a card to this office.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

HOLDEN WITH CORDS,

OR THE POWER OF THE SECRET EMPIRE. A faithful representation in story of the evil influence of Freemasonry, by E. E. FLAGG, author of "Little People," "A Sunny Life," etc. This is a thrillingly interesting story, accurately true to life because mainly a narration of historical facts. 384 pages. In cloth, $1; per doz., $9. Paper. 50c; per doz., $4.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"There is no important history extant but has connected with it numerous other histories of which it was the initial point, or the dominating influence. The abduction and murder of Morgan set ten thousand secret springs in motion, as the surreuder of the charters of so many lodges at that time, and the severing of their connection with the order of some forty thousand of its members indicated. This story is one of these histories, and is a collection of facts woven into a story. It cannot fail to he read with interest."—Free Methodist, Chicago.

"The exciting scenes of the fall of 1826, at Batavia, N. Y., when Wm. Morgan was murdered by Masonry, are woven into the story so as to give the truth of History a setting of attractiveness. The forty chapters of the volume are soon compassed by the eager reader who begins the volume. This volume ought to be read and will be sought as its merits become known."—United Brethren in Christ.

"The republication of the Reform Story which run through the columns of the Cynosure for nearly a year is at last completed, and the book so anxiously expected by thousands of our readers has come from the press of Ezra A. Cook. The book is finely bound and fairly introduces the reader to the treasures within. The publisher has made occasional selections from Masonic works to verify the statements of the text; these make a helpful addition for some who can afford no more complete an armory of this kind."—Christian Cynosure.

"It is one of the most fascinating narratives we ever read and teaches its lesson in a manner not soon to be forgotten. It is evidently written for the heart and its words go to the heart. It is singularly free from wild denunciation. Those who are interested in the secret society question would do well to form the acquaintance of this interesting work."—Lutheran Standard, Columbus, O.

"In an incidental way the story tells much about the manner of conducting lodges and much about the spirit and methods of Masonry. The story covers the period of the abduction and murdering of William Morgan. The strategic position from which the author writes put a charm in the book, while it gives a good opportunity to show the workings of the order. We wish all the people would read it."—Telescope.

A proposition has been made that every pupil in the public schools of Pennsylvania contribute one cent for the erection of a fine monument to Thaddeus Stevens. Dr. J. H. MacCreary of Lancaster suggests the plan, and the Capitol grounds at Harrisburg is the place designated for the monument. The plan is a noble one and should be worthily executed. A monument from the children to the "father of the common-school system of Pennsylvania," would set up in a hundred thousand impressive minds a memorial to the unswerving integrity and the dauntless courage that so long defended the rights of the poor and down-trodden.

The trial of O'Donnell for the murder of Carey, the Dublin informer, at Cape Town, began in London on Friday morning. The prisoner was defended by the ablest attorneys that could be obtained by his Irish friends: Russell, member of Parliament, Sullivan, Guy, and Roger A. Prior of confederacy fame was sent over from New York. But in spite of all this array the case was given to the jury Saturday afternoon, the verdict "Guilty" returned, and the wretched man sentenced and borne off to his cell amid insane and frantic ravings at England. The jury was an intelligent one, and conscientious, for they returned thrice before the Judge for instruction and information; the Judge conducted the case fairly; the eloquence of the defending counsel was surpassing; but all could not break down the evidence which proved a premeditated murder. The report early last week that the government counsel conceded that O'Donnell acted in self-defense was doubtless a mistake. The swift and terrible conclusion of this fearful tragedy of lodge against state thus comes to an end, and in a few days the law will be vindicated on the scaffold.

The XLVIIIth Congress began its sessions at twelve o'clock Monday and the roll-call showed 316 members present. In the House caucusing of both parties had decided the Speakership, and Carlisle of Kentucky was elected by 191 Democratic votes to 112 Republican cast for Keifer, the Speaker of the last Congress. The fight was strongest between Randall and Carlisle in the Democratic caucus; and was so managed as to rouse the Southern members and make them unanimous for the Kentucky man. The message of the President and the reports of the different Departments were submitted late in the afternoon. Of the measures that will be presented to this Congress, a proposition to amend the Constitution with a prohibition of polygamy giving Congress the power to enforce the amendment, is one of the most important, since it will put the Mormon trials into the United States courts. There is no hope that a Congress so largely Democratic will do anything to relieve the strained condition of the South produced by the late Supreme Court decision. The pension business which is developing heavy frauds ought to receive attention, and there will be plenty of time wasted over the tariff and reduction of the revenue.

The disposition of the surplus revenue of the government will be one of the most difficult questions for Congress to settle. The abundance of money is the harvest time of thieves, lobbyists and claim agents. Last Congress cut down the revenue from tariff, dropped most of the internal revenue, retaining only the tax on whisky and tobacco, because the moral sentiment of the country regards that tax as a check upon the vicious habits that feed upon these poisons. Foreseeing that the whisky tax would be with difficulty maintained unless tariff was nearly abolished, Logan proposed that it be distributed among the States to help the common school fund. The argument was against him. A proposition from Pennsylvania of late is to the effect that the surplus revenue be divided among the States. Ex-Secretary Blaine on Wednesday published a letter objecting to this proposition because: first, of the uncertainty of the volume of revenue, the divided duty it would impose upon Congress, by which Senator and Representatives would possibly curtail appropriations for works of National necessity, so that the more may go to their representative States; and, third, that the time is approaching when it is possible the National Government's revenue may not reach its present great proportions. Mr. Blaine proposed that the whisky tax be turned over to the State treasuries or allow each State to tax its own distilleries. No one could have started more discussion over this question, and everyone is forming an opinion. It would reconcile most people to Logan's proposition, which ex-Senator Pomeroy reviews in a modified form, if there could be any certainty that the liquor tax would be used to fix in the minds of a new generation a due regard for the enormous evils of intemperance. But there is none: and the whisky business viewed from whatever standpoint only reveals horror and crime and misery.

J. B. WALKER.

When the color line was drawn the other day through the National College of Pharmacy in Washington, eight students put themselves on the right side of an insane prejudice and thirty-eight left the institution. The occasion was the admission of a colored student, the trustees standing by their order that the school recognized no distinction of color merely. The Supreme Court decision leaves the Civil Rights Act in force in the District, so that the offended students have no alternative but to go outside the jurisdiction (so far as this law is concerned), of the United States government into Maryland or Virginia, to get their foolish notions satisfied.

LUTHER AND THE REFORMATION.

BY REV. A. M. MILLIGAN, D. D.

To understand Martin Luther and appreciate his work, it is of the utmost importance that we realize the condition of the world prior to his birth. The centuries previous to the Reformation are characterized as "The Dark Ages." The mass of mankind were not only profoundly ignorant, but their minds were cramped, confined, and locked up until as has been justly said, "Europe then lay under a deep lethargy." The minds of men, restrained by priestly ban from the exercise of private judgment and shut out from the study of the Word of God, had passed into a comateos condition. Even the training of the schools consisted of scholastic subtleties calculated to repress rather than develop the soul and to render the gloom more dense until Europe, like Egypt of old, was enveloped in a "darkness that might be felt." "Darkness covered the land and gross darkness the people."

If conscience in any were aroused from this sleep, it was instantly soothed to rest by the confessional and priestly pardon, and even indulgences to sin could be purchased for sums of money proportional to the magnitude of the crime and the wealth of the criminal. If by these means sin had not been all removed previous to dissolution, a "limbus patrum" was conveniently arranged where by purgatorial fires, but more effectually by priestly prayers and masses purchased at a given price, the soul could be completely cleansed and fitted for the abodes of the blessed.

The consequences of these doctrines upon the morals of both the people and the priesthood were disastrous in the extreme. There was no fear of God before their eyes. This corruption of morals increased as you approached toward Rome and culminated in the priesthood. Forbidden to marry they lapsed into concubinage or more grievous forms of uncleanness. Erasmus, himself a monk and no reformer, testifies that "a man might be a drunkard, a whoremonger, an extortioner, an envious and malignant brute; but so long as he approved himself to a superior who, perhaps, was as bad or worse than himself, it need not interfere with his standing as a priest." Avarice and extortion became characteristics of the order. The superstitions of the people were employed to enrich the church. St. Peter's at Rome was built with funds accumulated by the sale of indulgences. Half or two-thirds of the landed property passed into the hands of the church. Seventy infamous crimes were proved against Pope John XXIII. Innocent VIII. had sixteen illigitimate sons and daughters. The names of Alexander VI. and Cæsar Borgia have become the synonyms for monsters of iniquity, treachery and cruelty.

It was not only in the ecclesiastical world that darkness reigned, and priestly rule held despotic sway, the governments of the nations and their peoples were bound down under the tyrannical sway of Rome. And not only did kings and emperors accept their crowns from the hands of him who claimed to be "king of kings" and "lord of lords." But "his holiness" boldly assumed the prerogative of laying an interdict on the kingdoms, depriving them of all religious privileges, vacating the thrones and releasing the subjects from their allegiance to those sovereigns who had incurred his displeasure, or who declined to accede to his demands. King John of England surrendered his kingdom to the Pope in return for papal aid in suppressing the rising spirit of liberty among his people, and crushing out English freedom.

Henry IV. of Germany, "Holy Roman emperor," having incurred the displeasure of Gregory VII. was forced to cross the Alps in the dead of winter and stand in the courtyard of the castle at Canossa clad in the shirt of a penitent, for three days, entreating to be admitted to the pope's presence—while "his holiness" was enjoying himself in the company of his mistress, the Countess Matilda. This presents a vivid picture of the awe inspired by the supernatural powers supposed to be wielded by the popes; the highest secular potentate of earth, quaking with cold, in the attitude of the most abject suppliant, and treated with the utmost contempt by the spiritual despot. Notwithstanding this humiliation Henry holds an honorable place in history for his manly resistance to the excessive pretensions of the papacy, but they were too strong for him. Centuries passed before the secular power of the Romish See was seriously weakened.

In return for this abject subjection of rulers, the popes exerted their vast powers over the minds of the subjects to hold them in the most degrading servitude to their rulers. Held in the bonds of ignorance and superstition, they became an easy prey to the most rapacious of tyrants; taught to believe the doctrines of "the divine right of kings," and "passive obedience," they lay helpless and unresisting under the heel of the tyrant who robbed and spoiled them, held their lives in his hand, and shed their blood like water. Satan most desired such an engine for the enslavement of human souls.

It was in those days of darkness and blood, of spiritual and secular despotism, when a herald could stand upon the steps of St. Peter s at Rome and proclaim the universal supremacy of the Roman See over all churches and nations nemo contra dicente, that the lone voice of an Augustine monk was heard rising amid the darkness and silence in earnest protest against the blasphemous assumption, and asserting the supreme authority of God and the rights of man.

The Reformation was the greatest movement of the centuries, the greatest upheaval, political, ecclesiastical, and social of the ages.

The man of the Reformation was Martin Luther. Zuingle, Calvin and Knox, Melancthon, Staupitz and Erasmus and the Elector Frederick, had each their important place to fill and their important part in the work, yet the master spirit was the monk of Erfurth.

While Geneva was perched up among her Alpine heights, and Scotland lay among her brown heaths and shaggy woods, it was in Germany, in the very heart of Europe, under the very shadow of the throne of the Cæsars, that the banner of the Reformation was first displayed, and the clarion note was sounded that challenged the powers of darkness, and called the spirit of light and liberty to the conflict.

Luther was in the very highest sense of the word a hero. No man ever entered the lists of mortal combat against more fearful odds. No man was ever so left to depend under God, on his own single judgment and personal courage. The leading acts of his life startled and alarmed alike his friends and his foes. When he nailed his ninety-five theses to the door of the church at Wittenburg, not one of his most intimate friends was made aware of his intentions, and all stood aghast at his audacity. When he burned the papal bull and excommunicated the Pope and denounced the hierarchy of Rome as the anti-Christ, the world raised its hands in holy horror, and his nearest friends trembled at the temerity of the fearless monk. And when at the Diet of Worms he stood alone before the Emperor Charles V., whose kingdom extended across both hemispheres; his brother, the Archduke Ferdinand and six electors of the Empire; twenty-four dukes, among them many whose names excite horror in our minds when we recall their bloody deeds; eight margraves; thirty archbishops, bishops and prelates, seven embassadors, including those of France and England; deputies, princes, counts and barons and the Pope's nuncio—two hundred magnates, the highest dignitaries of Europe;—when Martin Luther, warned at every step of his danger, resolutely marched to Worms; entered that Diet; humbly, calmly, but firmly acknowledged his writings; reverently declared his belief of their truth and his refusal to retract; and pronounced his solemn warning to the Emperor and his Council to beware lest they be found fighting against God, we have before us the grandest spectacle of moral heroism of modern times. For moral grandeur and sublimity it approaches nearest to that incomparable glory of the God Man in meeting the wrath of heaven, earth and hell for the redemption of our race. Luther was not dragged in chains before that tribunal; bonds stronger than iron chains held him; the love of Christ constrained him; the glory of God and the salvation of souls were at stake, and his faith did not falter. "I neither can nor will retract. I stand here and can say no more. God help me. Amen."

That heroic act of the intrepid monk struck terror to the hearts of his many and mighty foes. Pallid with mingled fear and wrath they looked at each other in mute astonishment and realized their ignoble defeat.

The news of this daring and successful stroke spread through the world and like an electric spark awoke the nations from the lethargy of ages, kindled a gleam of hope in the breasts of the enslaved millions, and made tyrants tremble on their thrones.

I leave to others the task of tracing before you the influence of the Reformation of the sixteenth century upon the religious condition of the world, while I glance briefly at its influence upon the civil liberties of mankind.

The statesmanship of the world requires to have its attention called just now to the connexion between the religion of a people and their liberty. The papacy of the dark ages bound the nations of Europe in chains of hopeless bondage, the Reformation burst those chains, emancipated human thought, and melted the fetters and manacles from the feet and hands of the toiling millions. Luther unchained the Bible and gave it to his countrymen in their native tongue, thereby not only enriching their language and opening to them the rich treasures of divine grace for their salvation, but also thereby revealing to them that truth whereby Jesus Christ makes his people free. "He is a free man whom the truth makes free and all are slaves besides." "Where the Spirit of the Lord is there is liberty." "The Lord hath anointed me to preach deliverance to the captives, the opening of the prison to them that are bound; to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord," the year of jubilee.

The Reformation was the dawn of the day of the world's emancipation from the bondage of ages. The Latin races rejected it and the result has been that Italy, France, Spain and Portugal have lain for four centuries under the double bondage of popish superstition and civil despotism; while the Teutonic races, which accepted the Reformation have been the pioneers of human liberty the world over. Witness the ereetion of the Swiss republic, organized by the great reformer of Geneva, John Calvin. Witness the struggle in the lowlands between papacy and despotism under Phillip II. of Spain and the Duke of Alva, and republican liberty and the Protestant religion under the Prince of Orange, William the Silent. Witness the struggle for English liberty between the Puritans and their popish tyrants, the heroic defense of their liberties by the Scotch Covenanters against their popish tyrants the last of the Stuarts.

And when we look at our own proud Republic, standing before the world as the beacon of hope to the oppressed nationalities, what do we see in this broad land and its noble people but the first ripe fruit of the great Reformation.

In the mysterious providence of God this land was discovered when Martin Luther was just nine years old. The son of the Mansfield miner was singing his sweet child song in the home of his parents, or borne in the arms of his father to the house of his teacher when the great discoverer first sighted land in the New World. These two elements, though separated by thousands of miles of stormy seas, are intimately associated in the arrangements of divine providence. While the one was opening to civilization a new world, the other was preparing a community with which to people it. When, after more than a century of vain effort on the part of popish powers to colonize this land, the Reformation had educated the middle classes of the Old World in the knowledge of the Scriptures and the principles of civil liberty, God permitted the malignity of popish superstition and the despotic spirit of arbitrary rule engendered thereby, to burst forth in fierce persecution, to shake the nations and sift the seed with which he would plant the virgin soil of the new world. The massacre of St. Bartholomew and the revocation of the Edict of Nantes drove the French Huguenot from his home. The fires of Smithfield drove the Puritans to New England. The persecutions of Phillip II. and the Duke of Alva drove the Hollanders from their Lowlands to seek new homes on the banks of the Hudson. The Irish massacre in the Green Isle, and the raids of Claverhouse and the Highland host in Scotland sent into enforced or voluntary exile the Presbyterians of Ireland and the Covenanters of Scotland to seek an asylum here.

These persecutions through which they passed taught them the lesson that "resistance to tyrants is obedience to God," and nerved them to resist the colonial yoke; while the page of inspiration taught them the principles of republican government. Why have popish lands so signally failed in their efforts to establish republican institutions? Why is our neighbor republic of Mexico in a state of chronic insurrection? Her Catholic population and her Jesuitical priesthood furnish the answer. Why did the gallant French nation fail to maintain their republic in the beginning of this century almost cotemporary with ours? The answer is manifest, its foundation was laid on the shifting sands of a popish and infidel population, and they attempted to erect their building without God. And now again France is once more trying the experiment of republican institutions, but between popery seeking to re-establish the empire, and atheism and infidelity leading to communism and anarchy, the ship of state is tossed with wind and wave as they attempt to sail between Scylla and Charybdis.

Why did Spain under Gen. Prim and the eloquent Castelar so signally fail in the late attempt to establish a republic? And why did Rome led by the brave Garibaldi and the eloquent Mazzini fail? Let Garibaldi answer. He says, "In our republican generosity we spared the priesthood and by their intrigues the republic was overturned; but should Rome ever again enjoy a republic the priesthood must go; so help us God."

The very soul of the Romish hierarchy is despotism. The motto of the last of the Stuarts was "Nae bishop, nae king." The spirit of atheism is anarchy; true liberty and republican government are the offspring of Protestant Christianity.

Although Luther did not foresee the effects which the Reformation was to produce to civil society, and was so absorbed in the religious features of his work that he gave little heed to the disorders in the political world; though he had not that insight of civil liberty or that organizing power possessed by Zuingle, Calvin or Knox, yet he builded better than he knew, and planted seeds the magnitude of whose harvest he little dreamed. While Germany to-day celebrates with pride the glory of her Luther and seeds of human freedom which he scattered to the breeze, we in this far off land, enjoying the harvest homes, may well join the glad refrain with songs of gratitude as with our bosoms full of sheaves we return rejoicing.

THE ENGLISH CHURCHES.

BY REV. JOHN BOYES.

In the various congresses, annual meetings and conferences of the Established and Free churches of England which have recently been held, we have got a bird's-eye view of the ideas which are surging in the minds of the leaders of the denominations, the fears which are depressing, and the hopes which are inspiring them.

The difference between an Established church and a Free church may be summed up in saying that, an Established church is the creation of human law, is strongest in periods of decadent belief; its characteristics being almost necessarily political and social; not always having the freedom to obey the truths with which it has been entrusted. In it the expediencies and compromises of statecraft find a congenial home; while it generally thinks more of the maintenance of the constitution than the good of the people. Indeed it is more of a static than a dynamic force in society, being satisfied with the things to which it has already attained, and seeking its authority and ideals in the hoary past. On the contrary, the Free church is one that has been created by affinities of thought and life, giving authority to principles, receiving inspiration from ideals, thinking more of the good of the people than the maintenance of the constitution, regarding religion as the nurse and master of sovereign and subject alike, striving for a grander development and contending for loftier things than mere material good.

It is of course perfectly natural, for the members of all churches to defend and sustain their own. Sir Stafford Northcote, has been using this liberty during his late political campaign in Wales. Speaking at the political meetings, he tried to impress upon the Welsh people, that it would not be easy to disestablish the church of England, that supposing they did so, they would not be the gainers thereby; and that the disendowments which must follow disestablishment, would probably not be applied to the spread of religion. The Wels people will doubtless consider themselves as the best judges on these points. As the Established churches are nearly empty in the Principality, the people preferring to attend and support the Free churches, the appropriation of the endowments to educational, or some unsectarian purpose, would certainly to that extent benefit the people at large. The day however, for unanimity of opinion has not yet arrived. The Bishop of St. David's, Wales, thinks that the salvation of the Established church is to come from the laity. He strongly advocates the institution of a separate and inferior order of ministry, whose duties would not be incompatible with secular avocations. This is saying that while the clergy are to have a good, legal and social position, and to be maintained out of the public resources, the laymen who earn their own living in a secular way, are to do what the clergy have failed to do.

In the recent Church Congress at Reading, Sir John Mowbray, speaking on behalf of the High Church, said that unless these Congresses were held, the laity would demand admission to Convocation, which would not be reform but revolution. The High Church notion seems to be, to satisfy the laity by giving them the chance to talk, but reserving legislative power for the ecclesiastics. Sir G. K. Richards said that if the union of the church and state was to be maintained, the church must become, in a much more true and thorough sense than now, the church of the great bulk of the nation. He maintained that what was wanted for the stability of the church, was the constitution of a governing body which should represent all its sections, all its schools of thought, and all its diversities of opinion.

Mean w h e the Free churches are pushing their views of disestablishment, while at the same time they are using their energies in the evangelization of the masses of the people. We wait the result.

Grimsby, England, Nov. 1883.

STARS!

BY REV. B. F. WORRALL.

Ever seen stars, did you say? Of course we have, many a time and in diverse places. When we were a boy we had a pair of skates, of that sort known as rockers, or "rocker dumps," perhaps so called from their ability to dump the wearer at any moment, causing him to see what was invisible to others, and, when interrogated as to what he had seen, to cry out, "My stars!"

Oh! that is not the sort you mean? Well, we have seen luminaries of a different character. Some of them were stars of the first magnitude (they being judges of their dimensions), and were not unfrequently found in those constellations known outside of astronomical circles, as associations, conferences, assemblies and councils, where they would shine, and shine, and keep on shining until all the little planets were eclipsed and had nothing to do but to revolve around a recognized center, ever and anon exclaiming, "We are so humble." And yet, doubtless, they were very thankful that they were allowed an humble position in that resplendent galaxy yclept Ursus Major. Ego, which being interpreted means, Big I, the Bear.

Still wroug again, did you say? Ah! perhaps you want to know whether we have ever seen any Morning Stars. Yes; we have, and no mistake. True, we never saw John the Baptist, the harbinger of the Son of Righteousness. Nor did we set eyes on Wickliffe, the Morning Star of the Reformation. Nor have we seen Luther, Wesley, Knox and a host of others whose appearing foretold the coming day when Right would obtain a decisive victory over Wrong. Nor was it our privilege to look in the face of Honest Old Abe, the stroke of whose pen ushered in that glorious emancipation day for which so many had been hoping and praying. And yet, we have no hesitancy in saying that we have seen morning stars, not a few, the brightness of whose appearing was enhanced by the intense darkness which claimed the hour as its own. True, the morning has repeatedly come, and so has the night, as was predicted by the watchman who was addressed by the voice from Seir. And yet, as often as the day dawned, the rising of the sun was heralded by the song of the morning stars, as they sang together for joy in view of the glory which was hereafter speedily to be revealed. Owen Lovejoy, John Brown, whose soul is still marching on, Jonathan Blanchard, and others whose names will be embalmed in the memories of the good and true in the near by-and-by, were and are morning stars whose appearance on the darkened sky told, with prophetic accuracy, that a new day was about to dawn when might should no longer make right.

Nor is that all. We have also seen Evening Stars. When the day's work was done, and the sheaves of good were gathered from off the fields of sin; when the battle was fought and the victory won; when the weary gleaner and the wounded veteran sat down side by side to recount their toils and conflicts and to tell what they had done for God and humanity,—then the evening stars put in an appearance and did their best to call attention to themselves, as though the world was indebted to them for all the good that had been done through the long, sultry day. Nor will they tarry to cheer the oncoming night, but on the contrary, they deem it to be their mission to tag on after the sun and to revel in its departing glory, until another day's work is done, and then to put in their appearance as on the yesterday.

There are many other sorts of stars, of which we can say but little more than to give their names. Of these we have:

1. Blazing stars. In the political, as well as in the ecclesiastical firmament they have been seen from time to time, in all their splendor, challenging the admiration of a nation, if not of the civilized world. But, in an unlooked for moment a dark cloud came between some of them and their admirers, and the catalogue of lost or missing stars was enlarged by the addition of familiar names.

2. Wavering Stars. Aimless and purposeless they go about, apparently seeking or shunning something —now here, nor there, and then are seen no more.

3. Would-be Stars. Perhaps asteroids would be a better name for this class of luminaries, as they are very much like stars, and yet are not recognized as such so long as they associate with the plebian "oids." True, they claim relationship with some grand old planet which burnt up a long time ago, not paying ten cents on the dollar, and therefore they would like to be known as stars minus a suffix.

4. Shooting Stars. What shall we say of those, the last and least of the stellar household? Simply this, Let them shoot, they do not amount to much any way you can fix it.

Olathe, Kans.

DETRACTION AND SLANDER.

We meet men, every day, to whom the praise of another man is poison, to whom the success of another man is a wound. If another has risen so much as a quarter of an inch above them and above the crowd, they feel themselves personally injured. Now it is with the race as it is with the individual. All the little, mean work of human nature is generally done not in the daylight and in public, but in small, dark closets a little at the rear of its ostensible abode. Hence, men who would shrink from openly betraying spites and jealousies, do so very freely when they can get behind the big mask and hollow speaking trumpet of the anonymous. But do not try to escape from the miserable conclusion which I have set before you. You can choose proofs of it quite impartially from those whose memorials are all around you, and whose bodies lie underneath your feet. See how the world has treated in all ages its greatest and its best. Take the poets in Poet's Corner. There lies Spencer, one of the sweetest of English poets, of whom a contemporary says:

> All his hopes were crossed, his suits denied,
> Discouraged, scorned, his writings villified,
> Poorly, poor man, he lived; poorly, poor man, he died.

Take Shakespeare, of whom one of the few contemporary notices is a savage depreciation by a rival play-wright. Take Milton who was so hated, so "fallen in evil days on evil tongues," that even a century after his death his name was obliterated from one of those very monuments, because it was looked upon as desecrating the Abbey walls. Take other poets who were not here. "This will never do," was the welcome given by the chief literary authority of his day to the pure and noble poetry of Wordsworth. Keats, a poet of poets, a poet whom poets love, was brutally bidden to go back to his gillipots. Coleridge, a great poet, and a truly great thinker, was for years scarcely as much as mentioned without the greatest contumely. Or change altogether the field of search. Turn to the other end of the Abbey, and take one or two statesmen. We know how Cromwell had to plough his way through a cloud, not of war only, but of "detraction rude." It culminated in the gibbetting of his body at Tyburn and the exposure of his head on Westminster Bridge. Take the older Canning, whose statue is there; he died, to a great extent, of a broken heart under the unscrupulous virulence of his enemies. Take his son, the younger Canning, Viceroy of India, whose statue is opposite his. At one time half India and half England were repeating with scorn and anger the nickname of "Clemency Canning," which ought now to be inscribed as the greatest glory on his tomb. Take Castlereagh, and you may read the fury of the vials of hatred out upon him in the burning verse of Shelley and of Byron. Take Sir Robert Peel, whose statue is close here, and remember how Lord Brougham told him that he would often have to "turn from the storm without to the sunshine of an approving conscience within." Take Guizot, the Prime Minister of France, who wrote to his son, "Whoever makes a little noise in the world encounters many hatreds and stirs up many lies. In spite of thousands of iniquities and absurdities set down to me, not only I," he said, "but, what is harder, those who love me must resign themselves to these." Take a great living statesman and orator: "For twenty-five years," said Mr. Bright, "I have pleaded only for justice. During that time, as I know; I have endured numberless insults, and passed through hurricanes of abuse."

Once again, change altogether the field of research; take one or two great divines. Tillotson was one of the saintliest archbishops who ever filled the See of Canterbury, and when he died there was found among his papers a bundle of most envenomed slanders, endorsed with the words, "May God forgive them, I am sure I do." Whitefield was one of the holiest of reformers, and you all know how

> The tongue that mentioned him at once dismissed
> All mercy from its lips, and sneered, and hissed;
> The very butt of slander, and the blot
> For every shaft which malice ever shot.

Shall I take a very recent instance within the memory of all connected with this Abbey. I know that Charles Kingsley tells us in his life how at one time the English newspapers were all cursing him like a dog, and I know how he carried to his grave the scars of bitter lies told about him by party religious writers in his earliest career. I know, too, that the late beloved Dean of Westminster, beloved as he was beyond most men, was yet, almost up to the day of his death, the theme of bitter mis-judgment and of incessant depreciation from men in every sense of the word intellectually, morally, spiritually, religiously, incomparably inferior to him.

In private life, to which you most belong, no less than in public life, your own experience will prove to you that this inner baseness of the world is constantly betraying itself. Men out of pure envy, even in small social circles, feel themselves commissioned to relieve the agonies of their own envy by pinching out the least semblance of superiority in their neighbors. You may not like the fact, but there is the fact in all its naked littleness and all its paltry ugliness—a very imposthume of human nature. Men in this day do not so much "clothe themselves with cursing as with a garment," but they wrap up their personal insignificance in the patched and threadbare tatters of envious disparagement. Now set it down as a rule that carping criticism, a niggling depreciation is a sure mark of a mean and little disposition; just as, on the other hand, a large, manly and catholic recognition and admiration for efforts and for merits that is the most certain mark of a noble disposition.—Canon Farrar in Westminster Abbey.

CALMNESS.—The celebrated Robert Hall said: "The most extraordinary thing about Wesley was that while he set all in motion he was himself perfectly calm and phlegmatic. He was the quiescence of turbulence." Wesley was not "phlegmatic." He had a warm heart, an active spirit. He said, "I am always in haste, though never in a hurry." He one day remarked to Clarke, "As I was passing one day through St. Paul's churchyard I observed two women standing opposite to each other, the one speaking and gesticulating violently, while the other stood perfectly still and in silence. Just as I came up and was about to pass them, the virago, clenching her fist and stamping her feet at her imperturbable neighbor, exclaiming, 'Speak, wretch, that I may have something to say!' Adam, that was a lesson to me. Silence is often the best answer to abuse."

ENCOURAGEMENT TO PRAY.—My heart's desire and prayer to God is, that all believers may by these many answers to prayer, be encouraged to pray, particularly as it regards the conversion of their friends and relations, their own state of heart, the state of the church at large, and the success of the preaching of the Gospel. Do not think that these things are peculiar to us, and cannot be enjoyed by all the saints. Although every child of God is not called by the Lord to establish schools and orphan houses, and to trust in the Lord for means for them; yet there is nothing on the part of the Lord to hinder why you may not know, by experience, far more abundantly than we do now, his willingness to answer the prayers of his children. Do but prove the faithfulness of God. Do but carry your every want to him. Only maintain an upright heart. But if you live in sin, if you wilfully and habitually do things respecting which you know that they are contrary to the will of God, then you cannot expect to be heard by him. "If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me; but verily God hath heard me; he hath attended to the voice of my prayer."—George Muller's Life of Trust.

But the good Robert [Morris] falsifies in his public statements, for he says of Masons as such, "Whose first engagement is to be law-abiding men." We deny that in the whole routine of Masonic obligations there is one obligation administered to the candidate to be a law-abiding citizen. True, in the lectures—to which none are obligated—there may be an incidental precept to that intent; but to put it as a Masonic engagement is but to falsify the facts in the case, and to attempt to deceive. There is an old adage, "Liars should have good memories;" that is, they should not forget what they have said, lest in their falsifying they contradict their past statements. If Robert Morris will harmonize the pretty sympathetic story about breaking jail, found in his "Lights and Shadows of Freemasonry" with his statement here given about Masonic engagement to be law-abiding men, he will not stand in as compromised a position as he does now. Is it not strange and anomalous that Masonic scoundrels do largely escape punishment, yet "warm Masonic friends" will be "the first to condemn" a Mason on evidence, if Robert Morris tells the truth?—Free Methodist.

He that will be a hero will barely be a man; but he that will be nothing but a doer of his work is sure of his manhood.

CONSERVATISM OF TRUTH.

[From Pres. C. A. Blanchard's address to the S. S. teachers of Chicago in Farwell Hall on the lesson for Nov. 25th.]

It is important to observe in this case that the assault was made by the Philistincs. Thc Israclites were standing on the defensive. Goliah had for forty days strodc back and forth, defying the armies of Israel and the God of those armies, saying: "Give me a man that we may fight together." It is so still; error is rampant, boastful, self-assertivc; truth, if not timid and retreating, is quiet and conservative. The world has been for months reading and talking of Luther, and what is there more remarkablc in the life of this man than that the enemy forced the fighting. Not satisfied with the measure of corruption already in the church they insisted on giving Simon Magus full possession. The Popc might have put off the Reformation another hundred years if he had decidedly rebukcd the shameless traffic in indulgences. But in attempting to hold what truth he had Luther discovered more, and what began as a reformation ended as a revolution. Luther and the church were like the man and his wife. He asked a divorce. The Judge said: "Didn't you love your wife when you married her?" "Yes." "And don't you love her still?" "Yes, I love her still, better than any other way, but the trouble is, she won't keep still." That was the troublc with the Philistines, with the slave-holdcrs and with thc champions of any abuse or error; they invade thc domain of truth and defy thc God of Isracl, and then ask to be let alone. They represent themselves as persecuted and oppressed, when, in fact, they compel Israel eithcr to abandon his heritage or fight for it.

Take the Goliaths of to-day. First among whom we mention the attempt to secularize education, to destroy the Sabbath and to plant a death-trap for the son by every mother's door. What are the facts in the case? Why, that 200 and more years since this country was settled by men who wanted freedom to worship God. They came across 3,000 miles of wintry sea and planted the hillsides thick with grasses that they might have a home in which to rear their children where they should be free from despotism, secular and religious. The Pilgrims and Puritans in the North, the Covenanters and Friends in Pennsylvania and the Carolinas, and the Huguenotsin the far South, all came to this land for religious purposes, though the Jamestown and Hudson river settlements were commercial enterprises. These colonists planted churches and school-houses. In their schools the principal text-dooks were the Bible and the Catechism. The Sabbath was a day of rest, and while there was liquor-drinking, and of course liquor-selling, the present system of saloons where persons are drugged and robbed and then turned on to the street to endanger the lives of men and terrify women, was a thing unknown.

Take also the secret-society system which strikes the name of Jesus out of the dates of its documents, out of its prayers, out of the Bible when read in its lodge rooms, which boasts of its purchased charities and its fraternal ties, which swears men who do not believc in the Christian religion to defend it with their swords, and fills the streets of our cities with Sabbath parades. All these are but outward exhibitions of that dark and deadly spirit which now, as in the olden timc, goes about as a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour. And the point to which I specially direct your thought is that thesc mighty powers are pressing on the Israel of God. The church is not permitted to hold her own without a struggle.

OUR HANDS TO IT.

The Banner of Truth, Osceola, Mo., prints the following fearless testimony:

LEESVILLE, Mo., Sept. 14, 1883.

We, John V. Baker and William Collins, do hereby certify that we have been members of the Order of Freemasons, and that we took in due form in regular lodge the three degrees of Entered Apprentice, Fellow Craft and Master Mason. We further certify that we have carefully examined the "Hand Book of Freemasonry" by Edmond Ronayne and "Freemasonry Illustrated" by J. O. Doesburg, and find them to be full and correct expositions of the first three degrees of Ancient Freemasonry as received by us in due form and regular lodge.

Witness our hands, JOHN V. BAKER.
WILLIAM COLLINS.

The National Christian Association sells these books. Send for them.

The Catholic Review, probably as a good joke, informs us that "the church is essentially a democracy," and adds, "Take the Catholic church out of the world, were that possible, and the highest and oldest exemplar of democracy would perish." On which the Christian Register comments: "This is certainly a new historic discovery. If our Puritan fathers had but known it, they would not have needed to cross the ocean to establish a democracy, which they might have found ready-made in the Catholic church."—Ex.

THE WASHINGTON WORK.

WILLIMANTIC, Conn., Nov. 26, 1883.

Arriving here late I shall not sec Messrs. Barlow and Conant till to-morrow. Since leaving Washington I have conversed freely with friends about our movement there and have heard but one opinion, that of hearty approval. They say "Whatever happens in Washington is of national interest. The news emenating from that point is more generally read than from any other place in the country." All this is true but it is only a small part of the argument in favor of locating there. The access we shall have to representative men of the country is an important consideration. The facilities for gathering news will be no small item. As a center from which to effect thorough political organization it is valuable to our cause. Then again, the prohibitionists are at present without an organ at the national capitol. We shall be in a commanding position in that rcspect. We shall have access to the public documents from which to gather the best fruits of Congressional investigation of temperance, labor-reform and Ku-Kluxism. In fact there is every reason why we should hasten to establish ourselves firmly in Washington.

It is one of Senator Pomeroy's favorite ideas that our paper should have fresh news every week, in condensed form, from all the States, so that each edition may reflect the operations of the whole country. This is a point not to be lost sight of. If all the States will interest themselves in providing for a sufficient amount of space to meet their wants we may have an organ which will be truly national in character. Many of our friends are now taking secular papers whose principles they abhor, simply to get the current news. If we can furnish them equally fresh and valuable news, with principles which they love, we shall have gained an important point.

Two successful business men have to-day given $100 each for the Washington building, considering it of vital importance to get the real estate paid for and secured beyond a peradventure. This is sensible. We can't afford to be paying interest, or subject that property to the danger of loss by some possible unexpected pressure for funds in the future. Men who have the money should carefully regard their stewardship and give what the Lord would have them for this cause. I find some men who subscribe for stock promising to pay the full amount in cash, rather than taking advantage of the time allowed for four-fifths. This is good for those who can do so and who prefer it. Some are not able to do it and the plan of paying only one-fifth makes it possible for a larger number to subscribe.

I have lately been writing to persons in various States to learn their views concerning the stock company and the proposed paper. If it be possible to secure a unanimous and hearty co-operation of all the friends of the cause it must be done. Every interest must be consulted. The value of the enterprise depends largely upon the unanimity with which we support it. If it be possible to meet the peculiar needs of every section of the country in one paper we must do it.

E. D. BAILEY.

REFORM NEWS.

NEW YORK STATE WORK.

Notice is hereby given that Bro. W. B. Stoddard of Dale, N. Y., has been duly appointed by the Executive Committee of the N. Y. State Association opposed to secret societies, as State ageut and colporteur, to work in the said State. Bro. W. B. Stoddard is a Christian gentleman of fine ability and well adapted to the work. We cordially recommend him to all who may wish any of the publications of the National Christian Association, and to communities who may desire to have lectures delivered in their churches or halls against the lodge and its idol worship. Rev. J. P. Stoddard of Chicago, Secretary and General Agent of the N. C. Association, will preach, lecture and work for the next two or three months in connection with his son, W. B. Stoddard, in New York State.

Let any one who wishes to hear one of the best lecturers in the country write at once to F. W. Capwell, Dale, N. Y., and we will arrange the time so as not to clash with other appointments. All who have any of the Lord's money which ought to be used in defraying the expenses of the N. Y. State Association opposed to secret societies, please do not wait for Bro. W. B. Stoddard to call on you but send it at once to either of the following officers: F. W. Capwell, Pres., Dale, N. Y.; or M. Merrick, Treas., Syracuse, N. Y.

TO CONNECTICUT FRIENDS.

WILLIMANTIC, Conn., Nov. 27, 1883:

To all lovers of truth in Connecticut.

DEAR BROTHERS AND SISTERS:—At the last annual meeting of the Connecticut Christian Association Rev. J. L. Barlow of Willimantic was appointed State lecturer, but owing to ill health in his family has been prevented from doing any active service in the field until now.

While we are sorry that he is still afflicted in the feeble health of his beloved companion, who bears her sufferings with Christian patience, we are enabled to announce that arrangements have been made which we trust will enable him to give several days and evenings in each week during the winter in lecturing or giving parlor talks wherever the people desire, in towns and villages throughout the State.

Now, dear brethren, will not each one of you, where possible, make an earnest effort to obtain a church, school-house or hall, and write Bro. Barlow and arrange with him the time for one or more meetings. Several successive meetings are best when practical. If you can not secure a room for a public lecture, can you not invite Bro. Barlow to your house and ask in your candid neighbors and acquaintances to listen to the instructions and arguments he may give touching the great evil which hinders the success of the Gospel at the present time.

Begin now and make your arrangements at once, and secure his services as soon as possible, for if you all wait until midwinter half of the winter will be lost and some of you may thus be disappointed in securing his services, and some young men left to be ensnared by the lodge. Of course you will all bear in mind that while it is blessed to hear and receive the truth, that it is still more blessed to help in the dissemination of it by contributing to the material support of those who give their whole time and strength to the same great purpose. May the truth progress mightily in Connecticut this winter.

J. A. CONANT.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

DEPOT, AUBURN, Ind., Nov. 28, 1883.

I had hoped to hear Eld. I. W. Lowman here, but fear I shall fail. His farm is two and a half miles in the country, and unless he comes to the postoffice I shall be obliged to leave without seeing him.

At Angola I addressed a fair and attentive audience in the Christian church last evening. The pastors of the M. E. church and of the Disciple church were present and also, I am told, many of the leading Masons of the town. The seed sown by Bro. Ronayne there some years ago has produced fruit and there is a greater willingness to hear and consider the truth than when I first visited the place.

Bro. C. F. Wiggins has been indefatigable in labors and uncompromising in his opposition for all these years and is deserving of great credit, and will receive a rich reward. Our true friend and helper, Ezekiel Sutton, has distributed tracts with a liberal hand at fairs and from store to store, and received special attention and stern rebukes from the fraternity as his reward. His brother David is perhaps less active, but no less determined in his opposition. The Congregatioual preacher is a zealous brother in the fraternities and highly extols the orders on funeral occasions and wherever an opportunity presents itself.

I was entertained at the hospitable dwelling of L. A. Hendry, Esq., whose business ability and indomitable energy has won for him a competency, if not a fortuue. Beginning with very little or nothing he now owns 1300 acres of farm lands, a half interest in one of the larges stores in town, buys aud ships stock extensively, and is just now, with others, engaged in the ercction of a Normal school building that will be an ornameut to the place and a blessing to the young people of that whole region. His excellent wife and three active, intelligent children at home are in full sympathy with him in his reformatory views. He is a staunch prohibitionist and has a standing offer of $5,000 toward a prosecution fund of $100,000 to be used if necessary to drive every dram-shop from the town. His father, now nearly eighty years old, is active, with a clear mind and strong faith in Christ and the ultimate triumph of the right. He was active in the Morgan times, and with his partner in business at the time, who left the lodge, kept a small arsenal stored with loaded muskets for defense, in one part of the shop where they worked. Neither the father or son had known very much of the N. C. A. or its work, but both were willing listeners, and ordered reform literature and subscribed for the Cynosur so as to keep in report with the movement and its working forces.

I visited and spoke at a school house near Thos. McClure's where I found ready listeners and obtained Mr. McClure as a reader of our paper for the next year. From what I can gather in my brief stay on this field I am fully convinced that the harvest is ripe for the reapers. Any man of piety, energy and ability would find ample scope for work, a ready reception in school houses and country churches at least, and a reasonable compensation for his labors. The parties as a rule most interested are men and women who rise early, toil diligently in sunshine and storm, and who will pay their money only to a man whose whole soul in the work and who emulates them in diligenee and devotion to his and their cause. If Bro. Cook would put in an appearance and announce himself as not simply ready to work but as at work and determined to keep at it, and then keep digging away, he would undoubtedly be surprised at results. Can't you visit Steuben, DeKalb and some of the northern counties this winter, Bro. Cook? The field is waiting for the gatherer of sheaves to garner a harvest for God and eternity. From here I go eastward.

CLEVELAND, O., Dec. 1, 1883.—At Wauseon I learned of the death or removal of most of our old-time helpers, and after sharing the hospitality of young Bro. Gould and receiving in trust his mother's offering to our Washington enterprise I took a "tie ticket" eight miles to Delta, which I cleared in one hour and forty-three minutes, and arrived just in time to meet the crowd coming from the Free Methodist church where union Thanksgiving service had been held. I was introduced to the four pastors of the place by Bro. Ward and accepted an invitation to dine with Bro. J. Hayden and the pilgrims gathered at his house. I heard here of the fruits of my labors some eight years ago, where I spoke in a "ball room" in a neighboring town in which no church could be had. I was obliged to decline several pressing invitations in order to fill engagements and reach Philadelphia in time to aid Bro. Hinman in his meetings on the 19th and 20th insts. As Bro. G. A. Bechtol had just entered upon a protracted effort, it was thought best not to hold meetings in the interests especially of our work. Preaching for Bro. B.'s people in the evening and attending to the business which specially called me there, I passed on to Millbury where I found brother and sister Miller suffering from a $15,000 fire which consumed a mill and lumber upon which there was no insurance. They are struggling bravely and hold on to God. I was much refreshed in body and spirit by their kindness and courage.

I am now awaiting the departure of a train for Bedford, and expect to go on to Wright's Corners, Niagara Co., N. Y., on Monday. I am surprised and gratified to witness the change that has come over the people in this region since I first lectured through northern Indiana and Ohio. J. P. STODDARD.

THE RELIGIOIS PRESS OF PHILADELPHIA.

1522 CHESTNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 26.

Most of the great religious denominations are represented in this city by able weekly papers. The different branches of the Presbyterians and the two or three divisions of the Society of Friends, have the largest number. There are a large number of monthly and semi-monthly papers, that are not included. The list is as follows:

Five Presbyterian, including the Messenger, organ of the Reformed church, four "Friends," four Methodist, two Protestant Episcopal, two Lutheran, one Baptist, one Roman Catholic, one "Protestant," one Jewish, one Spiritualist, and two "Evangelical."

I have visited most of these offices and conversed with the editors, asking them to insert the notice of our approaching Christian convention, with the following results: the Christian Statesman, the Bible Banner, the Christian Instructor, The Friend, and the Friend's Review are positively favorable to the reform, the first three publishing notices with editorial approval, the last two giving some financial aid, but The Friend declined to publish the notice, on the ground that they publish only for the Society of Friends.

The following papers agreed to publish without hesitation: the Presbyterian, the Messenger, the National Baptist, Friend's Review, and Lutheran Observer. The following took the matter under advisement: Presbyterian Journal, Friend's Intelligencer, The Methodist, The Lutheran, The Standard, and Home Journal.

The only paper that refused because of the character of the notice was the Christian Recorder, the organ of the African M. E. church. It is however, due to the editor to say that he said he was personally favorable to the objects of the convention, but the great majority of the colored ministry who controlled the paper belonged to the secret orders.

There are notable exceptions to this rule. I visited a colored minister, pastor of 1500 communicants, who, with his excellent wife received me most kindly. They read the Cynosure with much interest, and bid me God speed in my work. May the Lord give them courage to declare faithfully his Word. H. H. HINMAN.

REPORT FROM MICHIGAN.

[The following extracts from the report of Bro. H. A. Day, Michigan State Agent, in the Michigan American, will be of interest to readers in every State.]

Taking the train in Parma Nov. 7, I arrived at Augusta where I was met by my father and brother, who informed me that announcements were out for a lecture, on that and the following evening at the Day school house, where in boyhood days I attended school with others, some of whom, as they came to listen to my talk, I found to be bearded men, like myself. Here I found a fair audience, who gave good heed to what I had to say the first evening on the subject of Christianity in politics. The following evening as I expected, the audience was much larger, and after a brief review of the previous evening's lecture, and reading the platform of the "Liberal League," I proceeded to my talk as I had announced, on the subject of temperance, and closed with a reference to the power and influence of secret societies, as hindrances to the progress of reform in the matter of temperance and in every other line of reform work so much needed in the government. There was respectful attention to the lecture throughout, and at the close I sold two shares of stock, took two subscriptions to the American, and gave away a good supply of tracts and papers. I was very glad of the opportunity of presenting our sentiments in this locality, as it is largely under the control of the powers of darkness. We will hope that some light, at least, was shed forth from our effort in this place. Following this, I preached three times on Sabbath, at Hickory Corners and Ross, from which places I announced lectures for the following week.

Sabbath, Nov. 18th, I was on my way to the church at Hickory Corners where I attended services in the morning. Bro. Johnson preached and we had an excellent season. From this announcement was made for my second lecture the following evening, and I accompied Bro. Johnson to the Cedar Creek appointment, where I preached in the evening to a crowded house, from the words of Jesus in Rev. 2d chapter, "I know thy works." We had a good meeting. From this announcement was made that I would lecture on the following Friday evening. I tarried at the hospitable home of Bro. Bergamon for the night, and on the following morning returned to Hickory Corners, where in the evening I met a good audience, to whom I spoke for over an hour, and had their fixed attention. At the close of this lecture fourteen shares of stock were sold; four subscriptions were taken for the paper, and seven dollars were donated for the M. C. A. treasury. Seven shares of stock had been taken in this community previous to the meeting, making in all twenty-one shares for this vicinity. There is a class of noble. God-fearing people in this place, whose ready responses in reform work will not soon be forgotten, either in heaven or earth.

It is amusing in all these lectures to note the effect on the audience of a reference to secret societies. At Hickory Corners, when speaking of the chief reason why temperance moves so slowly and intemperance thrives so well, I made no mention of secretism by word, but when speaking of the preacher who comes to a place and preaches a temperance discourse I made mention of his ability and especially of the perfection of his gestures. While speaking of this, I gracefully drew one hand past my throat and then let both fall gracefully by my side, and continuing my talk I drew the right hand across my breast and let both fall as before, and so on without saying a word in reference to the matter, only that the average temperance reformer had such perfect gestures. As I came to this the whole audience seemed to find it necessary to change their position. Such a shuffling, I think they must have seen a point. After this, open reference was made to the necessity for a reform in the matter of secret societies, which met the endorsement of the major part of the audience.

—The Rev. John S. Inskip, the eminent Methodist minister, was stricken with paralysis on the 24th ult. The attack is said to have been a severe one. At last reports he was speechless, and his physicians fear that he will never be able to speak in public again. Mr. Inskip when prostrated by illness was about to commence a series of special services in Boston.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TRIALS IN ST. PAUL.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Nov. 20, 1883.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—I received the Thurlow Weed documents all right, and shall I trust, make good use of them for the truth's sake. My prayer is, It is time for thee, Lord, to work. For they have made void thy law."WPs. 119: 126.

"Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God." 1 John 4: 1. Young men, try the secretaries of the Young Men's Christian Associations. Christians, try your pastors. Do not let them deceive you. Exercise your right of private judgment, according to Galatians 1: 8, 9. God commended the church at Ephesus because they tried them that said they were apostles, and found them to be liars. Rev. 2: 2. And God will always commend his people for trying their pastors to find out if they are liars, even though he allows Satan to cast them into prison for it. Try them by such truth as the affidavits of Jacob O. Doesburg and other reclaimed Masons.

The secretary of the Y. M. C. A. of this city, Mr. Lichtenberger, is doing his best to destroy the truth. The rooms of the Y. M. C. A. are up stairs in the Odd fellows block. I have stood at the main entrance on the street, giving away Jacob O. Doesburg's affidavits to people as they passed up stairs, while he stood by my side in a state bordering upon desperation, snatching them out of the people's hands as fast as I gave them away, crushing them in his hand, tearing them in pieces and throwing them into the gutter. I have occasionally, always with a spirit of the utmost kindness, given them to young men in the reading room, never creating the least opposition, nor disturbance, nor even a word of comment, until he would interfere by destroying them.

Last Lord's day morning I was passing through their reading room to attend the prayer-meeting then going on, when he seeing me, left the prayer-meeting, and together with his assistant, laid hold of me and thrust me out, and locked the door against me. He then warned the few young men present against me, telling them he was not a Mason, etc. True, he is not a Mason, but he says he has formed a favorable opinion of Masonry: and he has good Masonic backing. No doubt but there are Masons in the city who, feeling the galling bondage of "Satan's cable-tow," will regard him as their enemy.

Some time ago, through one of the city papers, I challenged his late pastor, Dr. S. G. Smith, now presiding Elder of the St. Paul district, to deny the affidavit of Doesburg, if not true. Now Mr. Lichtenberger tells me that Dr. Smith could deny that affidavit, but it is too contemptible for him to notice. This Dr. Smith is a Knight Templar, wears his Masonic charms in the pulpit, and is apparently the idol of his denomination in this community.

Help Lord, for thy servants languish by reason of those who hate truth and love lies! "It is time for thee, Lord, to work. For they have made void thy law." Ps. 119: 126.

W. FENTON.

LITERARY BAIT OF SCEPTICISM.

Readers may sometimes detect the food with which scepticism baits its hook by the poisonous tendency of some apparently incidental expressions under the cloak of reviewing literary works. A specimen is furnished by a recent complimentary city notice of Edwin Arnold's new translation from Hindoo poetry, which is contrasted to the disadvantage not only of the Jewish poetry but of the theology revealed in the Old Testament. Interesting as may be the "Antique Hindoo World," as found in her poets, it detracts greatly from the value of reviews of them when it is sought to belie the first principles of our Christianity and subvert faith in the Holy Scriptures.

The "Light of Asia" was regarded by such writers as an opportunity to vent their sentiments, and the new work, by the same author, encourages them again to stab at Christianity from under their cloak of admiration of the new translation, which is a part of the two hundred and twenty thousand lines of the Hindoo books which present the religious, social and political life of ancient India. One reviewer contrasts the forgiving, kind, unselfish spirit of the Hindoo teaching with what he calls the stern, vindictive spirit of the Old Testament, and he asks, "Can there by any mingling" of the creeds? "Where is the true creed?" There he shows the cloven foot. And he places Mr. Arnold among "the immortals of literature."

It so happens that Christians can enjoy the charms of truth whether found in the blossom of the rose or in the flowers of poetry ancient or modern, but their love for general truth has its true foundation in him who is the Truth itself, and all else is valuable only as auxiliary to our knowledge of him. May India soon welcome him instead of their lying vanities. T. H.

PITH AND POINT.

GOD SEND US A BETTER PRESIDENT.

As I took up your excellent paper this morning, the first thing that met my eye was the note that Mr. Arthur might be President again. The bare possibility made me shudder. "Oh!" I said, "can it be that we must have a man at the head of this great nation who favors drinking customs." I would there were a remonstrance sent on the wings of the wind all through the land, and every Christian's name to it, yea, every true American's.

Vain thought! But one thing we, the people of the living God, can do; that is, lay siege to the throne of grace, for God does hear prayer. No doubt that in answer to prayer, American slavery was abolished, and through the prayers and efforts of his children Freemasonry is being shaken, and will fall, gigantic as it is. Let us pray and labor that Arthur may never again be at the head of this nation. MRS. J. GRIFFIN.

PRAY ONE FOR ANOTHER.

May the Lord's blessing rest on all the workers. I would be glad to know I was remembered in their prayers. ISAAC HYATT.

BE SURE THAT EPHRAIM IS JOINED TO HIS IDOLS, BEFORE YOU LET HIM ALONE.

I wish your mind about these Frecmason preachers, whether it is best to go to hear them. I think it not best. We are commanded by the Word of God to withdraw ourselves from those that walk disorderly. They are such, if any. I want light on this question. I want to do right by the help of the Lord. I like the articles we get in your paper. Thank the Lord, there are some who dare publish the truth. E. WENTWORTH.

A FALSE PROPHET.

We have an M. E. minister here who preached from he pulpit on a Sabbath that we all should become Masons. A. LUCK, Hollister, Cal.

A GOOD DOCUMENT.

I think the last Cynosure [Nov. 15] has a wonderful array of argument against the Secret Empire. The lodge is doing "work" every week here. An evangelist has been laboring a few weeks here and has got only a few boys to follow him, and I do not wonder when I know that both ministers are Masons. They remind me of the prophets of Baal, as they cry loudly to God to send down the Holy Spirit, as though God had not got so far as this place. MISS F. M. MITCHELL, Gardiner, Me.

LESSON XI.—December 16, 1883.—David sparing his enemy. 1 Samuel 24: 1-17.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you." Mat. 5:44.

DAILY READINGS.

David at Nob	1 Sam. 21: 1-9.
Doeg the Elamite	1 Sam. 22: 9-19.
Keilah Relieved	1 Sam. 23: 1-14.
The Ziphites	1 Sam. 23: 19-26.
Cush the Benjamite	Ps. 7: 1-17.
Another Saul	Acts 9: 1-22.
Another David	Ps. 22: 11-31.

PRACTICAL.

1. Trying circumstances.—(a) Tattling tongues. "It was told him, saying" (v. 1). "The tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity;....it setteth on fire the course of nature" (James 3:6).

(b) Enemies combined. "Saul took three thousand chosen men" (v. 2). "Be not afraid of sudden fear, nor of the desolation of the wicked; for the Lord shall be thy confidence, and shall keep thy foot from being taken" (Prov. 3:25, 26).

(c) Evil advice. "The men of David said unto him, Behold the day," etc. "Lo, their good is not in their hand; the counsel of the wicked is far from me" (Prov. 21:16). "The thoughts of the righteous are right; but the counsels of the wicked are deceit" (Prov. 12:5).

2. A golden opportunity.—The persecutor in the hand of the persecuted. "He came to the sheepcotes by the way,....and David and his men remained in the sides of the cave" (v. 3). So it often is that the tables are turned; the rich man who exalted himself over his poor neighbor is brought low, and the poor man is exalted; he that reproaches another over his misfortunes is made to hide his own head with shame. Such times place our enemies within our power. How shall we treat them?

3. A noble victory.—(a) Self restraint. "The Lord forbid that I should do this thing unto my master" (v. 6). "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty" (Prov. 16:32).

(b) The enemy's heart melted. "Saul lifted up his voice and wept" (v. 16). "In so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head" (Rom. 12:21). A writer relates that he once took a nugget of gold to an assayer. He found that the lump could not be melted by heat under the crucible alone; it required the burning coals to be placed over it as well. Love is the fire from above, and it is hotter by far than anger; the latter may crush the arm of an enemy, but the former can melt his heart.

4. How victory was obtained.—By keeping before the mind the relation of each to the Lord their God. "The Lord judge between me and thee" (v. 12). "He is the anointed of the Lord" (v. 6). "Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord" (Rom. 12:19). Not only by remembering that God will be our judge and will display righteousness, but also by remembering our own indebtedness to the Lord for forgiveness may we be enabled to bless those who persecute us and to love our enemies.—U. P. Bible Teacher.

LESSONS.—"Touch not the Lord's anointed," a lesson much needed by children in our day. Those whom God has placed over us deserve respect from their office apart from their private character. Again, there is a lesson on the other hand of the responsibility resting upon those who use their official power to gratify personal vindictiveness or jealousy. If it is wrong to say to the king thou art wicked (Job 34:18), it is doubly wrong for the king to be wicked. David's conduct in this matter is worthy of a king among men, reminding us of him who was at once David's Son and David's Lord, "Who when he was reviled revilcd not again; when he suffered he threatened not, but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously" 1 Peter 2:23. The Lord's word "Love your enemies" Matt. 5:44, has here a better illustration than we can find among us in these days. David's conduct was no insincere or outward show of friendship, but a real testimony of his love and loyalty in the face of all the persecution he had suffered. With us how often Christianity is but a mask to hide the bitterness and vindictiveness that is in our hearts. The Lord will avenge his servants if they leave their vindication in his hands. —Notes for Bible Study.

BAND OF HOPE BIBLE LESSON.

THE TONGUE AN UNRULY MEMBER.

1. My Brethren, be not many masters, knowing that we shall receive the greater condemnation.
2. For in many things we offend all. If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body.
3. Behold, we put bits in the horses' mouths, that they may obey us; and we turn about their whole body.
4. Behold also the ships, which though they be so great, and are driven of fierce winds, yet they are turned about with a very small helm, whithersoever the governor listeth.
5. Even so the tongue is a small member, and boasteth great things. Behold, how great a matter a little fire kindleth.
6. And the tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity; so is the tongue among our members, that it defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the course of nature, and it is set on fire of hell.
7. For every kind of beasts, and of birds, and of serpents, and of things in the sea, is tamed, or hath been tamed of mankiud.
8. But the tongue can no man tame; it is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison.
9. Therewith bless we God, even the Father; and therewith curse we men which are made after the similitude of God.
10. Out of the same mouth proceedeth blessing and cursing. My brethren, these things ought not so to be. Jas. 3: 1-10.

GOLDEN TEXT.—If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body. Jas. 3:2.

CENTRAL TRUTH.—Our lives are governed for good or evil by the use we make of the tongue.

1. Rash and severe judgment of others is condemned in this verse. "Be not many masters," is a warning against a proud, ambitious spirit which was leading some of the early converts to set up as religious teachers before they had the necessary wisdom for such an office.

2. "Offend" means to "stumble" or "trip," i. e. to fall into sin. The Bible tells us that our natures are so corrupt that no one lives without sinning.

3. If we can keep the door of our lips shut when tempted to say wrong words the evil passions in our hearts have no outlet. They are like a fire smothered so it cannot burn. An old Quaker used to make it a rule never to speak when he was angry until he had counted twelve.

4. A man who governs his tongue is able to govern himself.

5. "Matter" here means "wood." How much wood a little fire kindleth. Every summer in seasons of drought when the woods are dry we hear of forest fires. A spark from a hunter's gun, a burning match carelessly thrown down after lighting his pipe or cigar is frequently the starting cause.

6. If we could trace back every quarrel to its origin we should almost always find that some hasty word was the starting point.

7. Our words show what is in our hearts, whether they are pure and loving or selfish and corrupt.

8. It is so easy to commit sins of the tonguc that it is often done before we know it. Our evil hearts are behind the tongue, and until they are changed this unruly member will keep giving us trouble.

9. We cannot worship God acceptably while we allow our tongues to speak unkind, mischievous or injurious words.

PRACTICAL TRUTHS.

1. The first temptation to speak wrongly must be resisted by keeping our lips shut.

2. If we want to be perfect men and women we must learn to control the tongue.

3. We cannot do this without the grace of God to help us.

LESSON TALK.

The only way to prevent the tongue from doing mischief is to make it do good. It cannot help doing one thing or the other. The beast of burden that has never been taught to bow its neck to the yoke or halter is apt to be untameable and vicious. So if we never bridle our tongues they will be apt to do a great deal of injury. A great deal of the harm that is done by rash and foolish words might have been prevented by stopping to think. But if we cannot calculate the amount of mischief which the tongue is capable of doing, it is also true that if we should trace back the origin of all the good that has been done in the world we should often find that its germ was a word dropped in season. Robert Raikes started the first Sunday school at the suggestion of a pious woman to whom he spoke about the poor children in the street. "What can we do for them?" he asked. "Let us teach them and take them to church," she replied. And so this brave man and woman "conducted the first company of Sunday school scholars to the church, exposed to the comments and laughter of the populace as they passed along with their ragged procession." Perhaps you have read a fairy story about a girl who, as a reward for her kindness to an old woman had the gift of dropping pearls and diamonds from her mouth whenever she spoke. Now kind, true, helpful words are far more precious than pearls or diamonds, and every boy and girl as well as every man and woman can have this gift if they try. But we must be careful to think before we speak; and above all, we must pray and watch and strive, for sins of the tongue are the kind that perhaps more than any other take us unawares.

LESSON HYMN.

"I need thee every hour
Most gracious Lord."

AN OPEN LETTER

TO REV. W. H. PRUETT, PASTOR OF THE BAPTIST CHURCH, WESTON, OREGON.

DEAR BRO.—Having had head, heart and hands full for some time past, I trust you will excuse my tardiness and let me come to you again with words of advice aud encouragement. If I knew more of you personally—your age, temperament, piety, pluck, perseverance, push and grit—I should better know how to adapt my words to your case. If you have not all the qualities named above, it had been better for you if you had never addressed me in that open letter through the Cynosure. Do you know that in doing that you threw down the gauntlet in the face of an unscrupulous, wily and powerful foe; one that will not be slow to take it up, though in no open or manly way? Masonry never forgives. He who strikes the institution is ever after a marked man; and the only manly and safe course—having struck once—is to keep on striking. Take the offensive and the aggressive and hew to the line. Never allow yourself to be put on the defensive. No holding the forts, but "storm the forts" be your motto. "But," do you say, "that will cost!" Indeed it will. Many of us have learned that lesson well, yet we are holding on, feeling that if we had just reason for commencing our attacks on this accursed system of secrecy, the same reason holds good for our continuance in the warfare. Some have put their hand to the plough who have looked back. The Lord pity them! Anti-masons cannot trust them—Masons will not.

"But," do you say, "is there any hope of final success?" Of course there is. "Every plant which my heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up." So says our commander Jesus, and I believe him, don't you? Our heavenly Father never planted Freemasonry; if he did you and I would do well after this to let it alone; and not only that, but to confess our sin in interfering with it at all. No; Freemasonry has for its father the devil, and it is our legitimate work as loyal soldiers of Christ to root it up. God works by means. We are his watchmen. Loyalty to him demands that we make no peace with his foes.

"But," do you say again, "how is it that so many ministers of our own and other denominations are the cable-towed and hood-winked members of this institution?" Treason, my brother, treason! Not that these men are each and all of them conscious of their guilt, but their connection with this Christless and therefore false religion is high-handed treason against the Lord whom they profess to serve. Press home this truth upon the ministry until they break away from these unchristly affiliations; and upon the churches until they refuse to be led by teachers who aim to make their Lord a liar by showing that they can serve two masters—the devil in the lodge and Christ in the church.

Then, again, you must assail Masonry, as a government claiming a service from its members, irrespective of their allegiance to State or nation You have only to study attentively the genius and spirit of the institution as seen in its obligations, to recognize this fact. This government within a government is a living menace to our Republic. The Masonic government has nothing in common with Democracy or Republicanism. Mackey says: "The government of the Grand Lodge is completely despotic." Rob Morris says: "The system of Masonic law has little of the republican or democratic spirit about it." Again, in the same connection, he gives us the following choice "tid bit." "The first duty of the reader of this synopsis is to obey the edicts of his Grand Lodge, right or wrong. His very existence as a Mason hangs upon obedience to the powers immediately set above him. Failure in this must infallibly bring down expulsion, which, as a Masonic death, ends all. The one unpardonable crime in a Mason is contumacy or disobedience."

Study the above extracts well. Sift them thoroughly; then look about you in church and in state. Visit the courts of justice and see the workings of Masonry in grand and petit juries. Read the reports of the trials of Morgan's abductors and be convinced that no truly adhering Mason can be a good citizen in any government save the Masonic, to which, under death penalties, he has sworn his highest allegiance. No man can serve truly and well two governments so diametrically opposed in spirit and aims as a republic and a despotism. As the religion of Masonry is treason to Christianity, so the governmental principles of the Masonic system are treason to our Republican institutions. Oue or the other must fall. As between slavery and freedom, there was an "irrepressible conflict," so there is betweeu Christianity and the Baalism of the lodge, and between our national republicanism and the despotism of the Grand Lodge. Sooner or later one must fall. It is only a question of time. Press home upon the Christian and the patriot the question: Which shall it be, the church or the lodge, republicanism or the Grand Lodge? And don't forget to show the people that open and active opposition to oath-bound secrecy is loyalty to God and country, while eveu indifference is treason to both.

Truly yours, J. L. BARLOW.

A terrible story comes to us from a good worker in Lincoln, California. A leprous boy, only twelve years old, was taken forcibly from his family by the city authorities, to an island assigned as an asylum for such unfortunates. The parents had kept him hidden in their home for six months, but their sorrow was at last discovered. The medical authorities, on examination, found that the leprosy, now well advanced, had begun at his lips, and decided on this and accompanying evidence, that the disease was induced by smoking cigarettes. This is no "scare crow" tale, but a genuine case, witnessed iu all its horrors by a sister worker. O boys, beware!

A HUMAN FIRE.

THE PHENOMENON OF A BURNING MINE REPEATED IN THE PHYSICAL SYSTEM.

A few years ago one of the most important coal mines in Pennsylvania caught fire. It started slowly but soon obtained such headway that it sprcad through the greater portion of the entire mine. To flood it with water would extinguish the firc, but well nigh ruin the mine; and still the flames continued to increase. At that juncture a young man stepped forward and suggested that all the entrances and vent holes of the mine be covered and secured, thus shutting off the supply of air. His advice was followed and the flames were finally subdued.

To compare the condition of this mine with many phases of the human system, is most natural and appropriate. "Fire in the blood" is not a mere expression, it is a most serious fact. How it originates, it may be impossible to say; but that it burns and rages with an increasing fury, the one who is its victim only too painfully knows. The blood is the life. It is designed by nature to purify, strengthen and sustain the system. It is too often made the channel through which poison and death are transported. Poisonous acids coming through the veins and arteries inflame and cause a fire just as real as the one that existed in the mine. They burn and irritate causing the brain to become weak and the nerves unstrung; they carry pains to the muscles and leave agonies in the joints; they bring destruction instead of strength; they devastate the very portions of the body that most require help, and they hasten the approach of death in its most horrible form. These things have been felt by innumerable people who have been the victims of rheumatic disorders, and the agonies they have endured confirm this description.

There is but one way by which this fire in the blood can be extinguished, and that is by shutting off the supply of these poisonous acids. The lactic, lithic and uric acids come in to the blood through the liver and kidneys, and they remain in solution in the blood producing inflammatory rheumatism, sciatica, lumbago, neuralgia, gout and all rheumatic fevers and affections. When they are deposited as gritty crystals in and near the joints, they cause articular rheumatism; when in the muscles, muscular rheumatism and lumbago; when in the tissues covering the nerves, sciatica; when in the face, head and nerves generally, neuralgia. In every case they are painful; in most instances, dangerous. Inflammatory rheumatism is likely to locate in some joint and become chronic, or suddenly attack the brain or heart, causing apoplexy or heart disease. The fire in the blood must extinguished—the supply must be shut off. This can only be done by guarding the portals to the blood—the kidneys and liver; and no means has ever been found for accomplishing this which can equal Warner's Safe Rheumatic Cure. It acts directly upon the seat of the disorder; it extinguishes the fire by controlling the supply and removing the cause.

The well known standing of H. H. Warner & Co of Rochester, N. Y., the remarkable success which Warner's Safe Cure has achieved, being indorsed by no less a personage thau Dr. Robert A. Gunn, Dean of the United States Medical College, New York, and the fidelity with which they have carried out all their promises to the public, should be a sufficient warrant that the above statements are true. They, however, guarantee to cure ninety-five per cent. of all rheumatic troubles, especially acute, knowing full well that the demonstrated power of the remedy justifies them in so doing. Nothing can be fairer thau this, and those who suffer in the future from rheumatism with such an offer before them, do so on their own responsibility, and can blame no one if living pain and untimely death are the results.

Specks of tan and freckles, spots of eczema, removed by Dr. Benson's Skin Cure. Unrivalled.

A bad taste in the mouth means a billious attack. Samaritan Nervine is the cure.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 6, 1883.

DECEMBER IS HERE.

Nearly 500 subscribers will see on the little account pasted on their papert hat their subscription expires during December. By promptly attending to the renewal they will contribute greatly to the success of their paper and the cause for which it stands. Every December renewal received during the month gets a good interest, that is, the Cynosure free from the expiration of their subscription till Jan. 1st. Then they have the paper for the whole year 1884.

If each one will add to his effort for a good cause the name of a new subscriber, enclosing $4.00 for both, the two subscriptions will be good till Jan. 1, 1885, and the sender may have also his choice of the following valuable pamphlets:

1. The Batavia Convention pamphlet, with the great speeches on that occasion, illustrations of the Morgan Monument, etc.; or

2. Egypt in History and Prophecy; or, Pharaoh proclaiming God, by the celebrated Robert Patterson, from Hasting's Anti-infidel Library; or

3. The Anti-masonic Scrap Book, a new and enlarged edition now in press, containing all the tracts published by the N. C. A.; or

4. The Island of Madagascar; the excellent history written by Gen. J. W. Phelps and noticed on the 9th page.

5. Copies of any of the pamphlets sold by the N. C. A., to the amount of 25 cents.

A CLUB OF FIVE

trial subscribers (two months for 25 cents) will just now be a valuable accession to the Cynosure list. To every friend who will get one up and enclose the $1.25 and addresses plainly written we will send either of the documents mentioned above.

FOR A CLUB OF TEN the sender may choose any two from the above list.

Get the Cynosure circulated in your town. The lodge does not thrive where it is read.

HON. JAMES B. WALKER.

The gentleman whose face looks benignly upon us in this issue, is now much

"Beyond the ordinary walk of human life,
Quite in the verge of heaven."

The child of a city, the son of a Freemason, a solitary orphan boy with grandparents, in the woods where his impoverished relatives sought bread by industry and enterprise; his young imaginations were born amid tall trees, the songs of wood-birds, the chattering of squirrels, the drumming of pheasants, the distant wolf-howls, and amid stories and legends of Indian savages, whose night-fires had just gone out. Here, in the dense forest, in a log cabin twenty miles back of Pittsburgh, then Fort Pitt, in what was then called "The Indian Country," JAMES B. WALKER prattled and played and ran of errands to the neighboring cabins.

"Ah. who can tell the means by which the mind
Finds out the path its Maker hath designed.
Ah who can know the secret springs, the thoughts?
Which shape our futures and direct our lots?"

This little city woods-boy, inheriting poverty and a slender frame and constitution, has reached and now enjops an honored old age, in easy, if not affluent circumstances, honored and loved. To reach his present goal, he has passed through such changes, and by such milestones of life as are mentioned below.

His ancestors were Scotch Covenanters, who plead and believed for him the Abrahamic covenant. He learned in boyhood of a Sabbath-school missionary from Philadelphia, the thirteenth part of the 119th Psalm; and he says in after years;

"I sang on horsebaek, hundreds of times, when no one but God heard me:

'O that the Lord would guide my ways,
To keep his statutes still,
O that my God would grant me grace
To know and do his will.'"

His life from his boyhood and pious bringing up, condensed into paragraphs, runs thus: He was a factory boy in a nail factory; he was smuggled into a theatre under a Yankee's great coat, against the remonstrance of his friends, who, he says in his book, ("Pioneer Life," p. 30): "spoke of theatres as 'Synagogues of Satan,' play actors as 'Mountebanks,' and associates of gamblers and loose women." From the theatre he went down the Ohio river in a keel-boat with a temperate uncle to "The Devil's half acre," near Georgetown, Va., to "sell whisky by the gallon and other commodities. Here he attended a Presbyterian meeting, five miles away, once in the next two years. Here at Hookstown, whisky and fighting with fists, feet and teeth, was the amusement of the male population; and young Walker was benefited by the repellancy of their vices. He went to a school, and had the common school boy's fate of

"Young loves, young hopes and young remembrances,
The melody of woods, and winds and water."

He now returned to Pittsburgh—apprenticed himself to a printer and worked on the old Gazette; went to a Methodist meeting, and once went home to pray, dabbled with infidelity, staggered others, and sorely troubled himself.

Some one has said that men are ever ambitious in proportion to their native talent. Young Walker wrote poetry, turned his hand and wrote or attempted prose and failed; went to a debating society, conned a speech, rose, and attempted but failed to speak; started for Philadelphia as a traveling printer, and on the morning of the day he was to start, he awoke and found his mother in his bed-room praying for him! She told him she had prayed for him daily from his birth.

With a stout young carpenter, he crossed the Alleghenies on foot. Weary and foot-sore, he lay down by a mountain spring to sleep. The nymphs and nereids of the place seem to have been propitious, for he wrote a poem which ran thus:

"A traveler on a mountain
In a warm mid-summer day,
Sat down beside a fountain
Which gushed beside the way.
* * * * *
And there I sat on the mountain side
And drank of that mountain spring;
I laid me down on the cool green sward,
Where the brook ran murmuring,
While the feathered songsters overhead
Carolled their lullaby."

He now came to Philadelphia, the city of his birth, visited relatives, presented his mother's letters, and moralized on the relative virtues and advantages of wealth, fashion and competence. Wearied and disgusted with hard work and low wages, he attempted to join the army of the struggling South American Republic. But its Consul rejected him as unfit for military life, and he left for the city of New York. There a benevolent Jew, M. M. Noah, gave him temporary employment, but, out of means, he sold his camlet cloak to pay his washing bill, crossed the ferry at Hoboken in a light snow storm, thin clad, cold and despondent; and, though half an infidel, prayed by an old Lombardy poplar tree near Hoboken, and believes that God heard his prayer. His Jewish friend had given him a letter to Booth, father of Lincoln's assassin, but the theatre was crowded and Walker escaped the society of the pimps and prostitutes of the stage whose acquaintance he had made in Noah's printing office.

Soon after praying he overtook a farmer, who helped him to get employment as a school teacher at New Durham; and after renewing his wardrobe and replenishing his purse, he went back to his mother seven miles from Allegheny, Pa. He soon became an editor, and soon after landed in Western Reserve College.

While in this young college, he became serious; went into a ball-room and danced, talked with his partner on the subject of religion, to the astonishment of both; he became and remains a decided Christian. While in college he met in prayer-meeting with John Brown, whose

"Body lies mouldering in the grave
While his soul is marching on."

Here also he met Theodore D. Weld; became an Abolitionist, a Bible society agent, a minister of the Gospel, a college professor and an editor of religious journals, where the writer of this sketch made his acquaintance. He afterward became pastor of important churches, a State Senator, and college president in Michigan, and, over and above all, he became the author of books printed in the leading languages of the earth, which have afforded him a competence in an honored old age, in Wheaton, Ill., where he came to assist the president in the instruction of Wheaton College.

In 1876 he was nominated and voted for as President of the United States by the American party along with Donald Kirkpatrick of Syracuse, N. Y., as Vice President. But as we were original Abolitionists, and the South was endangered by the dying struggles of the slave-monster, Walker and Kirkpatrick received but few votes. Their candidacy was none the less important. It was like the early sunshine which heralds the spring, and brings up the grass and flowers. Mr. Walker's letter accepting the nomination was an able document.

But this brief sketch must close with the observation that all the achievements of this diversified life, rare and striking and useful as they are; and all his written works, which are many, all united, fall below his "Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation," which will be taught in colleges, while there are colleges, along with Butler's Analogy, and works of that class. When Mr. Walker conceived this great work, he undertook to write it in sections, like Euclid, and put Q. E. D. at the close of each section; but, being advised not to attempt to make mathematics of morals, which are incapable of demonstration, and making doubt and unbelief impossible, that great work took its present form, which is simply this:

1. Man will worship.
2. Worshiping false gods he fell.
3. God alone could rescue him, as no self-projected worship could.
4. Christ came, and loved and suffered, and died, and arose to save men.
5. That can, and will, and does save men, and nothing else can.

And this is made so clear and plain that it comes as near demonstration as moral reasoning can.

The General Secretary of the N. C. A. had grown up in the prairies in uneducated vigor and force of mind; and in a Wesleyan meeting had professed and confessed Christ. This book of Mr. Walker's was put in his hand and he read it with delighted amazement. "Now," he exclaimed, "Now I can see what religion means." Thousands have found and felt the same delight, and tens of thousands will. The book shows positively that there can be but one true religion, and that Christianity is that religion, as clear as sunbeams and as certain as that there can be but one shortest line between two points, and that a straight one. It takes human nature fallen amid the polluting fleshpots of Egypt, a thing of base passions and brutal desires, and lifts it to heaven, as the sun draws miasms from swamps, lifts it to the skies and turns it into the golden glories of a summer-evening sun-set.

This venerable man, now long past his allotted three score years and ten, still resides in Wheaton among a people to whom he became endeared during a pastorate of some five years in the College church. His hospitable home is presided over by his estimable wife and her daughter, Mrs. W. H. Morgan. His time of late years, beside some assistance in the College and the Wesleyan Theological Seminary, has been occupied in revising and issuing new editions of some of his works and the publication of an autobiography, from which many of the facts given in this article are taken.

EDUCATION BY THE DEMIJOHN.

We clip the following from the Washington Republican, Nov. 30, with this remark: Senator Pomeroy from his first step in public life, has never shrank or swerved from the doctrine of total abstinence and prohibition, nor will he; and he knows Miss and Mrs. Willard too well, to suppose that they, or the W. C. T. Union, which they represent, will ever consent to liquor-tax education. He will always insist on repealing the liquor-tax by prohibition. So will we. But if prohibition is voted down, and the liquor blood-money, as Pomeroy calls it, is raised by the majority which rejects prohibition, let the money be used to educate the children of our foreign and native population against the saloon, "because it is the price of blood;" as the Judas-money bought "the potter's field to bury strangers in."

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30.—You have allowed me to read in your paper of yesterday the very sensible article from Mr. Blaine in favor of continuing the tax on spirituous and malt liquors, and of distributing the same among the several States. Will you allow me a line to suggest an addition to his measure in this, that the distribution shall be made solely on the condition that the States appropriate the same for public education or in aid of their school funds. This liquor money, whether obtained by tax or otherwise, has the smell of blood about it, yet it would sweeten and sanctify it somewhat to have the same annually devoted to free public schools. So I say, by all means, continue the tax on both whisky and tobacco, provided the proceeds can be devoted to useful learning. This would make a permanent and reliable school fund for the several States, and be some compensation for the public burdens it imposes. Run up your flag, inscribing "proceeds of liquor and tobacco a school fund for States!" This distinctive measure will be a good beginning and have far-reaching result.

I have the pleasure of being a constant reader of your paper, and always Yours truly, S. C. POMEROY.

[The same idea had occurred to us, as will be seen by reference to the editorial in this issue, written before the receipt of Senator Pomeroy's valued letter.—Ed. Republican.]

—Bro. Hinman addressed a fair audience in the Free Methodist church on Masters street, Philadelphia, on the evening of Thanksgiving day. He is invited to speak also in Dr. Stevenson's church, Reformed Presbyterian, next Sabbath.

—A letter from our good brother Tapley, which waits till next week, tells of a night assault upon Ridgeway Academy building, where the Salem church meets for the public worship of God. Nobody occupying the building, the windows were broken, and the floor within strewn with missiles. Bro. Tapley is a grand tract distributor, and probably this is one result. He asks that the tract fund be kept full. He is right. Keep the tracts flying to every corner where the lodge has penetrated.

—The town of Orange, Mass., furnishes a specimen for the contemplation of young men who are about to join the lodge. C. H. Wells, a photographer, was a prominent Odd-fellow, a Freemason and officer of the lodge, and a member of Athol Knight Templar commandery. A few days ago, after for some time being too intimate with the wife of another man, he deserted his wife and children and ran off with the other woman. It was well known that for some time he had not been leading a strictly moral life. He left behind a debt of $400 due a widow woman who had adopted him when a friendless boy and brought him up.

—An intelligent and wealthy lady of this city remarked that the Cynosure of Nov. 24th was the best number she remembered to have read. The present issue will not suffer in comparison, and others just as good are in preparation. Thus, among the good things for next week will be found a letter from Joseph Cook, the justly celebrated lecturer of Boston. The article by Dr. Milligan and the editorial on Dr. J. B. Walker in this issue will not be soon forgotten.

—Sojourner Truth, the well known colored woman of Battle Creek, Mich., died on Monday of last week at the extreme age of 108 years. The Inter Ocean says of her career: "In the autumn of 1883 the New York Anti-Slavery Society declared among other things: 'We will send forth agents to lift up the voice of remonstrance, of warning, of entreaty and rebuke.' Among those agents who went forth to arouse the people were men like Garrison, Gerrit Smith, Benjamin Lundy, and women like Lucretia Mott, Abby Kelly, Sydney Ann Lewis. Of the colored people early engaged in the same cause were Fred Douglass and the woman known as Sojourner Truth. In many sections Sojourner Truth became almost as well known as the most noted of the abolition orators. A religious enthusiast, she carried to the lecture platform all of the methods that go with simple and devout earnestness. She seemed an old woman when she began her work for the slaves, and yet she lived on for fifty years, to become known to the people of more than half the States in the Union." The readers of the Cynosure may expect soon an interesting sketch of this wonderful woman from the pen of a personal friend.

CORRECTION:—In the Cynosure of last week Mr. Grisham of Washington was made by an error to advise that which he is not in favor of. He writes:

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 30, 1883.

MESSRS EDITORS:—I am in favor of Mr. Needles' proposition for the 1,000 shares of $100 each, for the Washington paper. The types attributed to me the opinion of another. P. H. GRISHAM.

THE INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATON CONVENTION.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 28, 1883.

This convention met in St. George's Hall yesterday. The attendance was from the first unexpectedly large and the rooms provided quite inadequate. Bishop Simpson of the M. E. church, who was a delegate, was chosen president, and John Wanamaker, Mayor King and others were chosen vice presidents. A letter of regret from Gen. Grant was read in which he said:

My views on the subject of peace arbitration in the settlement of international differences instead of the sword have not changed. But my hope of its speedy accomplishment has diminished. It is only by keeping the subject alive, however, that it can be accomplished.

Several communications were read, among which was one from the American Peace Society, announcing regrets that it was unable to send a representative.

A cablegram from Secretary Lewis Appleton of the National Arbitration Society of England was also read, as follows:

LONDON, 2 P. M., November 23, 1883.

Peace Convention, Philadelphia:
Protest Franco-Chinese War. Success convention.
APPLETON.

Professor B. C. Hobbs offered the following:

Resolved, That this convention respectfully but earnestly urge upon the Chief Executive of this nation, upon the heads of Departments and upon Senators and Representatives the expediency of taking measures early for calling a Congress of the representatives of the republics of America, of the Empire of Brazil, and of such nations in Europe and other continents as may favor such a call, with a view to providing for the settlement of differences among those nations and peaceable arbitration or other judicial measures.

John B. Garrett offered the following:

Resolved, That this convention urge upon the treaty-making power of the United States Government the expediency of early negotiating for a congress of the nations of the Western Hemisphere with a view to providing for the settlement by peaceable arbitration or other judicial means.

Resolved, That we further petition our Government to enter into conventions for this same object with such nations of Europe and other countries as may entertain the proposals whenever practicable.

Resolved, That a committee of three, of which the President of this convention shall be one, be intrusted with the presentation of these resolutions at Washington.

These were referred to the committee on resolutions.

This indicates the general drift of sentiment in the convention, which was not distinctively a peace meeting, but one for arbitration as a means of peace. Several of the delegates and notably Dr. Wayland, editor of the National Baptist, took occasion to say that they did not belong to that class that desired peace at any price, and that under some circumstances they would engage in war. This was too much for some of the Quaker brethren to hear without protest. It was argued that to say that under some circumstances we will fight, is like appending to an exhortation to honesty a concession that we will not be honest at any price, or mixing in a temperance sermon a plea for the right to get drunk under some circumstances. B. C. Hobbs from the Western Indiana Yearly Meeting of Friends, said, "I am a peace man at any price, in the same sense, and for the same reason that I am a Christian at any price." But all men did not view it in that light, and he was willing to co-operate with those occupying a lower place of action. These differences of opinion were maintained with the kindest personal feeling.

Nothing in the proceedings seemed to me more beautiful and impressive than the remarks in the evening from the venerable president. He said that while he had no hope of a speedy accomplishment of the objects of this convention, he had most undoubted faith in its ultimate triumph. He said that he had been deeply impressed with reading the prophecy of Isaiah concerning Christ, where he is called "The Wonderful, Counselor, the Everlasting Father and the Prince of Peace." We thought these titles prefigured the Gospel dispensation, or more properly, the manifestation of Christ to the world. In the beginning it was established by miracles, and was the Wonderful. Afterwards it was largely the mission of Christianity to establish schools and institutions for Christian instruction. In this it was the Counselor. Nor we are living in the period of practical Christian benevolence, when Christianity is pouring out its accumulated treasures for the mitigation of human suffering, and the beneficent regard for the poor among men. This manifested Christ as the Everlasting Father. But one more period awaits us, in which he shall appear as the Prince of Peace, and then "of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end." "The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this." Is. 9: 6, 7.

The sessions to-day are in a commodious upper hall and are of great interest. I have time only to add that I met some of the old time and earnest friends of our reform, showing that all true reforms are in harmony with each other. Among them are Daniel Hill of New Vienna, Ohio, and W. B. Orvis of this city, who extends me a welcome hand and earnest sympathy.

Nov. 28th.—The convention this afternoon was occupied mainly with the discussion of a series of resolutions, but several papers were read and referred; one of much ability by ex-Gov. Stanton, President of the National Arbitration League of Washington.

After the adoption of these resolutions, a preamble and resolution was presented by B. C. Hobbs that had behind it more than appeared on its surface. It proposed that this convention proceed to perpetuate itself as an independent, international arbitration association. In his remarks he said that the call of the convention had originated with its members, the National League having withdrawn its previous call for a convention on the 22nd, and that so far they had conducted the meeting irrespective of any previous arrangements. He said that at a previous convention of the National League held in Washington they found the churches closed against them and the ministry not co-operating. He wished to secure co-operation of Christian churches and ministry, and thought they might do so if they continued as an independent association.

The real difficulty that is in the way of hearty co-operation by such men as B. C. Hobbs and other Christian reformers, is the palpable fact that the officers and leading men in the National League, which has its headquarters at Washington, are not evangelical Christians. Some of them are professed Spiritualists, and much as Christians may desire to work for the cause of peace, they feel unwilling to put themselves under such leadership. Sooner or later there will be two arbitration leagues, one representing the evangelical, and the other the humanitarian and commercial aspects of the question.

The resolution of Prof. Hobbs, however, met a violent protest from members of the National League and was laid on the table. The evening session was mainly devoted to addresses by Daniel Hill of Ohio and Gen. Armstrong of Hampton, Va. The former was a most able presentation of the evils of war and the remedy. The convention adjourned to meet at the call of its officers. H. H. HINMAN.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,
JONATHAN BLANCHARD,
OF ILLINOIS.

For Vice President,
JOHN A. CONANT,
OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

There is a universal expression of discouragement among the laboring and producing classes in this country. They see no hope of relief from any existing political party, and have little confidence in the reforms and reformers which have been agitating and professing great things in the past. Large numbers of voting men do not visit the polls from year to year. Meanwhile oppression increases, and the plans of our enemies are being carried into effect. "Awake thou that sleepest," and put such men in office as are described in the 13th of Romans.

THE RUIN OF CHICAGO.

RUM SHOPS AND POLITICS RUN BY FOREIGNERS AND DEMAGOGUES.

Chicago is growing with a rapidity that is truly astonishing. No one would think that only a few short years since a large portion of its business centre was destroyed by fire. Morally, I think it is the worst place I ever visited. New York is a paradise in comparison with it. All the rum-shops and theatres are in full blast on the Sabbath day, and the churches are slimly attended. I visited the Sabbath-school of Dr. Scudder's church on Sunday afternoon, and the difference between that and the one connected with the church of which he was formerly pastor in Brooklyn was painfully apparent. I also learned that to obtain a full congregation in the evening the choicest kind of singing has to be resorted to. At night I attended service at the Methodist church of which the Rev. Dr. Hatfield is pastor. On entering the audience-room, and seeing such a few persons present, I thought I must be mistaken about the place, and started to go out, but was interrupted in the act by a gentleman coming in, who said, "Please stay to services." I immediately recognized the speaker as Dr. Hatfield, the man who drew such crowds in Brooklyn and Philadelphia. The only reply I could find heart to say was, "I will stay." He preached a sermon full of fire and good common sense, showing that he had lost none of the elements which made him in other days so popular in the East. The fact is, Chicago is full of the worst class of humanity that drifts into Western cities. Of course there is a great work being done to make things better; but the tale told by the ballot-box shows the depravity of the majority of her citizens. As a city, it is in about as bad a condition as New York was before the Legislature took it out of the hands of the "Dead Rabbits" and rowdies of the "Big Six" order, and placed it virtually in charge of Thomas Acton and John A. Kennedy—men who did more to crush out law-defying ruffians than New York had ever before been blessed with, or has seen since.—Correspondence New York Witness.

—A correspondent of the New York Witness who has traveled extensively throughout the country for several years, makes this observation at the conclusion of a long trip, which we commend to all young men who are tempted to join some secret lodge in order to have friendly attention while traveling. "A traveler in the West who respects himself, keeps sober, and strives to make other people happy will never want a friend, or have to say, 'What a sour world this is!'"

THE HOME.

WILD GRAPES.

He mused in the firelight: "Autumn has waned,
The harvest is garnered—the vintage is through;
I have worked and have watched under sunshine and dew,
Not minding the toil, if I only attained
The end that I wrought for;—and what have I gained?

"No labor was stinted, no pains did I spare,
No weeds did I suffer to strangle the roots,
No pruning I ever withheld from the shoots;
I trained every tendril with patience and care,
No matter how weary;—the fault was not there.

"My clusters shone fuller than ever before,
As rounded and ripened they hung in the light,
All amber and gold to my rapturous sight;
They seem to me fragrant and sweet to the core,
And I thought with a smile, of the wine I should pour,

"But now, as I sit in the firelight here,
I am gloomed with a feeling of failure and waste;
The grapes in my baskets are harsh to my taste;
My wine does not strengthen nor fill me with cheer;
I am sad at the meagre results of the year.

"Why was it? There neither was mildew nor frost,
Nor drought, nor distemper, nor lack in the soil,
Nor failure of fruitage, nor grudging of toil:—
Ah, me! I remember—too late—to my cost—
My grafts were wild grafts, and my vintage is lost!"

SHOOTING A THIEF.

No man can, perhaps, appreciate the horrors that haunt the man, who has, without sufficient reason, shed human blood, but the miserable wretch who does it. Not long ago we heard a man making inquiry whether he would be protected by law in shooting a thief in the act of stealing from him. He was properly advised that it would be murder, and moreover that it was shocking to contemplate such a thing. It called up in our mind an experience once related to us by a citizen of Overton county, in this State, with whom we were well acquainted. He had been missing meat from his smoke house. Time after time he noticed that some unknown thief was carrying it off. It provoked him very much, and nursing his temper from one discovery till the next, he became very angry. At last he concluded it was intolerable, and resolved to kill the thief. He had a trusty rifle and understood well how to use it. He kept it loaded and convenient for grasping. A close watch was kept for the rogue. One bright moonshiny night he thought he heard a noise about the smoke house and seizing his rifle crept stealthily to a place where he could see. There stood his man by the side of a crack, through which he had been stealing the bacon. He saw his white shirt bosom, and resolved to do deadly work. Evidently he was not discovered. In the heat of his passion he did not falter in the terrible resolution he had formed. With care and deliberation the instrument of death was leveled at his heart. Crack! flash! and down tumbled the hated thief. The work was done. He was dead. Then the thought came home to him like a thunderbolt, "I am a murderer!" How his heart sunk in him as he saw his victim in the pale moonlight stretched in death—hurried without one moment's notice into eternity. What had he done, and what must he do? How insignificant his losses appeared to him then. With fluttering heart and trembling step he walked into his room again, and sitting down before the fire buried his face in his hands. What should he do? He told his wife the terrible result of his shot, and they consulted what course to pursue. It would not do to have it known. Should he bury him somewhere and never mention it? How could he carry such a dreadful secret?

Overwhelmed with the enormity of his crime he sat in bewilderment. At last he determined to go and see who it was. No doubt it was an acquaintance. Who was there in the neighborhood he did not know? He rose in his agony and went to the spot. As he approached near his victim what was his joy to find that after all it was only a large dog. It had a white breast, and had reared up against the wall trying to draw meat through the crack as it had done before. The shot was so fatal it died without a whine. The old man, at the conclusion of his story, with much feeling remarked that men who talked about killing a a fellow-creature for theft did not know what they would be doing. "Why, sir," he continued in substance, "if a man were to steal everything I have on earth I would not shed his blood to stop him. You cannot imagine how I felt as a realization of what I thought I had done flashed over me."

This is a substantial statement of the facts, but must far fall very short of making that impression upon you, that would result from hearing old Mr. P. tell it with the emotion which he manifested in relating it to me.—Christian Messenger.

REVENGING IT ON CHRIST.

A MORAL DIALOGUE.

Pastor. Good morning, Brother Baxlid. I have not seen you at meeting lately. How is this?

Baxlid. Fact, Brother Goodspell, I have not been to church lately very often, and I do not think you will see me there very soon.

P. But why is this? And you have not attended the Lord's Supper, either, for several months.

B. But I cannot heartily attend the services of the church, after Brother Littlelove has treated me in such a way.

P. You feel sure that he has done you a wrong?

B. Of course I do.

P. And so you have forsaken the communion table and deserted the church?

B. I hardly feel ready to have it put that way.

P. In other words, then, you are taking your revenge on your Saviour for the wrong done you by Brother Littlelove.

B. No, pastor, you must not look at it so.

P. But I cannot help seeing it so. When you leave God's house and God's worship, and Christ's ordinances, whose cause are you injuring? Is it Brother Littlelove's or Christ's?

B. I am not trying to injure the Lord's cause.

P. But you are doing that which surely tends to injure his cause. It is Jesus that suffers when his children quarrel. It is he that is wounded in the house of his friends. When Baxlid and Littlelove begin to fight it is Christ who catches the blows. You are revenging on him the wrong that another has done to you. Is this thy kindness to thy Friend?

PROMPT PAYMENT OF SMALL BILLS.

A wealthy banker in one of our large cities, who is noted for his large subscriptions to charities, and for his kindly habits of private benevolence, was called on one evening and asked to go to the help of a man who had attempted suicide. They found the man in a wretched house in an alley not far from the banker's dwelling. The front room was a cobbler's shop; behind it, on a miserable bed in the kitchen, lay the poor shoemaker, with a gaping gash in his throat, while his wife and children were gathered about him.

"We have been without food for days," said the woman, when he returned. "It is not my husband's fault. He is a hard-working, sober man. But he could neither get work, nor pay for that which he had done. To-day he went for the last time to collect a debt due him by a rich family, but the gentleman was not at home. My husband was weak from fasting, and seeing us starving drove him mad. So it ended that way," turning to the fainting, motionless figure on the bed.

The banker, having warmed and fed the family, hurried home, opened his desk, and took out a file of little bills. All his debts were promptly met but he was apt to be careless about the accounts of milk, bread, etc., because they were so petty. He found there was a bill of Michael Goodlow's, for repairing children's shoes, $10. Michael Goodlow was the suicide. It was the banker's unpaid debt which had brought these people to the verge of the grave, and driven this man to desperation, while at the very time the banker had given away thousands in charity.—Selected.

HURTFUL READING.

A bad book, magazine, or newspaper, is as dangerous to your child as a vicious companion, and will as surely corrupt his morals and lead him away from the path of safety. Every parent should set this thought clearly before his mind and ponder it well. Look to what your children read, and especially to the kind of papers that get into their hands, for there are now published scores of weekly papers, with attractive and sensuous illustrations, that are as hurtful to the young and innocent souls as poison to a healthful body. Many of these papers have attained a large circulation, and are sowing broadcast the seeds of vice and crime. Trenching on the very borders of indecency, they corrupt the morals, taint the imagination, and allure the weak and unguarded from the paths of innocence. The dangers to young persons from this cause were never so great as at this time, and every father and mother should be on their guard against an enemy that is sure to meet their child.

Look to it, then, that your children are kept free as possible from this taint. Never bring into your house a paper or a periodical that is not strictly pure. See to it that an abundance of the purest and healthiest reading is placed before your children. Hungry lambs will eat poison, but if well fed on good food, they let the poison alone. If you wish to save your own children and the children of others, do all you can to sustain and circulate healthy moral literature.—Sel.

ARE YOU A BACKSLIDER?

To backslide is to go back of a certain state once enjoyed.

Are you as earnest in the work of the Lord as you once was? Are you as anxious to get souls saved, as when you was first converted? Have you given up evil habits of life for Jesus' sake, and then taken them up again? Was you once plain in your dress, and for the sake of friends are you now putting on a little of the world? Have you begun to go to places that you once felt were not the places for Christians? Do you love secret prayer as well as you once did? Do you love to read your Bible as well as ever? Have you neglected family prayer? Have you neglected the self-examination you once practiced? Have you walked in all the light that God has let shine upon you? Are you trying to go around any of the crosses? Have you begun to murmur against your lot in life? Do you have less victory now than once, over all that is evil within and without? Have you made rectifiable mistakes without rectifying them? Have you fainted by the way? Have you lost courage? Have you less love now than you had at some past time? Have you less light upon the soul than you once had? Are you conscious of no particular advancement upon the highway? Is your faith in God less than in times past? Are you less humble than you was? Have you ceased to learn new lessons at the feet of Jesus every day?

Dear reader, if you are a backslider, repent quickly, and do your first works over again. Bible proofs for the questions: 1 Thess. 3: 12; Mal. 3: 8; James 1: 21; Gal. 5: 1; Gal. 5: 25; 1 John 1: 7; Gal. 6: 14; Phil. 2: 14; Eph. 3: 16–20; Eph. 4: 2, 3; Gal. 6: 9; Rev. 2: 4; 1 Peter 5: 5, 6; Prov. 4: 18.

HOME HINTS.

PRECAUTION AGAINST CONSUMPTION.

Let me, then, urge again upon you the importance of thorough and constant ventilation of your living rooms. Avoid crowded omnibuses or railway-carriages in which the windows are closely shut, or in which the ventilation is so small that it does not prevent the condensation of vapor on the windows. Above all, do not frequent crowded meetings, in which the organic exhalations are pent up within four walls. Remember, too, that the danger is especially great wherever there is a continuously high temperature. Prof. Koch tells us that the limit of temperature within which the baccilus can be cultivated is from about 86 degrees to 107 degrees Fahr., about the heat of a hot summer's day. The continuously high temperatures in which formerly our consumptive patients were condemned to live was the very worst condition with which to surround them. Consumption is a much more rapidly fatal disease in hot than in cold climates, and it is probable that it is more truly infectious. The Indians treat it as if it were almost as infectious as scarlet fever or measles, and we must ascribe its less prevalence there to the almost open-air life the inhabitants lead. The evil practice of heaping upon the bed at night the clothes that have been worn in the daytime, or even as some do, of wearing the same underclothing day and night, is most pernicious, and likely to breed consumption in those who live in houses where this practice is pursued.—Dr. Authur Ransome in Manchester Health Lectures.

FLAXSEED IN HOUSEHOLD MEDICINE.

A lady correspondent of the Scientific Press of San Francisco gives the following practical hints on the use of flaxseed as a household remedy:

Yesterday one of the boys came in from a walk through the fields, with the rather alarming announcement that he had a barley-head or wild oat in his eye. The eye looked red and inflamed, and could not be touched without pain. Several ineffectual attempts were made to remove the substance, whatever it might be, by drawing the upper lid back, and using a soft handkerchief. But the cause of the trouble could not be reached; it had fixed itself firmly at the back of the eyelid. Just then I remembered a hint given in some article on accidents; and, acting upon it, a single flaxseed was slipped into the corner of the eye, under the upper lid, and allowed to remain there for about ten minutes. Another effort was then made to remove the intruder, and with perfect success. It proved to be a grain of wild oat, with a long, needle-like point. Lubricated by the flaxseed, it slipped out with case, and in a few minutes the pain had entirely ceased, and the eye soon recovered its natural appearance.

No household in the country should ever be without a supply of flaxseed, both whole and ground; for there is scarcely anything which can be used with greater success by the amateur physician. At least half of the ailments of little children may be traced to cold, or to some disturbance of the digestive organs; and in either of these cases a flaxseed-poultice is a sovereign remedy.

Pour boiling water on the ground flaxseed, stirring briskly at the same time, till it is the consistence of mush; then put it into a flannel bag previously prepared, apply it as hot as it can be borne, and cover with several folds of flannel. Let it remain until it begins to cool, when it may be replaced by another. In cases of cold on the chest, hoarseness, and cough, it often acts like a charm, and also in attacks of diarrhœa, and pain in the bowels. I have seen a little child screaming in agony, relieved in a few moments by this safe household remedy, falling into a quiet sleep, and awaking the next morning quite well. Its great recommendation is, that it can do no harm, even if it should fail to do good, which is more than can be said of many nostrums confidently prescribed for family use.

Flaxseed tea, if properly made, is also excellent for colds and coughs, and is pleasant enough to necessitate no coaxing of the little ones. Put two tablespoonfuls of the seed into a quart of cold water, set it over the fire, and, when it begins to boil, allow it two minutes by the clock. Then strain, add the juice of a lemon, and white sugar to taste. Keep it on the back of the stove where it will be warm, and give a wineglassful at short intervals.

HINTS FOR FURNISHING FARM HOUSES.

Many farmers' wives and daughters have an instinctive sense of beauty in regard to the adornment of their homes, yet feel that their income is too limited to do any thing. But if they look around for what nature will freely supply, they will be surprised at the transformation which can be easily wrought in rooms that before seemed dull and plain. Ferns gathered in summer, and leaves in autumn, pressed, and pinned on the wall in irregular sprays, beginning at the cornice, look very graceful. Let white tarleton, costing eighteen or twenty cents a yard, be cut in strips about half a yard wide and tacked over parlor and sitting-room windows for lambrequins. On these pin some brilliant autumn leaves scattered here and there carelessly, with perhaps a border of ferns, and you will be astonished at the fairy-like appearance presented. I remember gathering great quantities of ferns while staying one summer at a New England rural home, and the satirical remark of the farmer, that "he wished he could turn all the Philadelphia ladies loose into his field and have them pull up all the 'brakes.'" But even this practical man was impressed by the arrangement above described.—E. Lynnde in American Agriculturist for December.

THE CHILD'S PRAYER.

By Alpine lake, 'neath shady rock,
The herd-boy knelt beside his flock,
And softly told, with pious air,
His alphabet as evening prayer.

Unseen, his pastor lingered near.
"My child, what means the sound I hear?"
"May I not in the worship share,
And raise to heaven my evening prayer?"

"Where'er the hills and valleys blend,
The sounds of prayer and praise ascend."
"My child, a prayer yours cannot be;
You've only said your A B C."

"I have no better way to pray;
All that I know to God I say:
I tell the letters on my knees;
He makes the words}Himself to please."

ABOUT BOOKS.

It might have been in some Asiatic forest, shadowy with the great green fans and sword-blades of the palm trees, and heavy with sweet tropical odors, that a sinewy savage stood long ago, scratching upon a leaf the image of some animal he hunted, or the outlines of the face of his dusky bride. It was then the first step was taken toward making a book.

But countless as the steps are which lie between the rude inscription and our printed volume, the fact remains that the tree is parent of the book. It always carries us back to the green woodlands or the river's brink. The Latin word liber means originally the inner bark of a tree. Our Saxon forefathers used the bark of the birch tree, which they called boc, and we have only added an o to make it "book." The word "leaf" tells its own tale of vegetable origin—a book is filled with leaves.

In swampy places of the Nile, where the subsiding waters left pools to stagnate under the copper sky, there grew in olden times a forest of tall reeds, whose stems lifted high their tufted plumes of hair-like fiber. The people cut the leafless wood and removing a delicate and textile skin, which vied with parchment as a material for writing upon, they had the far-famed papyrus, which in name has become shortened and sharpened to paper. Thus the leaves of plants, and the bark of trees, and the skins of animals were used to write upon; and the old Romans rolled up a number of these separate pieces, and called it volumen, from which we derive our volume.

But the book grew slowly, and its form differed widely in different nations. In some nations records were kept by knotted cords, strings of different colors, knots of various sizes. By such simple records the history of the ancient Peruvians was kept. But a company of men was necessary to receive the traditions of the nations thus represented, and at their death history died with them, since durable material was needed. The skins of animals, tanned into a smooth leather, offered a durable substance. Parchment and vellum (still in use in the lawyer's office) spring from this source. Reeds, pointed and dipped in gum-water colored with charcoal or soot, were the forerunners of pen and ink. The delicate tissues wrapping the heart of the stem of the papyrus plant were prepared to receive the semi-liquid gummy soot with which the Xenophons and the Virgils of ancient Greece and Rome traced their flowing histories and sparkling poems. The books written upon hard and stiff material were put together much like a folding fire-screen. Those upon soft and pliable tissues were rolled upon sticks, as we roll a map or wall diagram. A well-ordered library in those days resembled a band-box filled with colored sticks standing upon end.

The Mexicans kept their history upon cotton cloth, painted in various colors, and covered with curious characters. The frightened natives bore to their king the terrible news that Cortes and his Spaniards had appeared, by painting a great ship, men, pale-faced and bearded, cannon breathing fire and smoke, and crashing the great trees to splinters. Picture-writing forms a link in the progress of book-making.

From Phœnicia, through Greece and Rome, we received the groundwork of those twenty-six letters of which our 38,000 words are made. Books at one time were very scarce and costly. King Alfred gave a large estate for one volume in the year 872, and a homily was sold for 200 sheep and forty bushels of wheat. An illuminated copy of the Bible was sold for $2,000.

Many centuries before the Christian era the Chinese printed upon blocks, the letters being cut in wood; but the honor of printing with single types belongs to John Koster, of Haarlem, John Faust, of Mentz, and John Gutenberg, of Strasburg. He first printed with blocks the leaves of his books, upon one side only, and then pasted the leaves together; the second improved the work of the first; and the latter invented cut metal types. To Peter Schaeffer belongs the honor of printing, as he devised matrices in which letters could be cast, thus saving the expense of cutting.—Christian Advocate.

DOOMED TO FAILURE.

Fifteen years ago Harry Fowler—we do not use the real name—was a brilliant but nervous boy in a preparatory school of one of our large cities. He entered college, and soon became noted for his essays in the literary club which he joined.

He was not a thorough scholar, and his observation had been limited; but he had a happy faculty of expression, and could say "nothing" with a crisp vivacity which strongly resembled wit.

The college boys with one voice pronounced him a genius. He was the man—every college can boast of one—who "would be heard of in the world."

Harry was easily convinced of the truth of this prophecy. Why not assault fame now, he thought? Why spend years of drudgery in preparation for authorship?

He sent one or two articles to a daily paper. Unfortunately they were accepted. He left college, went to the city, and at nineteen began what he was pleased to call "a literary life." The boy had talent; immature, but attractive. A sketch or two was accepted by the magazines, and won praise. But there his success ended. He had neither knowledge, experience, nor poetic fancy to give to the world, and pleasing nothings do not long command a sale in publishing offices.

To support life he became a reporter on a daily paper, working all night to gain the pittance which supported him. At the same time he besieged in vain every magazine and publisher in the country with novels, sketches, and poems. Made fitful by his temperament and habits of life, he soon lost his position of salaried reporter, and became a sensational writer, a mere hack, furnishing accounts of murders, of prize-fights, accidents, etc., at so much—or so little—a column.

Disappointment and irregular hours had soured his temper and wore on his nerves. He began to need something to "brace him up." There is no need that we should go down the miserable road step by step. A few weeks ago, Harry Fowler committed suicide in his room, leaving a letter behind, in which he arraigned the world as blind to his real worth, and God as unjust to him.

How many other young men and women are rushing into authorship, seeking to take the position of teachers of mankind, while as yet they have accumulated no resources of thought or of knowledge, have seen nothing of the world, and have not even learned how to work! The end for them may not be as tragic as in this case; but it will assuredly be disappointment, bitter and enduring.

"Do not," said Jerrold to such an ambitious lad, "take down the shutters until you have something to put in the windows."—Sel.

TEMPERANCE.

THE LAW OF MORTALITY FROM ALCOHOL.

Dr. B. W. Richardson, president of the St. Pancras Total Abstinence Association, presiding last evening (Oct. 15) at its annual meeting, held in St. Pancras Vestry Hall, said that, from tables made up by Messrs. Mitchell and Buchan, of Edinburgh, on the subject of weather and mortalities, he found that the mortality from alcohol had its particular season, and that from the period mortality returns began first to be collected the periods were well defined. Messrs. Mitchell and Buchan indicated this law by what is known as "Bloxam's curve." He found by this scale, as applied to disease from alcoholic poisons, that the line of mortality was singularly marked. At New Year's Day the line showing the alcoholic diseases, alcoholism, and delirium tremens appeared just above the mean line; in January it fell below the mean line, and continued below it through February, March and April. In May it began rapidly to rise; in June it rose and fell. but always remained above the mean: in July it ran up rapidly, and in the third week of July attained its maximum. It began to decline in August, continued steadily to decline in September, fell below the mean in October, and continued below until the close of December, when it commenced to ascend, and yielded what was called the smaller maximum, which was reached the first week of January, after which it declined again below the mean until May.

In the middle of May last, when the mortality from alcohol naturally rose by a rather sudden bound, the revenue from the sale of alcohol went up, giving an increase of £30,000, and that increase continued in a smaller degree during the next four months, yielding an increase of £15,000, or a total during the whole period of maximum mortality from alcohol—from the middle of May to the end of September—of £45,000. The lesson he drew from these facts was that the increase of the sale of the alcoholic poisons and the necessary increase of mortality from them were due to the weather. Every season had its diseases. Messrs. Mitchell and Buchan defined six periods in which there were conditions of weather when the diseases causing the mortalities were specially favored. Among these it was more prevalent when the air was dry and warm and heated. Then the evaporation from the body was very great, and there was much thirst, and people who indulged in alcohol drank more, and increased both the revenue of the nation and the revenue of death.—St. James Gazette.

A CASE OF TOBACCO POISONING.

A youth of fifteen died in Brooklyn the other day, from a failure of the heart, accompanied with a suspension of brain action. He was a very ambitious boy, and had set out to become a lawyer. He began to use tobacco last winter, soon after he left school to begin the study of law, smoking cigarettes and also chewing. In a few months his health began to fail. His parents thought he was suffering from lack of out-door exercise. His appetite failed and he had bad headaches. He grew listless, with a great desire to sleep. Finally he was confined to bed. His physician prescribed a nourishing diet, as the boy seemed to lack blood. He did not improve; and the doctor concluded that the symptoms were such as to strongly indicate nicotine poison. He inquired into the boy's habits, and was not surprised to learn that he had been smoking cigarettes excessively. Here the doctor was sure, was the cause of the trouble; but it was too late to stop it. The poisoned nerves could not perform their proper functions; the lungs became congested; the heart failed to do its work, and the boy died.

"He smoked to excess." But what is excess? The French Government holds a monopoly of the tobacco trade, derives a large part of its revenue from the sale of cigarettes, and is naturally interested in extending the traffic. Yet the French authorities forbid the use of tobacco by the students in the Government schools. It has been demonstrated in them, that ANY use of tobacco by the young is excess, and that no smoking boys ever gained or maintained a high rank as students. It was found further that the young smokers very largely failed in physical as well as in manual development; that so far from making a man of a boy, smoking tended to arrest certain natural drvelopments by which alone the youth could hope to become a man, with manly vigor, courage and capacity. As the Government wishes to educate and train boys to be men, it wisely forbids the use of tobacco in the schools.—Mastery.

—A saloon-keeper in Brooklyn came to trial the other day on a charge of selling beer on Sunday. When the jury was impanelled they were asked by the counsel for the defence if any of them belonged to temperance societies. None of them happened to have any such connection. But on close inquiry it was discovered that two of them were Methodists, and they were not permitted to serve. Thus it appears, in the first place, that if a man belongs to a society whose object is to save his fellow men from the drunkard's doom, he is thereby rendered incompetent to judge whether an excise law has been violated or not; and in the second place, that if he belongs to one of the leading Christian denominations, he is incapacitated to decide a question of fact. Very soon a man will be ineligible in a murder trial who believes in the Ten Commandments.—N. Y. Witness.

Says a Kansas gentleman, writing from Wellington, in that State: "We caught a man last week selling whisky on the sly, and fined him $600 and costs, which was nearly $100 more, and sent the gent to jail for six months besides. Probably he sits up nights in his cell to sum up prohibition as a failure.

THE CHURCHES.

—Rev. D. K. Flickinger, missionary secretary of the United Brethren church, contracted last year for the building of a missionary steamer for use on the west coast of Africa. The vessel is of iron, 60 feet long, 15 tons burden, cost $8,500. The fitting up of the vessel in London and getting it to Africa will cost much more. This work is now being done under the charge of Rev. J. K. Billheimer.

—The Executive Committee of the American Missionary Assoeiation has elected the Rev. James Powell of this city, Associate Secretary with Dr. Strieby. His office will be transferred to New York next spring. For the past ten year's Mr. Powell has been District Secretary for the society in the West, with headquarters in Chicago. Mr. Powell's many friends will be sorry indeed to lose him from the West, where he has made an enviable record in his ablc, unwearied and eloquent advocacy of the causc of the freedmen.

—At the county meeting of the Sabbath School superintendents in the First Baptist church in this city, last week, Mr. E. F. C. Cragin said there were 70,000 children in Chicago not gathered into the Sabbath Schools, and he presented figures to show that in 1840 there was one church to every 700 people in the city; in 1850 one church to 1,000 people; in 1860 one church to 1,300 people; in 1870 one church to 1,700 people; in 1880 one church to 2,082 people. The superintendents voted that all their teachers be espeeially invited to attend the Saturday noon meetings in Farwell Hall.

—The members of the United Presbyterian church, Chicago, to the number of 150 visited their pastor, Rev. Dr. W. T. Meloy, Wednesday evening last and presented him with an elegant parlor suite. The presentation speech was made by Mr. J. M. Wallaee. The gift came entirely unexpected, and will be cherished as a true tribute of the love and respect which this congregation hold for their pastor.

—On the suggestion of Mr. Moody the Chicago Avenue church and congregation havc for several years chosen a practical method of celebrating Thanksgiving. The poor of the North Side are visited by experieneed missionaries and reported to the church officials several days previous to Thanksgiving Day. Early Thursday morning, before the religious services held in the church, wagon loads of meats, flour, groceries, vegetables, and other edibles, with clothing, fuel, and whatever may be donated for the purpose, are distributed to these worthy families, irrespective of nationality, religious tenets, or social condition. About 150 families were this year abundantly supplied. The religious services of the day were conducted by Pres. C. A. Blanchard, who made a brief address and the meeting was given to the congregation, and so numerous and enthusiastic were the short speeches that an evening meeting was added to the Thanksgiving service.

—General Wallace, United States Minister to Turkey, supported by the British Ambassador, has energetically pressed the Porte for the punishment of the men who recently attacked the two American missionaries in Asia Minor.

—A movement is under way to restore the Castle church at Wittenberg, on whose doors Luther's famous theses were nailed, which had suffered much from war and fire. In its vaults are the tombs of Luther and Melancthon.

—At the triennial competitive examination of Chinese students at Hang Chow last year, 10,000 copies of Rev. Griffith John's book on Christianity as the entrance gate to virtue and knowledge, were distributed among the 13,000 students from all parts of the empire.

—General interest attaches to the memorial in process of erection to William Tyndale on the Thames embankment, in London. It is a fitting acknowledgment of the debt of gratitude English-speaking people owe to the translator of the New Testament and the Pentateuch in their own language.

—A remarkable revival is in progress in British Guiana, at Georgetown, where, among a population of fifty thousand, there are three Methodist chapels, one holding fifteen hundred persons. Two hundred members have been added to the church, and many children brought under religious teaching.

—The subjects for the International Sunday school lessons for 1884 will be largely in the Acts and the Epistles. Three months will be spent with David and the Psalms. The last three months will be with Solomon and the Books of Wisdom, the selections being from Kings, Proverbs and Ecclesiastes.

—Dr. J. M. W. Farnham, of Newton Center, Mass., is sending out, on behalf of the Chinese Religious Tract Society of Shanghai, a circular accompanied with blanks asking for statistics of Chinese schools in the United States. We copy two sentences from it: "It is purposed to publish a list of the schools for Chinese in the United States, together with such other facts as are calculated to increase the interest taken in these "strangers" among us. Such a statement will serve as a bond of union and sympathy, and enable the workers to become mutually helpful."

—The Rev. Ruttonji Nowroji, who has charge of a congregation of 494 Christians, while on a tour in the vicinity of Aurungabad, India, speaks of a Brahman schoolmaster who visited him daily. After many earnest conversations, when having their last interview, this Brahman, joining both hands with tears in his eyes, exclaimed: "I will remember your kindness to my dying day. I know not when God will permit us to meet each other. But, oh sir, let me make one request! In all your preaching and at the conclusion of every religious discourse, call upon my countrymen to learn to read. When they read your Scriptures they will be convinced that Christianity is divine, revealing to sinners God's plan of salvation." Such an incident discloses the growing convictions of many intelligent Hindus who have not yet professed their faith in Christ.

—The city of New York contains from 15,000 to 20,000 Bohemians, mostly Romanists, and living in colonies in different parts of the city. Rev. Gustave Alexy, a Hungarian, gathered a church of these persons which is connected with the Presbytery of New York. Over this church Rev. Vincent Park was installed pastor on November 4th. The church has about 80 members, and has three Sabbath schools, located among the different colonies. The main school contains 300 pupils, and the other two have from 50 to 75 each.

—The Scandinavian churches support "Seamen's Missions" in different seaports of Europe and appoint chaplains, who visit the ships of their nationalities. The most important station is London, and a conference of the chaplains was held recently in that city, in order to work more in concert and to devise plans for the extension of the mission abroad. The establishment of a mission in San Francisco was taken into serious consideration. The chaplains and a large number of captains have organized a "Bethel Union," for the promotion of divine worship on ship-board. The crews of Norwegian ships lying in the docks have a church near at hand, where they can spend idle hours in the reading room. The Swedes can visit a "Swedish Temperance Hotel," directed by a Swedish lady.

Joseph Cook, the distinguished lecturer, has done an exceedingly valuable piece of work in formulating a series of twenty-four questions touching the relations of Christianity to Japanese society, and obtaining answers to these questions from the leading missionaries in Japan and their chief native helpers. These questions are very skillfully put, and the answers, given by Drs. Verbeck, Greene, Gordon and Curtis, and by Rev. Messrs. Ibuka, Neesima, and other Japanese of Tokio and Kioto, are such as throw a flood of light upon this important subject. Six columns of the Independent are filled with these questions and answers. From the latter it appears that the Japanese are very intelligent; that they read Buckle, Mill, Paine, Spencer and Ingersoll with avidity; that the effects of higher education of Japanese youth in England and America is almost wholly bad; that the drift of Japanese institutions of learning is hostile to Christianity, and that Buddhism shows much life in Japan, and its services are crowded. Mr. Cook deserves hearty thanks for thus bringing out the real facts in the case, and we trust that the outcome of this examination of the religious work in Japan will be wiser methods, abler men, redoubled zeal, and far greater victories for Christ.— Golden Rule.

A REMARKABLE SEASON OF FASTING AND PRAYER.

The account of it is given in a recent letter of the Rev. Dr. Stewart of the United Presbyterian Mission in India. In one of the churches of the Mission things had assumed a very disheartening aspect. Many cases of scandal and disorderly conduct on the part of church members had arisen, and the non-Christians had been excited to greater opposition than usual, making every effort to annoy the missionaries and obstruct religious work.

Under such circumstances the more "spiritual" hardly knew what to do or what to expect. It seemed as if the work of years was about to go to pieces. At length the Native Session appointed a week of prayer and fasting, and "such fasting as few have, perhaps, ever practiced or even heard of. Church members, unless compelled to do otherwise by sickness or unusual weakness, were expected every day during the whole week, from sunrise to sunset, to abstain from both food and drink, and to take only one full meal within any given twenty-four hours; this, too, in India, and in the month of August when the sun pours down its hottest beams."

What was the result? Suspended members were brought to repentance. At the celebration of the Lord's Supper, which immediately followed, more than fifty persons participated. The missionary in charge says: "It has done the congregation immense good—sinners have been converted, four from Islam and one from Hindooism, and the city itself is stirred."—Intelligencer.

EGYPT IN HISTORY AND PROPHECY.

This excellent pamphlet which is offered as a premium to every old subscriber who renews and sends a new name with $4.00 (see 8th page) is thus described:

"Those who have read the trenchant utterances of Robert Patterson in his 'Fables of Infidelity and Facts of Faith,' will scarcely need a second invitation to obtain and read this production from his pen. His personal acquaintance with the land of Egypt, and his studies and lectures on Egyptology delivered some years ago, together with his earnest and graphic style, all combine to make his work exceedingly interesting to all students of history and prophecy.

"The theories of human progression are weighed in the balances and found wanting, in the light of the splendors of ancient Egypt and the wretchedness and squalor of its present dejected condition. The doctrines of evolution have here had their best test, through a stretch of forty centuries; and ancient monuments, compared with the birds and beasts of Egypt to-day, show that there has not been a feather's variation in four thousand years.

"The memorials of Egypt's ancient civilization; its anticipations of the modern arts and sciences; its temples, sculptures, pyramids, obelisks, and other monuments pass in rapid survey. Her religion, her science, her commerce, her navigation, her astronomy, geometry, and education all are noticed. The world's debt to Egypt as the fountain of civilization and the seat of the most famous library and museum of ancient times; her lighthouse and pyramids, which are among the wonders of the world; the indebtedness of the world to Egypt for the first translation of the Old Testament ever made, and for the first Sunday-school ever established; the fulfillment of the prophecies in her downfall, degradation, and ruin on account of her sins, with her misery and distress during ages of subjection and abasement; these, and other matters of importance, combine to make this a work of great and engrossing interest to the devout Christian, and a most direct and powerful argument against infidelity, and in favor of the truth of the Scriptures."

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

FARM NOTES.

TAKE CARE OF YOUR LIVE STOCK.

Good shelter.—It is absolute economy to provide warm and comfortable winter quarters for all live stoek, with an ample supply of pure fresh air. When animals are housed in well-made barns and stables, they require much less food to keep them in a good condition. Lumber, in this form, is cheaper than hay or grain for wintering farm stock. Pure water in abundance is very needful for the health of the animals. It should be drank fresh from the well. If left in the trough to freeze, it soon becomes as cold as ice water, and when taken into the animal system it requires much heat to bring it up to the required temperature. Avoid as far as possible having the watering troughs partly filled with iee and snow. They may be made so as to turn over whcn not in use, and this keeps them clean and free from the chilling ice.

Live stock should be fed regularly. Even if not generously fed, this regularity is better than an excess for a few days, and then a lack of food for a time. Animals are ncver eontented when hungry, and should not be permitted to thus beeome uneasy. The damage done by one omitted feeding cannot be made good by a double ration afterwards. This slip-shod method of feeding is quite sure to bring disorder into the flock or stable.

Horses.—An idle team may be wintered upon good hay alone, but when lightly worked, a little grain at noon may be needed. They are to be kept in good health and flesh, and the amount of grain should be governed accordingly. Horses doing heavy work will need a few quarts of ground oats and corn daily, in addition to an abundance of the best hay. Young colts should have exeellent care, for their future usefulness depends largely upon the the growth they make the first winter. Linseed oil cake in small doses is onc of the best remedies for eostivencss in the young farm animals.

Cows.—As the weather begins to grow cold the cows will fall off in milk unless an abundance of nutritious food is provided in the stalls. Beets eut or pulped, and mixed with cut hay, to which eornmeal is added, makes an excellent ration for milch eows. It is of the greatest importance to kcep up the flow of milk at the beginning of winter. Calves and yearlings may be kept in roomy sheds where, with good feed and abundant litter, they will make a large amount of excellent manure before spring.

Sheep should be kept from the lambs, or they will erowd and rob the young stock. The flock may take a run on the stubble fields during warm days. The ticks should all be killed before midwinter. Boys may be paid, by the dozen, for picking them off the sheep. Breeding ewes to have early mutton lambs, should be kept in a separate yard and shed, where they may have the most generous feeding.—American Agriculturist.

MEASURES OF DIFFERENT COUNTRIES.—The Newburyport Herald in the course of an article on weights and measures, remarks that no two nations have the same—though the same name to designate them may be used in different countries. Take the mile measure, for instanee. In England and the United States a mile means 1,760 yards; in the Netherlands it is 1,093 yards; while in Germany it is 10,120 yards, or nearly six English miles; in Franee 2,025 yards. The Scoteh mile is 1,984 yards, and the Irish 3,038 yards. The Spauish mile is 2,472 yards and the Swedish 11,700 yards. These are eomputed in English yards, but the yard itself, of three feet in length, has divers signifieations in different places. The English yard is 36 inches; the Freneh 39.13 inehes; the Geneva yard 57.60; the Austrian 37.35; the Spanish yard 33.00; the Prussian 36.58; the Russian 39.95. For measures of capacity, the dissimilarity is yet wider and more perplexing. The British have two sorts of bushels, the Imperial and the Winchester, of different capacity. The Winchester is the United States standard; but the State of New York has another of different capaeity, and other States have varying standards of their own. These are incommeasurable with the measures of any other nations.

A Dictionary and Engraving Free.—It will be seen from the advertisement of the American Agriculturist (N. Y.) elsewhere, that a splendid six-huudred-page Dictionary and a superb Engraving, can be obtained free, by everybody. The American Agriculturist, now forty-three years old, continues to be the recognized leading Agricultural Journal of the world. Every uumber contains nearly one hundred columns of original reading matter, and one hundred original Engravings by the leading Rural writers of the country, and by the leading artists. The editorial matter is furnished by such well known writers as Orange Judd, George Thurber, Joseph Harris, Wm. Clift. Byron D. Halsted, Prest. Liautard, Prof. Slade, of Harvard University, and Prof. Thompson, Nebraska University, while such well known artists as Edwin Forbes, Wm. M. Cary, and Alfred Trumble get up the original illustrations. During the coming year the paper will devote special attention to house plans for farmers, exposures of humbugs, and information as to the best points in the West for settlers. The circulation of the American Agriculturist is to-day larger than at any period since the organization of the Company publishing it, and it will continue to be, as heretofore, the great journal for the Farm, Garden, and Household. Price $1.50 a year. English or German. New subscriptions before Dec. 10th, receive Dec. uumber of this year free. Specimen copies and Premium Lists forwarded to all applicants, as per advertisemeut.

An Awful Responsibility.

EVERYBODY has something to say about consumption. We all deplore its terrible ravages, but only a few of us seem to have enough common sense to take the proper means of preventing it. It is as simple as "two and two are four," that Hale's Honey of Horehound and Tar, taken as a remedy for coughs, colds, difficult breathing, hoarseness, or any of the symptoms which pave the way for that terrible destroyer, will effect a radical and rapid cure of the ailment, and avert all danger. Whoever, under these circumstauces, neglects to resort to the true specific, assumes a fearful responsibility. Of druggists.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary, the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy aud permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. THE PUREST IS THE BEST.

In the selection of SUNDAY-SCHOOL PAPERS, the most important point to be considered is the moral tone of the subject matter. If this is of a questionable character, the papers should be shunned, no matter how large, how attractive, or how low the price. Such papers are

COSTLY AT ANY PRICE.

The country is being flooded with S. S. literature that is largely composed of what may be properly termed "RELIGIOUS FICTION," the tendency of which is to create a distaste for sound reading and foster an appetite for fiction of a more deleterious character.

The engravings of these papers are equally objectionable. In many cases a lady or girl dressed in the height of fashion is made the HEROINE OF A STORY, thus putting the highest sanction to extravagance and pride. With such instructors in our Sunday-schools we cannot expect the children to grow up with a love for sound literature and with correct ideas of Christian propriety. With a view of supplying S. S. papers, of a pure and elevating character, the publishers are issuing

FOUR MONTHLY PAPERS.

They are FREE FROM FICTION, and the cuts are chosen with great care. While they are thus carefully edited, they are not lacking in attractiveness. They are well printed on beautiful tinted paper. The children are delighted with them. The very low price at which this line of S. S. papers is issued, places them within the reach of even schools of limited means

THE MARVELLOUS WEBBER SINGING DOLL.

A MECHANICAL WONDER.—Last year we first introduced this CHARMING NOVELTY to the children of America, and it is safe to assert that no Toy ever devised attained such immediate popularity. Fully aware of its merit we had thousands of Dolls ready for the Holiday trade, notwithstanding which the supply was exhausted early in December, and hundreds of children who came to our store were disappointed. We have been accumulating stock for the past nine months, and shall endeavor this year to fill all orders the day of receipt. The Doll has been improved in every way since last year. Instead of the stiff German body, as in all imported Dolls, our Doll has an AMERICAN MADE BODY with limber joints, so that it will sit easily and gracefully in any position. The arms of Finest Kid with separate fingers. These are positively the finest bodies ever put in a Doll. They are of graceful and natural shape, and much better and more expensively made than the best imported bodies which they will outwear many times. The Waxen Heads with long hair are of the best French and German make, made especially for this Doll, and they are as beautiful as life, long hair, beautiful eyes, and delicately tinted cheeks. We consider them the finest Doll's Heads ever imported into this country, and that without the Wonderful Singing Attachment THE DOLL ALONE IS WELL WORTH THE ENTIRE PRICE. THE SINGING ATTACHMENT is concealed within the body. It is one of the most ingenious inventions of the age. Its shape and location are shown in the right-hand engraving. It is a Perfect Musical Instrument, finely made, not liable to get out of order, and so arranged that a slight pressure causes the Doll to sing one of the following airs: "Home, Sweet Home," "Greenville," "I Want to be an Angel," "There is a Happy Land," "Sweet Eye and Eye," "Bonnie Doon," "How can I Leave Thee," "A, B, C Song," "America," "Thou, Thou reign'st" (German), "Frohe Botschaft" (German), "Tell Aunt Rhoda," "Buy a Broom," "Yankee Doodle," "Coming Thro' the Rye," "God Bless the Prince of Wales," "Grandfather's Clock," "Child's Song," "Last Rose of Summer," "Joyful Message" (German), "Old Folks at Home," "Pop Goes the Weasel," "So many Stars" (German), "Sleep my Child" (German), "When I a Little Bird," "Cradle's Empty," "God Save the Queen." Walking and talking Dolls have long been made, but they are expensive, soon out of order, and do not afford the little ones half the pleasure and entertainment that our Wonderful Singing Doll does, which is the Greatest Novelty in CHILDREN'S TOYS EVER PRODUCED, and is the most beautiful and appropriate present that can be made to a child. We can furnish three sizes. No. 1, 22 inches high, price, $2.75. No. 2, 24 inches high, larger head, price, $3.25. No. 3, 26 inches high, OUR BEST DOLL, price, $4.00. ☞ These Prices include Boxing. All three sizes are equally perfect and complete, but the larger the Doll the larger the singing attachment and better head. Sent to any address on receipt of price. Fine Embroidered Chemise, 25c. extra. The Trade Supplied. Address all orders to THE MASSACHUSETTS ORGAN CO., No. 57 Washington St., Boston, Mass., U. S. A. ☞ FINE COSTUMES for these dolls with underclothing lace trimmed, finely made, $3.00 to $5.00 extra.

OBITUARY.

Died, November 8th, at his late home, two miles west of Galesburg, MR. DANIEL JONES.

He was born in Sutton, in the Province of Lower Canada, February 22, 1808. Early in life he made a public profession of his faith in Christ, and united with the Baptist church. He was married March 2d, 1830, to Miss Atlanta Bartlett of North Troy, Vt. In 1836 he removed his family to Knoxville, Ill., where he immediately indentified himself with the interests of his denomination, and was earnestly engaged in Christian work.

In 1837 he removed to Mercer county, being one of the first settlers in that section of country. Here he will be long remembered for his self-sacrificing spirit in establishing and maintaining the cause he so dearly loved. In 1863 he removed to Galesburg, where he resided till his death. Many of the qualities of his character were ever prominent in his life. Integrity in business, deep religious conviction, fidelity to duty, boldness in defending the truth.

He buried his wife in the autumn of 1868. He was again married March 3, 1870, to Mrs. Hiram Ward of Oford, his former home. He was buried from the Baptist church Nov. 10. He leaves a wife, four sons, and two daughters, to revere his memory and mourn his loss.

IN BRIEF.

A woman in Philadelphia gave her husband six commissions to execute in New York. He telegraphed back that he had executed five, and forgotten the last. It was an order for an illuminated sentence for a Sunday school room. He was a great deal astonished when he received the reply, "Unto us this day a child is born,—two feet wide and nine feet long." —Harper's Magazine.

Ancient ruins, which surpass anything of the kind yet discovered on the American continent, have been found in Sonora, about four leagues southeast of Magdalena, Mexico. There is one pyramid which has a base of 4,350 feet, and rises to a height of 750 feet. On the sides of this mountain a people of an unknown age have cut hundreds upon hundreds of rooms. On the walls are numerous hieroglyphics and representations of human forms, with feet and hands of human beings cut in the stone in different places.

The engineer of an express train on the Hudson River Railroad had a peculiar experience with lightning Saturday. At New Hamburg he encountered a heavy rainstorm, and as he pulled his head into the cab lightning struck the track, and for several seconds the fluid revolved on the driving wheels on both sides of the engine. At every revolution the fluid would burst with a crack, sending out a shower of sparks. For over half an hour he felt a stinging, burning sensation on the cheek.

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE.

For Alcoholism.

Dr. J. S. HULLMAN, Philadelphia, Pa., says: "It is of good service in the troubles arising from alcoholism, and gives satisfaction in my practice."

—The oldest tree in the world, so far as any one knows, is, says Knowledge, the Bo tree, of the sacred city of Amarapoora, in Burmah. It was planted 288 B. C., and is therefore now 2,170 years old. Sir James Emerson Tennant gives reason for believing that the tree is really of this wonderful age, and refers to historical documents in which it is mentioned at different dates, as 182 A. D., 223 A. D., and so on to the present day. "To it," says Sir James, "kings have even dedicated their dominions, in testimony of a belief that it is a branch of the identical fig tree under which Buddha reclined at Urumelaya when he underwent his apotheosis. Its leaves are carried away as streamers by pilgrims, but it is too sacred to touch with a knife, and therefore they are only gathered when they fall." The king oak in Windsor Forest, England, is 1,000 years old.

"For 13 years I had Dyspepsia," wrote John Albright, of Columbus, O. "Samaritan Nervine cured me." Druggists all keep it, $1.50.

DR. JOHN BULL'S

Smith's Tonic Syrup

FEVER and AGUE

Or CHILLS and FEVER.

AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamp on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN J. SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, of Louisville, Ky. Examine well the label on each bottle. If my private stamp is not on each bottle do not purchase, or you will be deceived.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monumont. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribee his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 6 cents.

NIGHTS IN A BAR-ROOM

T. S Arthur's great temperance book, complete and illustrated. By mail, 5c each; 50c per doz. By express, $3.50 per 100.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC THE GREAT SOURCE OF CRIME.

Leaves from the diary of an old lawyer.—By Hon. A. B Richmond, author of "Court and Prison," etc. A book of intense interest, rivaling the famous "Diary of a Physician," and, in its truthful, terrible pictures of the power and crime of intemperance, excelling the well-known "Ten Nights in a Bar-room." The temperance issue of the present time is, Shall prohibition be partial or entire? Shall the branches of the death-bearing tree be pruned and trimmed, or shall the tree itself be cut down and its stump be torn up by the roots? The answer of "Leaves from the Diary" is, "Cut down the tree, tear up the roots, leave not a shoot or shred behind." It is certainly a very strong and eloquent volume Complete edition on fine, heavy paper, with colored lithograph of Sewall's stomach plates By mail, 30c each, $3 per doz. By express, $20 per 100. Abridged edition, by mail, 15c; $1.25 per doz. By express, $9 per 100.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC AND THE SOBER CITIZEN.

An able and telling work, by Rev. J H. Sherman, which brings out the effects of the liquor traffic in a new light. The following are some of the commendations of the first edition.

"The author drives the nails of conviction through and clinches them."—N Y Christian Advocate.

"Speakers and workers in the temperance field will find valuable aid in this pamphlet. It is crowded with convincing facts."—Zion's Herald

"One of the ablest reviews of the drink curse ever issued from the press."—The Morning and Day of Reform.

"The arguments are put in telling form."—Judge Pittman.

New revised and enlarged edition. By mail, 10c each, $1 per doz By express, $6 per 100.

DRINKS FROM DRUGS.

A startling exposure of the liquor traffic, by Eli Johnson. A book that cannot fail to arouse the American people to the gigantic swindle now being perpetrated. The writer was offered $10,000 by a leading brewer to keep still Liquor not only doctored, but made entirely from drugs. Extracts from a whole library of secret books, giving receipts for making and doctoring; advertisements of essences, fac-similes of labels, engravings, etc., etc. Claret, port, sherry, champagne, whisky, brandy, gin, rum, etc., all out of one barrel, and made at less than 25 cents a quart. Wine that never saw grape juice; cider that never saw apples; beer factories in place of breweries, fine cream ale without barley or brewing; whisky from arsenic; millions of gallons of liquor that pays no revenue tax. For $3.30 The same style of binding, medium size: Postage, 12c.

For $5.75 The same style of binding, large size. Postage, 20c.

THE PERSIAN SEAL BINDING

is very handsome and durable. It is this style of binding which is so much admired by Bible readers. Please notice particularly that these Bibles are kid lined and silk sewed. Many Bibles in this style outwardly are lined with black paper and sewed with thread in place of silk.

LEVANT MOROCCO BINDING.

The Persian Seal bindings are the best kept by most Bible dealers, and usually pass for the best teachers' Bibles made; and, to all appearance, they are so. There is, however, a better wearing binding, of which the Persian Seal is a good imitation; this is known as "Levant Morocco" In all respects the Levant morocco Bible corresponds with the Persian Seal description, except as to leather used for cover which, though looking like the Persian Seal, is stronger, and will last a lifetime.

Prices on genuine Levant Morocco bindings:

For $4.50—Small size. Postage, 10c.
For $5.50—Medium size. Postage, 12c.
For $8.00—Large size. Postage, 20cts.

Handsome Gift Bibles at Low Prices.

For 45c. Embossed morocco cover, gilt edges, gilt title on back. Very neat and durable. This is the handsomest 45c. gift Bible we have ever seen. Postage, 5c.

For 60c. Morocco cover, brass bound and plated, with handsome gilt clasp and gilt edges; two patterns; square and round corners. Exquisite lettering on side; printed in large clear type. Bibles no better are sold as high as $1 and $2. Postage, 6c.

For 70c. Similar size and style of binding to our 60-cent Bible; square corners, brass bound, with clasp and handsome tasseled hook-mark; also medallion inserted on side in gold and red.

This was a new importation with the fall of 1882, and a very pretty design. It should be seen to be appreciated. (See cut.) Postage, 6c.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—Saturday evening the Evening Journal building of Chicago was burned out and almost the entire outfit of that paper as well as of a large job and poster printing company was destroyed except the large presses in the basement. The loss is estimated at over $200,000. An hour or two before the Journal office fire a fire in the basemcnt of the new Farwell building on Market street, said to be the largest mercantile building in the world, ran up a rear elevator to the upper stories where a large number of girls were employed. Two of them in attempting to escape by an outside fire ladder fell and were dashed to pieces. The rest escaped, and the fire was soon subdued.

—Notwithstanding continuous rain, the celebration of the centennial of Evacuation Day in New York Monday last brought thousands to the city. The procession was imposing, and occupied nearly three hours in passing a giving point. Governor Cleveland unveiled the statue of Washington; President Lane of the Chamber of Commerce, formally presented it to President Arthur, as representative of the United States, and George William Curtis delivered the oration, after which Bishop Potter pronounced the benediction. There were salutes at sunrise, a flotilla parade of hundreds of steam craft about noon under the command of Admiral John H. Starin, and social gatherings and receptions.

—While attending Thanksgiving services at the Methodist Episcopal church at Dixon, Ill., James L. Camp died of apoplexy. While union services were progressing in the Maverick Street church at East Boston, Mass., Thanksgiving Day, the Rev. Warren H. Cudworth, a Unitarian pastor, fell dead while offering prayer. He was a high Mason and the Grand Army of the Republic furnished the escort for his body.

—It is feared that six Gloucester (Mass.) fishing schooners, carrying seventy-five men, were lost in the storm of the 12th and 13th inst.

—A skiff containing nine workmen capsized near the mouth of Wolf River, below Memphis, Thursday morning and two were drowned. Negro skiff men rescued the others.

—Two tramps dragged off Miss Purviance, a school teacher, from the premises of Mr. Hubbs, at Attica, Ind., Tuesday evening last, and drugged her, but a searching party saved her from dishonor at their hands. The ruffians, after taking her rings and jewelry, had concealed her in a hay-rick, where she was found in an unconscious condition.

—Wind blew down the great chimney of the main building of the University at Madison, Wis., Sunday night last week, the masonry crushing through three stories down to the cellar. Had the accident occurred in the daytime the killed and injured among students and officers would have been many.

—Three corpses, bearing life preservers marked "Eclipse" washed ashore at Wiorton, Ont. It is thought the vessel is lost, with all on board.

—Excavations in Cole's Hill, Plymouth, Mass., have opened the graves of two pilgrims who came over in the Mayflower, and who were buried during the first winter in America. They are the only graves of first settlers positively identified.

—Birmingham, Ala., is guarded by military. The authorities anticipating a rising of the negroes, who have threatened to be revenged for the lynching last Thursday of Lewis Houston for attempting to outrage a white woman.

—For the possession of a gas well in Murraysville, Pa., the forces of Milton Weston, a Chicago capitalist, and those of the Pennsylvania Fuel Company engaged in a pitched battle last week Monday, —the former bcing armed with guns, and the latter with clubs. Two men were killed, and several seriously wounded. The Pennsylvania Fuel Company's men were on the defensive. The leaders of the attacking party are under arrest.

—Fire destroyed the business portion of Albany, Wis., early on the 27th ult. A powder explosion in one of the stores and falling walls killed two persons and wounded several others. The weather was intensely cold, and many persons who escaped thinly clad from the blazing structures suffered severcly. The total loss will reach $100,000.

—An offer by England to act as mediator between China and France has been accepted by the latter power. The London Times Paris correspondent states that France will only accept arbitration after she has shown her military power to crush China.

—The French municipal authorities will confiscate imported American pork not properly salted. The Chamber of Deputies decided to discuss the decree raising the pork embargo on Dec. 13.

—Emperor William has telegraphed to King Alfonso on his birthday sending wishes for his happiness, and expressing thanks for the welcome extended to the Crown Prince. The latter was elected a fellow of the Academy of Jurisprudence of Madrid.

—The Left Center of the French Senate Thursday elected Leon Say President, to succeed Waddington. M. Say opposes the policy outlined by Ferry in his Havre speech, and states that the actions of France should be calm and deliberate—without either weakness or impulse.

—Orangemen have perfected arrangements to prevent the Nationalist meeting at Newry, and will post 1,000 men on the roads to prevent Parnellites entering the town. Rioting occurred at Newry Thursday night between Orangemen and Nationalists, in which many persons were injured.

—President Grevy, it is stated, signed a decree Tuesday rescinding the order forbidding the importation of American pork into France. It is expected that the localities interested will organize a system for the proper inspection of this product.

—Two factories at Roubaix, France, employing 1,200 persons, burned Wednesday, causing a loss of 2,000,000 francs.

—About twenty persons have been arrested in Ireland charged with conspiracy to blow up the residence of a County Mayo landlord.

—An obstruction was placed upon an English railway track Wednesday with the intention of wrecking a train in which Premier Gladstone was a passenger.

—The Moslem population of Algeria and Tunis are excited by the success of the False Prophet in Egypt. The necessity of a stronger military forces is being urged upon the French government.

—The lower house of the Hungarian Parliament passed the bill permitting civil marriages between Jews and Christians.

PUSH IT!!

THE TWO-MONTHS-FOR-25-CENTS OFFER.

The readers of the CYNOSURE have it in their power to easily make up a CYNOSURE list to TWENTY-FIVE THOUSAND before January 1st. See "How" on another page.

DON'T forget to read our clubbing list carefully, page 7; and the offer of the CYNOSURE with the Anti-Infidel Library for $2.50; or with the American Agriculturist, Dictionary and engraving for $3.20. See last page.

TO THE BOYS AND GIRLS

Who read the CYNOSURE, we have this word. It is our plan to give you a special New Year's paper with illustrations that will please and instruct you. If you will do a little work for your paper it will repay you with good interest. Suppose you get your Uncle John or William to give you twenty-five cents for the CYNOSURE two months. That will help and can be easily done. What will do better, get him to give you $3.20 and divide what it pays for—he taking the CYNOSURE and American Agriculturist (that splendid illustrated monthly, price $1.50), and you keeping that fine dictionary and large steel engraving. Read more about it in the literary department and on the last page.

The lodge is playing boldly in politics. The secret orders among the ex-soldiers publish that political preferment is one of their objects; in some places lodge organs openly call upon Masons, Odd-fellows and the rest to defeat men who do not praise the orders; and here in Chicago the labor union lodges, numbering some fifty, with 20,000 members, are organizing a central committee to lead them at the polls. While our citizens look across to Europe and deprecate the influence of the secret societies upon politics as an enormous evil, they complacently see the same growing up in our own streets without remark or opposition.

For several years the connection of Mrs. General Sherman with the Romish church and her intense activity for her religion has been a theme of warning among Protestant journals. Such objections are not less pointed from the fact that General Sheridan, who succeeds to the command of the army, is a devoted Catholic and worships with his wife in St. Matthew's Catholic church in Washington. Mrs. Sheridan wanted the pew formerly occupied by Mrs. Sherman, but Miss West, danghter of the British minister secured it first. A prominent Catholic journal in its complacent notice of the fact that the army of the United States is under the control of Rome adds this also: "A good many people had the impression that the Sheridans were not Catholics but the good old sexton at St. Matthew's says that the general of the army was an altar-boy in his young days, and served many a mass for the venerable Father Young, a Dominican priest, at the church near his home in Ohio."

In Canada there is a law making lotteries illegal. A movement is now begun to apply the law to church fairs and bazars where lotteries and raffles are employed. Christ began such a work in his day, and twice gave us an example of the way to clean out these "dens of thieves" from the house of God. A Chicago daily remarks upon the Canadian movement, "Should the same construction be put upon the law in this country Chicago churches would suffer, and a goodly number of prominent churchmen would find themselves classed with gamblers." And why should they not? Must we cease to call things by the right name when we come to the threshold of a church? The Louisiana Lottery, or the Masonic hybrid in Kentucky can do little harm compared with such gambling affairs as dedicated the great Romish cathedral of New York: and the evil lurks still among Protestants.

Along with this topic, is the allowance by the Christian church of the crime of gambling in stocks, grain and other commodities. Our State laws condemn the practice and all the courts sustain the law, but the evil is perpetuated because there is no moral sentiment created against it in the churches. The other day the Georgia Supreme Court decided that obligations made in a "future" deal in cotton were void and that "futures" and faro were kindred games. Nobody attempts to deny this fact. The same moral culpability exists in gambling with grain, pork, stocks, cotton, playing cards, dice, or roulette tables Why should not the churches testify against Board of Trade "margins" and "futures," as well as against the keeping of dens for robbery at cards hid away from the officers of the law?

Was Butler buried by Massachusetts votes the other day? Joseph Cook says he is a jack-in-the-box. No one can tell when or where Butlerism will break out, anymore than one can prophesy about a boil. One of the henchmen of the late governor of Massachusetts at Lynn is out in an appeal to the labor unions of the country to unite in naming a Presidental candidate and electing him. It is supposed that the combination of the so-called labor vote of 1880 with "anti-monopoly," the Mahoneism of Virginia and the Chalmers voters in Mississippi will make a formidable alliance. The hand of Butler is in all this; but Butler ran a tilt with an almshouse and he is now in the condition of Don Quixote after the windmill battle.

An exaggerated item is going about among the papers that all the idol images worshiped by heathens in India and Africa are manufactured in England. No country has a monopoly of this business, but it is true that England has a large traffic of this kind. From the same country the nations have been cursed with the idolatrous Masonic system, which is no whit less heathenizing and in itself fatal to true religion and morality than the grosser systems of paganism.

The religious press is giving a very undeserved notoriety to the lodge speculators in Cleveland who are expecting to make capital of anti-polygamy and sell their lodge rituals, charters, and regalia for the money of that half-demented class of people who are always ready to invest in a new secret order. Though the character of this swindle is manifest, the papers that should be first to warn only approve. The Nation which makes no profession of religion is more honest, saying: "The only reason we can imagine why anti-polygamists should get up secret organizations is because they know that their organizations or proposals are likely to be such as will not bear examination."

The late beautiful and unusual glow in the morning and evening sky has attracted the attention of scientists because of its continuance no less than because of its brilliancy. An observer suggests that the earth is passing through the tail of a comet, or a meteoric shower. Outside of any scientific theorizing it is at least a comforting thought that God, whose hand "tempers the wind to the shorn lamb," provides in this phenomenon a relief for the pressure of "hard times." This morning and evening light lengthens the day an hour, and, with the unusual mildness of the season, permits out-door labor to go on at a time of year when it is generally laid aside. The financial stringency is becoming daily more severe, as may be seen from the clearing house returns and the mercantile agency reports. Dun's report for the first seven days of December shows 307 failnres, and there were 242 the previous week, more than have been known for years past. Mr. Hitchcock, the efficient manager of the Y. M. C. A. employment bureau of this city, says he has never had so many applications from working men on the first day of winter. The daily papers estimate that there are 50,000 unemployed men now in Chicago. Open weather and long days will do more to relieve this pressure than the indiscriminate distribution of millions of money.

The man who goes through life with an uncertain doctrine, not knowing what he believes, what a poor, powerless creature he is! He goes around through the world as a man goes down the street with a poor, wounded arm, forever dodging people he meets on the street for fear they may touch him. A man must believe something heartily.—Sidney Jefferson.

"My burden is light," said the blessed Redeemer. Slight burden indeed, which carries him that bears it. I have looked through all nature for a resemblance of this, and I seem to find a shadow of it in the wings of a bird, which are indeed borne by the creature, and yet support her flight towards heaven.—Barnard.

THE BRAHMO SOMAJ AND FREEMASONRY.

JOSEPH COOK ON THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE TWO SYSTEMS.

OTTUMWA, Iowa, Nov. 27, 1883.

To the Editor of the Cynosure, Chicago, Ill.

DEAR SIR.—You request me to express my opinion respecting the relation, philosophical or religious, between the tenets and practices of the Brahmo Somaj, a God Society of India, and Freemasonry.

1. The Brahma Somaj is an open organization; it has, so far as I know, nothing like the pass-words, secret initiation ceremonies and the other arrangements used by Freemasonry to veil its proceedings from outsiders.

2. The Brahmo Somaj is a very devout organization. Its leaders are men of prayer. Keshub Chunder Sen, who is at the head of the New Dispensation in the Brahmo Somaj, has prayer meetings almost daily for his pupils and assistants. The devotional exercises are conducted in his house and are often four or five hours long. It is by the impulse the Divine Spirit seems to give in the meetings that the New Dispensation, according to Mr. Sen's claim, is guided. I have never heard of similar proceedings among Freemasons.

3. Keshub Chunder Sen asserts "the co-eternity of the Son with the Father," and so seems to teach the real Divinity of our Lord. In this he differs radically from Freemasonry.

4. The Brahmo Somaj opposes all idolatry, caste, materialism and agnosticism and treats aggressive evangelical Christianity with reverence.

For all these reasons, I see little analogy between Keshub Chunder Sen's religion and Freemasonry.

Yours most truly, JOSEPH COOK.

MISSION WORK IN KENTUCKY.

BY ELDER NATHAN CALLENDER.

Having spent the month of August last in preaching and observing in Kentucky, I am most profoundly impressed with the importance of that field. The work to elevate the people has been successfully inaugurated by men and women of whom any country or age might justly be proud. They are such as could command a salary in any section of the country that would place them above embarrassments such as they now cheerfully meet in their respective fields of labor.

Berea has perhaps gone through her trial period and is, I think, a success educationally, and I hope also spiritually. Her conflicts with sect and lodgeism are not, perhaps, yet settled on the "Lord's side," but probably will be. May God guide and bless this noble school and make it true to its Scripture name. With a noble corps of tutors headed by Pres. Fairchild, in location a paradise, we have the strongest reasons for hoping that Berea College will result in untold good to all classes of Kentucky, and the South generally.

Some facts in the history of the location here, by the agency of John G. Fee seem to have been secured in the hope of a prophet. The "iron horse," which he predicted, long years ago would come, when Berea was an unbroken and almost unapproachable thicket, made its appearance in Berea last August. Born in self-denial and much effort, a child of "hope against hope," Berea is now a power for good to crushed humanity and God's glory.

But Berea is not the only offspring of self-denying effort known to Kentucky. Among these schools founded in hope and persistent effort is another at Camp Nelson. (Camp Burnside would have been a more suitable name.) This Camp, situated on a high horse-shoe bluff on Kentucky river, is to every loyal soul thrillingly historic. To this Camp, founded by Gen. Burnside, during our civil war, thousands of slaves, male and female, "fled for refuge" under the "Stars and Stripes" now for the first time in its history, proclaiming freedom and equal rights to all. On this ground are scores who drank to the dregs the poisoned and bitter cup of the "sum of all villianies." Till now the American flag displayed her stars to inflict stripes on the backs of 4,000,000 of her sable sons.

Here I heard statements equalling any for cruelty found in "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Godly men and women in tears and with convulsed sobs bore testimony to the fiendish cruelties perpetrated in some cases, even by professing ministers of Christ. Cruel partings of parents and children, husbands and wives, have their living representatives. The slave-pen, auction-block, and the scarred body have their living monuments here in men and women of silvered locks, who can speak only in part the cruelties they have seen and felt. Brother Tracey, a man of hoary head, a godly man, was severed from the wife of his youth and his children by slavery. His story is sickening to humanity. This brother, under the supervision of John G. Fee, has charge of the school premises at Camp Nelson. By the arduous, self-denying efforts of Bro. Fee, J. F. Browne and others, a high school is here founded and has already done much good. This school is the child of self-sacrifice seldom equalled.

Camp Nelson is about one hundred miles south of Cincinnati, in the blue grass country. It is perhaps the only incorporated colored village in the State. On this ground is a Soldier's Cemetery, established in 1866, where 3,642 of our patriots repose—2,453 known, the rest unknown. This cemetery is under charge of Ewald Schnieder, a crippled Union soldier. In this array of dead patriots are represented most of the loyal States, with a large proportion of loyal Kentuckians. On the old camp ground for fugitives, near the old government buildings, one of which is now used for Christian worship, is a dormitory 40 by 60 feet, three-stories high, substautially built but not finished. From $500 to $1,000 are needed to complete it for use. A chapel is also much needed here and some primary school houses to make Camp Nelson school a grand success. There are in the North and East scores of men of ample means, who could and would do the best thing of a long life time in these missions of the Southern field, could they only see and understand their urgent demands.

Could our brethren of means spend a month on these fields, that seem to be pleading, "Come over and help us," they could not refrain from giving. They would sympathise so deeply with Him who saw the harvest perishing and exhorted his friends to pray the Lord of the harvest to send more laborers into the harvest, that their money would flow out with their hearts to bless and save the perishing. Could some of these brethren with their thousands hoarded up spend one Lord's day in Camp Nelson and see what has been done there for God and crushed humanity they would see what can and must be done to save and elevate the freedmen.

I never felt so intense a desire to be rich in this world's goods that I might impart to God's poor in the South, as when I "lifted up my eyes and looked on this field." Some of the brightest examples of labors with Christ are now found in Kentucky. With some of these we have had the good fortune to become acquainted. Perhaps there is not a living man who has done as much for the colored people of this country as John G. Fee, now president of the board of trustees and lecturer on the Evidences of Christianity and Biblical Literature in Berea College.

Seven times was he in the hands of organized and furious mobs before and during the Rebellion which threatened him with extreme penalties if he persisted in proclaiming his God-inspired doctrines of freedom to the slave in Kentucky. Once while studying by his lamp in his home a bullet was aimed at him which lodged in a post just above his head.

We stood on the spot where the deadly shot was aimed. On one occasion a mob demanded of him to cross the river into Ohio as the condition of his release from death. Instead of being frightened from his duty in Kentucky, he knelt in the presence of his infuriated foes and prayed and staid where duty called despite their bloody threats. But for this intrepid friend of the freedmen the mixed school at Berea and the school at Camp Nelson would not exist. To God be all the glory, who held him in his hand through many perils, to see Berea with its noble school, and to see the predicted iron horse dashing through the place.

God has given us Berea as a sample of what can be done for and with the colored race. "Speak it softly," said a Cincinnati paper of August last, "speak it softly, but the colored students of Berea out-did the whites in the late institute." I quote in substance from memory.

Among those who are making sacrifices in behalf of the mission fields of Kentucky we would mention our self-denying brother J. F. Browne, now of Berea. Born a teacher, with talents to fill places where the gifted are greeted with ample salaries, he is willing to "spend and be spent for Christ," in the service of the poor and oppressed sons of Kentucky. While brother Fee is nearly worn out in the service, brother Browne is comparatively young and full of vigor and zeal for the Master. Could we put a score of such men into this pleading field with the means to support them free from the cares incident to poverty, this State would soon "bud and blossom as the rose." No men on this continent, in my humble opinion, are doing so much, with such small means and under such pressure and embarrassments.

Through the agency of these brethren another school has been founded at Cabin Creek, Lewis Co., Kentucky, and a suitable building is there being erected. Here also funds are much needed to complete the work so well begun Miss Maines of Michigan has consented to conduct this school, formerly under the care of brother J. F. Browne, in an old church, which is far from being comfortable for a winter school. Thus the work to elevate the people of Kentucky and the South generally, is inaugurated by self-denying men and women, poor in this world's goods but rich in faith and works of love to God and man. Who will help by contributing to these schools? Let such as can spare anywhere from $10 to $1,000 send their names with pledges or the funds to John G. Fee or to J. F. Browne, Berea, Madison county, Kentucky, and God will own and bless the deeds of love and mercy.

REASON AND REVELATION.

It is the old story. From Eden down the question with human beings is this: Why their opinion is not better than the Divine command? The visit of Mgr. Capel, the great luminary of Romanism, and of Mazoomdar, the apostle of the Indian gospel, has evoked from all sorts of moral and mental philosophers their definitions and pronunciamentos for the final settlement of the vexed questions relative to the true religion for universal man. Luther, and his grand share of labor, has also come into full consideration on the four hundredth anniversary of his humble birth into a priest-ridden age, and his glorious development as the Samson of religious liberty.

Firstly, the Lutherans are triumphant, and justly jubilant; secondly, the whole of Protestant Christendom unites in their acclaim, with perhaps too little notice of the errors which are still nursed by his followers; thirdly, the Roman Catholics trumpet Luther as a Judas traitor who herded with the basest characters of the age, "drunkards, murderers," etc., and encouraged the robbery of the Catholic churches. Amid all this thunder and lightning here is the Rationalist flattering himself that he dwells in Utopia, and enjoys the Lutheran freedom without the alloy of faith in any revelation. Here the Roman Catholic rejoices that he has had preserved to him a heaven-born church, and an absolutely infallible guide at Rome. And between these extremes we have all the shades and varieties of opinion on religious subjects which may be found as emanations of men's fancies, or in differing opinions on the teachings of the Bible itself even among those who accept it as the only and supreme rule of faith and practice.

Now, how can we arrive at a reasonable settlement for the common standard of religious truth? Our answer is short. As the pole star to the mariner, or as a light to the eye, or food for the support of life, or as water to the thirsty soul, so has our Creator adapted divine truth to the wants of the soul. Not by enthroning rationalism, nor by dethroning reasonable enquiry; not by seizing on some pleasant fancy and excluding all consideratiou of truth in any or every other department can the soul be satisfied. But as every true man has instinctive aspirations towards the great beyond, and future of existence for the freer field and better exercise of those powers of whose existence he is as conscious as that he lives at all, so he must be restless and unsatisfied until he has found here the truths and faith which satisfies the craving of his whole spiritual nature.

The world by wisdom knew not God, but the Gospel of Christ satisfies the soul. It implants in man the purest motives, the most ennobling aspirations and confers the most glorious freedom of body, soul and spirit in every relation of existence so long as in harmony with all that is true, honest and just, pure, lovely, of good report, virtuous and praiseworthy.

Thus taught by the life of the Lord Jesus Christ the whole man is delivered from the power of the love of wrong doing and inspired with the spirit of well doing for one's self, for one's neighbor and for all that is high and holy, even at the sacrifice of selfish ease or ends. Thus may highest happiness be enjoyed on earth and the enjoyment of the perfect life in the perfect body be patiently and trustfully anticipated, for such righteous have hope in their death. Thus not merely the body or the emotions of the soul, or the brilliancy of the intellect can give peace, but being justified by faith our whole nature rests peacefully in God through our Lord Jesus Christ.

REFORM TECHNICALITIES.

[Rev. W. O. Tobey on the terms of the United Brethren Discipline.]

It is well known that the word "Freemasonry" has long been a generic term, and used to express all sorts of secret or curious associations. A noted author, for instance, speaks of the "Freemasonry of the Gypsies." It would be good usage to speak of the Freemasonry of the Patrons of Husbandry, of the Communists, or of the Good Templars. The expression "Freemasonry in every sense of the word" has never been improved upon in any of the various forms of expression in the Discipline.

When we all become willing to discuss the character of secret societies instead of the abstract idea of "secrecy," or "privacy," we shall be in the line of contributing something to the understanding of the subject. We ought to be certain that our fathers from the very beginning had in view the nature and character of secret combinations, and not that of secrecy as an abstraction. Neither did they nor do we of today think of seriously discussing the moral character of secrecy abstract of combinations of men. It is often said that at the time our church began to oppose and legislate against secret societies, there was nothing but Freemasonry known to them, and that therefore it was never inteuded to oppose anything but that one order. But this is a great mistake. Long before 1837, when the Geueral Confereuce said "Freemasonry in every sense of the term shall be discountenanced," there were many forms of Freemasonry, or secret combinations. About the time of the Revolutionary War there was as great a mania for secret societies as there is now. It was the outgrowth of the infidel spirit of that age of Tom Paine and Thomas Jefferson. There were then such societies in this country as the "Illuminati," of which a writer in the Atlantic Monthly recently said, "It was founded by a charlatan and humbug, with the ostensible object of perfecting human nature." There was also the Phi Beta Kappa Society, of which the same writer said it was of the same stuff and patteru as the Illuminati. There was also a secret society formed at that time, aud which still exists, for the purpose of keeping up certain notions of American nobility. Hamilton Fish is now its president. There were still others of less prominence, but of the same stuff essentially. They all aimed to "perfect human nature;" and that is still the aim of every one of them. Hence our fathers knew what they were about when they took a decided position against "Freemasonry in every sense of the term." Will we of to-day fritter away the sound and tenable principles bequeathed by them to us?

ENGLISH TESTIMONY.

Lord John Russell, in the British House of Commons, many years ago, avowed his hostility to secret societies. The following is from the report of his speech in that body:

"He did not mean to preclude himself from assenting in any motion that might be made with respect to other secret societies, it public inquiry in respect to them should be thought necessary, but he certainly would now state broadly, that he was an enemy to all secret societies, and if by further inquiry, by the appointment of select committees, or by any other means, they might be better able to get at the nature, the tendency, and the extent of such societies, he should do this, convinced as he was, that in suppressing all secret societies, he should confer a benefit upon every class of his majesty's subjects."

Sir Robert Peel, in a speech in the British Parliament, about thirty years ago, is thus reported:

"However laudable the intention of those who entered into them, however sincere the professions of loyalty, still the existence of societies banded together by secret signs, and founded upon exclusive privileges, was a bad precedent, which societies with other designs might in time of danger avail themselves of. His wish was to see these societies extinguished in name, and the practice of having secret signs and symbols abolished. It was not Orange lodges merely that he wished to extinguish, it was the feeling out of which all secret societies sprang, the extinction of which alone would tend to the permanent happiness of the country."

AN OLD-TIME ODD-FELLOW EXPOSITION.

The lodge does not forget—nor forgive. Many years ago Hon. John M. Farnsworth, then a young man, with a number of companions visited Chicago and several other points in northern Illinois, holding open Odd-fellow lodges and exposing all the silly and farcical performance by which a man degrades himself to become a member of this order. They were greeted with much enthusiasm, and doubtless many are living who remember how they made an Odd-fellow lodge appear. As a curious record, but marred with the scornful coloring of Masonic hate, the following is taken from the Voice of Masonry for May, 1876, and is from the pen of William Rounseville, a once high Mason, but dying in poverty refused a lodge burial by Chicago Hiramites:

The ill success, in a financial point of view, met with in their peregrinations by Blanchard, Ronayne & Co., remind one of a similar attempt, made by a similar company, about thirty years ago, the object of which was the crushing out of Odd-fellowship. St. Charles Lodge, No. 14, had been constituted in the little town of that name on Fox River, and entered upon a course of high prosperity. At an election held in regular course of business, one ambitious spirit failed to get an office which he sought, and he threatened to devastate the order. He took unto him "seven other spirits," not more wicked, but probably "more sharper" than himself, and thus organized a company. A then briefless lawyer, who has since got so low as to have a seat in Congress, a patientless mediciner, and several tradesmen, made up the army of reform. It is not recollected that Blanchard was chaplain of the organization.

The first show, as I recollect it, was at home, and it was noticed there were more people in the house than half dollars in the treasury. They then went to Aurora, where they put up at a house kept by a Mason and an Odd-fellow. They had scarcely secured lodgings when they noticed that there was an unusual stir about the premises. The clerk of the house sent off a boy on horseback with orders to have as many as he could raise, to be on hand at eight o'clock precisely. The revealers thought a mob was rising against them, and believing that discretion was the better part of valor, they proceeded to illustrate the old proverb that "the wicked flee when no man pursueth," and felt safe only when they had placed the twelve miles behind them which lie between Aurora and St. Charles. The cause of their scare was a donation party for a clergyman at the hotel that they left so unceremoniously!

This reformers' association then came to Chicago. They obtained for their purpose the old court house which stood on the corner of Clark and Randolph streets; a small building, which they never succeeded in getting half full, though they advertised for three nights. It was rumored that the sheriff forgave them the rent for one night on condition that they would pay for the two others. Whether they complied with the offer is not known, but the last tidings of the exposers of Odd-fellowship we ever heard was that they were trying, individually, to borrow twenty-five cents to liquidate expenses home. And St. Charles Lodge, No. 14, I. O. O. F., still survives.

THE SERMON.

THE DUTY OF THANKSGIVING.

PREACHED IN THE CHICAGO AVENUE CHURCH ON THANKSGIVING DAY MORNING, BY C. A. BLANCHARD.

[Before the religious services were held the members of the church and congregation distributed one hundred and sixty-five baskets of provisions to the deserving poor, without reference to church relation, creed, nationality or color. At eleven o'clock there was a gathering in the lecture room where the remarks below printed were made, after which about forty minutes were spent in conference.]

THE DUTY OF THANKSGIVING.

In the fiftieth psalm, twenty-third verse, we are told that those who offer praise glorify God, and this, as you all know, is the principal duty of man. The catechism declares that man's chief end, or most important duty, is to glorify God. The text shows how this is to be done, namely, by offering him praise. Here we have warrant for all such gatherings as this one, which is, in the true sense of the words, a praise meeting.

There are two sides to religion, the human and the divine, that is, every Christian is related to God and to men. As regards men he is bound to be just, merciful, benevolent. "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction and keep himself unspotted from the world." Jas. 1:27. Here we have set before us the duty of distributing to the necessities of men as you have been doing this morning; so also we find our Lord Jesus continually caring for the bodily wants of men. That is a miserable caricature of the Christian faith that contents itself with thundering condemnations of sin or proclamations of soul pardon while it sees suffering and misery go unrelieved.

On the other hand there are persons who openly declare that the care of men's bodies is all the religion there is. Such persons never offer praise and seldom or never pray. The Bible is to them a sealed book. Their religion, they tell us, consists in doing good. Now this mistake is as serious as the one first named. Our Saviour heard, well pleased, the songs of children in the temple and the shouts of the multitude which attended him down the Mount of Olives. And though he went through this world healing and feeding and comforting, he also preached to the people, and lifted up his eyes to heaven, saying: "Father I thank thee." Let us ever follow his example, and while we gladly minister to the needs of men let us also never fail or forget to give thanks to God.

EVERYTHING THAT HATH BREATH.

Another suggestion of practical value is found in the sixth verse of the one hundred and fiftieth psalm, "Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord." Men in this world suffer. The masses of men are poor and sick and troubled. We pass a whole world of sorrow in many a silent man or woman. The heart knoweth its own bitterness, and oftentimes even the nearest of friends knows it not. Now we are prone to act upon the plan of giving thanks for prosperity. When you take up to-morrow's paper you will see long enumerations of causes of thanksgiving: national mercies, church mercies, family blessings and good bestowed on individuals. This is inevitable and proper. There is, however, one danger connected with it, viz., that those who toss upon beds of pain, who are hungry for lack of bread, or cold for want of clothing, or those who are soul-tossed by reason of sin should say, Let those give thanks who have these obvious blessings; as for us we sit in darkness and have no light; why should we offer praise? Now the verse under consideration says directly: "Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord."

Suppose, for example, that some young man should be in this audience this morning. He was passing on the other side of the street when he noticed the building. He said to some one, What is that building? and was answered, Why that is the Chicago Avenue church, where Mr. Moody used to preach, and where the great Sabbath school meets. He came in and is here now. He is not a Christian. His mother never taught him to pray; his father taught him to swear. He has served Satan faithfully, but all the promises of his master have been broken. He has found the way of transgressors hard, and the wages of sin death. Hope, and faith and courage and purity that used to dwell like a colony of white doves in his heart, all are fled away. Shall this man, with the past all dark and the future all hopeless, shall he praise God? Yes, for the text says, "Let every thing that hath breath praise the Lord."

HE HATH NOT DEALT WITH US AFTER OUR SINS.

In the tenth verse of the one hundred and third psalm we have one universal reason of thanksgiving. It applies to nations, churches, towns, families and individuals. "He hath not dealt with us after our sins nor rewarded us according to our iniquities." Men are accustomed to justify themselves before men, to oftentimes attempt to deceive themselves, to persuade themselves to believe that they are what they know they are not. But there are times when the voice of conscience, so long drowned by the noises of the world rings through all the chambers of the soul, and when faces long buried, opportunities long past, sins long forgotten pass in terrible procession through the mind. In such times many men may cry out with Cain, "My punishment is greater than than I can bear;" but no man ever yet said, "It is more than I deserve."

The Word of God has mighty witness in the human soul. God declares that he has not dealt with men according to their iniquity; that his mercy is great above the heavens; that as the heavens are high above the earth so high are his ways above man's. What sane man doubts it? What earthly governor would suffer the existence of a province that rejected and despised his authority as this world does that of the great God? Men go reeling along in the mad dance of business, pleasure, vice and crime, and still the Lord waits. The thunders and lightnings sleep about his throne and mercy still grasps firmly the terrible sword arm of justice. The Lord is long suffering to usward. He does not will that any should perish but that all should come to him and live, and so he has not dealt with us after our sins nor rewarded us according to our iniquities. If there is any one who ought from the depths of his soul to render thanks to-day it is the unrepentant, hopeless sinner. For the forbearance that has spared him from going down into the pit, that has found out a ransom, and that to-day says: "Whosoever will, may come." For this he should give thanks.

FOR UNDESERVED MERCIES.

There is one more topic of general thanksgiving to which I will advert and then give you all opportunity to express the thanks of your hearts for the goodness of God. This is suggested by the tenth verse of the thirty-second chapter of Genesis. "I am not worthy of the least of all thy mercies." This is the language of every Christian heart. Instead of complaining that we have received so little we are astonished that we have received so much. There was once a little girl who sat down at a table on which there were a few cold potatoes, a few pieces of dry bread and a little salt. The latter was a luxury and the little girl said: "Why, mother, is it not nice? We have have potatoes and bread and salt, and heaven beside." I remember also another tale of a poor widow who had a single child for whom she toiled. In the house was an unused door and on cold nights the mother was accustomed to place this door on the bed to supply in part the want of sufficient clothing. One bitter night, when the wind was howling about the cabin, the snow sifting through the cracks, the mother and child lay down to rest, and as the mother drew the door into place and gathered the trembling child in her arms, she said, "Mamma, don't you pity poor people who haven't got any door to put on their beds in cold weather?" Except ye be converted and become grateful and loving as this little child, ye shall not enter the kingdom of God.

Of course, dear friends, there are a vast number of particular things which might be mentioned, but in reflecting on this theme it seemed that my occasions of gratitude clustered in two shining groups around the undeserved mercies and the averted chastisements of my Heavenly Father. Truly the Lord is good to all and his tender mercies are over all his works. He has not dealt with me after my sins of omission or commission. He has bestowed upon me a thousand blessings, and I am not worthy of the smallest of them all. I call upon my soul and all that is within me to bless his holy name. "Come, magnify the Lord with me, and let us exalt his name together;" for those who offer praise glorify God, and to those who order their conversation aright he will make known his salvation.

A VIGOROUS REBUKE OF INFIDELITY.

The year which is drawing to its close will be remembered as one of the terrible events in the world at large. A year of tumults and commotions in nations and of portents on land and sea. Marvel not that God's judgments are in the earth; I only marvel that our own ungrateful people escape much worse tokens of his righteous wrath. For what an age we live in! An age to which the Lord has given great power to get wealth, opening men's minds to new forms of using and economizing the resources of the physical system. And, in return, man only grows vain and self-sufficient, and makes gods of his right hand and his proud brain. Nay, your flippant scientist, who ought to be humbled by the universe which lies about him like an ocean, as impenetrable as ever, is conceited enough to value himself upon the few pebbles he has gathered upon the sands, and turns traitor to the human race in refusing to recognize its Creator. And when all this arrogance of false science gets down to the lowest class, look at its effect upon the vulgar mind in the practical atheism that is increasing among us. Monstrous marriages and criminal divorces are multiplied, and adulteries and abortions are the staple of our daily news. In many parts of our country the blessed rest of the Lord's Day is already obsolete, and courts and judges give reins to universal licentiousness. Our own quiet villages and orderly cities are invaded by social outlaws, the reek of whose blasphemy and obscene ideas is rank beyond all description and "smells to heaven." Our journalism condemns this, or treats it with deserved contempt, but nevertheless patronizes it by advertising its enormities and becoming its "tract society," printing and distributing its filth and profaneness. This is discriminating against the good citizen in favor of law-breakers and social pirates. For the unhappy men are indictable as law-breakers. Over and over again our courts have decided that Christian morality is part of our laws, and the base of our constitution, and while it is expedient, I think, to let them alone, it is all important not to give them aid and comfort in their raids upon law and order. Unless all decent citizens vote to protect our civilization against such outrages, the end is not far off. Society cannot exist where the young and ignorant are taught not only to "say in their hearts there is no God," but to feel that all moral laws are tyranny, and that they may set them at naught with impunity.

There are some inns which are never empty; but as fast as one guest goes out, another comes in. Such is the heart of an unregenerate man.

THE PRIVACY OF DAVID AND JONATHAN.

The Chicago Evening Journal of Saturday published the exposition of the Sabbath school lesson by Pres. C. A. Blanchard in Farwell Hall, in which occurred these remarks:

"Another thing which we can learn from this second decision of our lesson is the proper use of secret signs, tokens, etc. Such things are lawful in times of danger and difficulty. David's life was threatened. Jonathan was his friend, but to be seen with him at this time would peril the lives of both. They accordingly agreed upon a method of conveying and receiving information that would be unintelligible to one not in the secret. From this some thoughtless persons would proceed to justify secret societies. It is obvious that there is nothing here which can be tortured into such a defense. Here were two good men, who knew and trusted one another, who agreed on a sign because their lives were endangered. Secret societies bind good and bad men together,when they are not in danger and have no lawful object to be obtained that could not better be reached by open methods. As Wendell Phillips says: 'Secret societies in a land and an age like this are useful for no good purpose, and may be used for any bad one whatever.' The fact that men seek to justify these associations that yoke good and evil men together unequally proves no more than the fact that slave-holders, Mormons and whisky-sellers do the same.

"In the third part of our lesson we have a beautiful example of another one of the 'lost arts,' viz., the art of showing proper respect to official station. David was by this time a soldier as well as an anointed King. Still further he was the brother-in-law of Jonathan,and, more still, he was under a covenant to him; but all these facts, together with the circumstances under which they met, could not cause this princely young man to forget the courtesy due to the heir-apparent to the throne. Intimately associated with the disposition to question rather than obey which was mentioned above, there widely prevails at this time, disregard of the persons of rulers.

"A politician who had been out for a three-weeks' campaign said that when he came back he was so covered with mud that his own dog didn't know him. A Presidential campaign is oftentimes a carnival of slander, violence and murder. And the succeeding years show that it is quite impossibe for people to respect in office men whom they have been educated to despise out of it. It is true that many of our rulers are base and unworthy men, but they occupy important stations and the office should be regarded, even if the men are not. It is also true that when base men are elvated to official positions the rule is that Christian men have neglected their duties."

A VETERAN AT WORK.

From the Christian Statesman.

The Rev. Dr. Jonathan Blanchard embraces every opportunity to do service in the cause of National Reform. Now on a visit to the East, he is invited to preach in many prominent pulpits, and thus obtains a wide and influential hearing for his discussion of the relation of civil government to the Christian religion. On November 11 he preached in the old Edwards church at Northampton, Mass., and on the next Sabbath in the Plymouth church at Worcester. From a pretty full account of the sermon at Worcester, as published in the Daily Spy, we take the following extract: The preacher prefaced his address by reading the demands of a so-called liberal association for the discontinuance of chaplains in public institutions; for the abolition of all religious services maintained by the government, of the use of the Bible in the public schools, and of religious festivals. The speaker took his text from Matthew 27:22: "What shall I do then with Jesus which is called Christ?" This question, he said, was asked eighteen centuries ago by a puzzled governor, of a multitude clamoring for the death of Christ. It has vexed the world ever since. Pilate had either to clear Christ or to crucify him; not to clear him was to crucify him. If he cleared him he would lose his office; if he crucified him he would lose his soul. This has been the situation of nations and individuals ever since. To ignore or reject Christ is to say he is not the Messiah, but an enemy of Cæsar and a traitor to God. The speaker then contrasted the condition of believing and unbelieving nations. "The grand conception of our fathers was a Christian commonwealth," said Charles Francis Adams at Buffalo in 1848. In 1774 the Virginia house of burgesses appointed a day of fasting and prayer on account of the Boston port bill, to pray for deliverance from the danger to public liberty. Thomas Jefferson voted for this measure. National fasts and thanksgivings are merely national recognitions of religion. There is no coercion in the government measures. All that is required of any man is that he keep the peace in a house he did not build. The man who would dare in the days of Washington and Jefferson to propose to force out the chaplain and the Bible would have been deemed a subject for a lunatic asylum. The Declaration of Independence, written by Jefferson, acknowledged God in four separate provisions, but the Constitution, written only a few years later failed to make any such acknowledgment; Hamilton said it was forgotten, but the truth was the fathers failed to distinguish between coercion and recognition. Even in the oath administered to the President there is no religious mention. They give us a Constitution on which atheists can take their stand and demand that all laws shall comply with it. Christianity is not sectarianism, and Christ is not a partisan divinity. The mythical gods, the idols of the joss house, the saint gods of the nunnery, the gods of the temple and of the spirit circle —these are sectarian. Christ is the Way, the Truth and the Life; let us acknowledge him as a nation as well as individually, for without him we can do nothing.

WHY HATTON STAYS.

Frank Hatton, the Assistant Postmaster General and editor of the National Republican, is a Knight Templar Freemason, which alliance we suggest will answer the queries which the New York Times puts in the following emphatic language:

"The fact that Hatton is retained, that he exercises much the same power as and displays more authority than the Postmaster General himself is a scandal and a disgrace. He is notoriously incompetent. He is engaged in covertly violating the laws of the United States which forbid the circulation of matter through the mails emanating from lottery enterprises. He is using his position in the department to make postmasters canvassing agents for his scurrilous publicatiohs. He has repeatedly insulted the President by declaring a humbug the civil-service system which the President recommended, approved, and professed to be carrying out in good faith. There is every substantial reason why Hatton should be promptly kicked out of the department. There is no conceivable good reason why he should be kept in. Yet there he is, and there, apparently, he is likely to stay so long as his superior officers are in a position to retain him. Is there a power stronger than the Postmaster General which prevents the dismissal of this disreputable person? If there be the public should know it. Gen. Gresham can gain nothing for himself or for any one else by the continuance of this unfortunate situation.

REFORM NEWS.

ILLINOIS FRIENDS will please take notice! It will be possible for your State Executive Committee to send you a lecturer at times if your name and postoffice address was on file with them together with a request that a lecturer be sent. Before writing to send one on be sure that you can secure a hall or church or school house as the case may be. Send word to the Cynosure office.

—Secretary Stoddard sends word from Wright's Corner's, Niagara county, New York, that his lecture appointments in that vicinity would occupy every evening until the 12th inst. The friends there take hold in earnest. After a long ride with Bro. Peter D. Miller on the 5th ins., the weight that was believed to have been attached to Morgan's body when he was sunk in Niagara was obtained.

—Bro. Conant, of the Connecticut State Association, is in earnest about the work in his State, and urges that arrangements be made for lectures in every place where practicable. Elder Barlow, the State lecturer, is an able man on the platform, and his years of experience in this battle emphasize his arguments. Bro. Conant writes: "I feel that we must make greater efforts in the East than hitherto, or our Western friends will not only put us to shame, but the lodge will intrench itself more strongly than ever."

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

MACEDONIA, Ohio, Dec. 3, 1883.

This is the nearest station to Northfield, where Bro. Ronayne worked the degrees soon after the Dayton Convention. He is well remembered here, both for his ability and peculiarities. His work abides, although less is now said upon the subject than soon after his departure.

I chanced by the way to fall in with an elderly gentleman who took me for a Freemason. As we were walking together he said, "I joined the Odd-fellows and stayed as long as I could stand their rascality, and then left. A year afterwards they expelled me for non-payment of dues. I believe the Masons have saved the lives of a great many murderers who ought to have been hung, and if I wanted to find protection as a rascal I would join the Masons."

Another brother whom I met had also had experience as an Odd-fellow. The lodge to which he belonged was composed of respectable Christian men, and they used the name of Christ freely in prayer. In time two or three German infidels came from another lodge, and objected to the sectarian prayers. This set the Christian brethren to investigate. They found that the rulings and decisions of the lodges and Grand Lodges were all against Christ, and in favor of the infidels. They determined not to submit, and as the case was becoming desperate, and the lodge likely to break up, the German infidels waived their objection for the time being, but the case opened the eyes of some, who like the brother in question, separated themselves from an order that rejected Christ by law from its religious creed and worship.

At Bedford I met Bro. Hathaway and am much indebted to him for encouragements and help. A change between his pastor and the pastor of a neighboring church precluded the occupancy of the pulpit where he worships. and after conference he furnished me with conveyance to Northfield, where I spoke at union services on the anti-secrecy reform in the Presbyterian church. The pastor, Rev. Marquis, is just from the seminary at Allegheny, and decidedly averse to secret societies, although confessedly not well informed on the subject. Rev. J. W. Logue of the U. P. church, recently resigned after a pastorate of forty years, and their pulpit is filled by presbytery for the present Bro. Wallice filling the A. M. appointment very acceptably. En-route for Buffalo about seven this P. M.

FROM WISCONSIN.

Bro. Bancroft, Wisconsin State agent, reports a lecturer's trials at the county seat of Chippewa county, but a triumph at the end:

"I had a grand old time at Chippewa Falls. I preached in the morning in the Knights of Pythias hall where two or three other secret societies hold forth, and also the Presbyterians hold their meetings. Their minister, I learn, is a Mason, as well as the M. E. minister. The Baptist pretends to be an Anti-mason, but he refused to let me preach for him, but would let me have the church for an afternoon service. At the hall I had a sort of bedlam for a little while, but after they found they could not silence me they settled down to quietness and I finished in peace. I held service in the afternoon at the M. E. church, as quiet as need be; so God reigns. I have great peace and am glad."

FROM MISSISSIPPI FRIENDS.

COLUMBUS, Miss., Nov. 27, 1883.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—On last Sabbath when Salem church met for public worship at Ridgeway Academy (their present place of worship) it was found that many of the window panes were broken and the floor strewn over with brick-bats, rocks, broken glass, pine knots and sticks, and in the house near a broken pane was a pole which reached from the floor to the ceiling. As the day was not very cold Mr. T. preached and the Sabbath school was conducted as usual without material discomfort.

A few days before at a vast public gathering many hundred pages of anti-secret tracts were distributed; also "Freemasonry at a Glance," and Weed's letter. My grandfather, who was a greatly persecuted minister, used to say, "The devil kicking is a sure sign of good being done." We are not able to make the needed repairs and improvements for our place of worship but we would rather suffer than to let the people be unwittingly ensnared in secret orders.

I wish to re-echo the call made in the Cynosure for donations to the tract fund. We are at times short of variety in our stock of tracts and books and doubtless many thousand pages more of anti-secret literature would be in circulation than at present in many different places over the country, had there been a sufficiency of funds at the Cynosure office for that purpose. Let all who love our country and the religion of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ lend a helping hand to let it be known throughout the world that organized secrecy must be abolished if our government is to continue happy and prosperous, or the church of God untrammeled by the false religion taught in the lodges. The reform cause needs more tracts in very plain and forcible but kind language suited to the common people, with nice and striking illustrations. Many who will not at first read a book will read a tract, and this often stirs up to read more, and often a thorough awakening is all that is necessary to arouse energetic action. Pictures are a great attraction and excite attention and a desire to read where a plain leaflet passes unnoticed. I wish some friends who have means could hear the oft repeated request made of the tract distributros, "Please give me one with a picture on it." Will not some one who can, make provision for more illustrated anti-secret leaflets and tracts?

We also greatly need here more Bibles, Testaments and hymn books. The friends who sent pecuniary aid, four packages of choice tracts and some illustrated Sabbath school papers to Mr. T. will receive the hearty thanks due. Will the friends of reform remember us still in prayer?

MRS. M. A. TAPLEY.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

JONATHAN BLANCHARD,
OF ILLINOIS.

For Vice President,

JOHN A. CONANT,
OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

POMEROY FOR '84.

The more we read of Senator Pomeroy the more certain we are that he is the strongest man that could be selected to lead the American forces in 1884. Every political movement has its critical moment, when it either expires or goes rapidly forward from conquering to conquest until glorious victory perches on its standard. That crises in the American movement is not far abouts and perhaps Hon. S. C. Pomeroy is to give the unwieldy element a practical existence. He has been the champion of liberty in the past, and who knows but that he may be the Lincoln to do away with the white slavery that now hangs like a curse over the earth. The slavery of the-lodge-and-rum power is incomparably more galling and degrading than negro slavery. But it will not pay to push Mr. Pomeroy to the lead unless we propose to rally as an organized force to the standard he proposes to support. Since the lodge tried to smirch his character, as an arch enemy of tyranny, he has stood like a flint against his and his country's common enemy. To stand for justice and liberty is to antagonize the whole lodge system. Ever since the "Jerry Rescue Case" Pomeroy has been the practical ally of the oppressed and downtrodden. His record has ever been against the usurper and the master. Slavery spotted him and slavery went down; the lodge has spotted him, the people know their friend, and the lodge must go down.—Am. Freeman.

STOCK COMPANY.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I think E. D. Bailey's plan for the formation of a joint stock publishing company the best yet suggested, viz., 1,000 shares at $25.00 each, $5.00 payable whenever stock is taken, the remainder not to be paid unless actually needed for the maintenance of the paper. A writer in last week's Cynosure proposes 1,000 shares at $100 each, making a capital stock of $100,000. This, in my humble estimation, would not be practicable, as the majority of the friends of the reform are persons in limited circumstances, and could ill afford to invest so heavily, whereas, at $25,00 per share almost every friend of the cause would take a pride in possessing at least one share in the national organ. Then those who desire to invest deeper can take as many shares as their means will allow.

To insure success and secure a hearty support for the movement the stock should be scattered among the friends as much as possible. If it is desired to have a large capital stock the number of shares might be increased to say 4000. Then, at twenty-five dollars per share, every schoolboy friend of the reform could take an interest. By all means let the plan be inaugurated, With a battery planted in the national capital success will surely be ours. With best wishes, C. M. STRICKLER.

PLATFORM OF THE LIBERAL LEAGUE.

The following is the platform of the "Liberal League" of the United States, organized to divorce the American government from all connection with religion: (1) We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation; (2) that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued; (3) that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease; (4) that all religious service now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book, or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited; (5) that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease; (6) that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead; (7) that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed; (8) that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty; (9) that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly and promptly made.—Christian Statesman.

PROHIBITION IN POLITICS.

From a very lengthy article written by Dr. Franklin of Ithaca, N. Y., and published in the Dryden Herald, we republish the following pointed statements:

A brief review of temperance legislative action in the several States, prior and subsequent to the existence of the Republican party will show that the Republican party, with all its boasted moral ideas and temperance proclivities, has never openly advocated or been instrumental in bringing about prohibitive legislation, unless the party in Kansas. Iowa and Ohio may be construed to mean an effort by the Republican politicians to save the party from total wreck.

Some little time prior to the existence of the Republican party, we find that Maine, Delaware, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, Michigan, Connecticut, and New York passed strong prohibitive laws. The prohibition law in Michigan was ratified by over 19,000 majority. In 1854 the law was declared unconstitutional The struggle continued with alternating results, having been changed seven times, and finally was repealed by the Republicans, and a license law substituted.

Connecticut passed a prohibitory law in 1854, which was repealed by the Republicans in 1872—Jewell, governor, and the legislature Republican—another act of the young party of great moral ideas.

In 1853 Indiana passed a prohibitory law which was declared unconstitutional—Wright, Whig governor, legislature Whig. In 1851, Maine, with a Democratic governor and Democratic legislature, passed the first Maine law. This law was repealed by the Republicans in 1856—Morrill governor, legislature Republican. Delaware in 1847 passed prohibitory laws—Native American governor, legislature American. Rhode Island in 1852 enacted a prohibitory law; it was declared unconstitutional, and in 1859 re-enacted—Allen, Democratic governor, and legislature Democratic. This law was in force till 1863, when it was repealed by the Republicans—Sprague governor, legislature Republican, and a license law substituted. From 1865 to 1874 local option laws were in force. The license clause was repealed and prohibition substituted, and in 1875 the prohibition clause was again repealed by the Republicans—Lippert, Republican governor, and legislature Republican.

In 1852, Massachusetts passed a prohibitory law—Gardner, American governor, legislature American. In 1868 this prohibitory law was repealed by the Republicans and a license law substituted—Bullock, governor and legislature Republican. In 1870 the law was amended so as to allow the free sale of lager, ale, porter, and beer—Claflin, Republican governor, legislature Republican.

So we see that all these prohibitory laws were passed by Democrats, Whigs or Native Americans, and not one by the Republican party, while temperance Republican politicians are constantly claiming that all that has been done for temperance was done by the Republican party.

Now, Prohibitionists are asked to support the Republican party, with the foregoing record like an incubus hanging over the heads of a party that neglected to improve the golden opportunity to bless mankind.

A New Jersey law prohibits sales of tobacco to boys under sixteen under penalty of $20 for each offense, to be sued for and recovered by the parent or guardian of the boy. It went into effect on the fourth of July. Dealers say it reduces their sales quite perceptibly, but they do not object to it, as it clears their shops of troops of boys to invest a cent in a cigarette, which they would take turns in smoking.

The Freemason lodges profess to sell secrets, for which they get a large price. But what they sell are revealed shams. After a man has paid out a hundred dollars to the lodges, he has got no more than he could get by buying one dollar's worth of books revealing those shams. Yes, he has got more. He has got a guilty soul, and a set of shackles which is hard to throw off.—Richmond Star.

—Why transplant a man out of the world into the church, if he carries the old soil with him and yields the same old fruit?

CORRESPONDENCE.

A SUGGESTION ON CHRISTIAN UNION.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—In view of the great anxiety manifested among the Lord's people for a closer union, I would respectfully offer the following preamble and resolution:

Inasmuch as God "made of one blood all nations of men," there is therefore, unity of nature in mankind.

And as "All have sinned and come short of the glory of God," all are alike in need of salvation.

Inasmuch also as there is but one heaven to enjoy, and since God has sent but one Saviour to prepare mankind for that one heaven; and as Christ preached but one Gospel—and authorized his apostles to "preach the Gospel to every creature,' restricting them to teach only, "All things whatsoever I have commanded you;" and Christ earnestly prayed that all who should believe on him through their word might be one, "That the world may believe that thou hast sent me;" and, finally, inasmuch as all Protestants admit that the Holy Scriptures contain the only infallible rule of faith and practice; therefore,

Resolved, That all Christians should adopt as the measure of their religious faith and practice, only those things taught by Christ and his apostles.

Who will second this resolution, or suggest a better? With due respect for the views of others these thoughts are submitted. GEO. ELEY.

FROM WESTERN TENNESSEE.

MOLINO, Tenn., Nov. 26, 1883.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—The reform work is beginning to prosper here. One of my neighbors had a very heated discussion with me on Masonry. He contended that a Christian in a Masonic lodge had more influence for good. I referred him to the word of the Lord which saith, "Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers;" and also, "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." I met him again the other day and he said, "Mr. Stewart, I have been thinking of what you told me, and I have got a demit from the Masons and grangers." This man is one of our best Christian citizens. I feel joyful to think God is blessing our work in this reform. A highly respected Christian and doctor said to me, "I see the evil of secret societies every day." He is an Odd-fellow.

Now, brethren, as I have told you of my joys, I will tell you of my sorrows.

I wrote to you some time ago about our loss by fire, and the friends sent for my relief $16.50, beside some other kindness bestowed. I suppose some of you, brethren, know what it is to lose your worldly possessions for the sake of truth. This is my sorrow. I sold my place where I was burnt out for $300, and bought another for $900; have paid all but $5.50. The money has to be paid before January. I have a large family to support, and I know not what I shall do unless God in his mercy shall raise up helpers. My brethren, do what you think is your duty, and may God's love and blessing rest on you, is my prayer. "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me."

Any tracts or books you think would help the reform sent to me will be disseminated. I may have my house burned down again, but by the help of God I expect to stand for the truth. Your brother in Christ,

ROBERT A. STEWART.

OUTSIDE OF CONVENT WALLS.

We may well rejoice with the nun who has been released from Hochelaga Convent. And as the darkest moments are those which immediately precede the day, the darkest moments of this nun's existence in the convent must have been the time when she saw the anxiety of her father, and waiting to hear the permission of the Pope to be released, to whom she had brought herself under obligations.

Why was it then that she longed for the day to come when she should be free? Was it because she saw a perfect work of sanctification within the detested walls? We think not. And we take this as a presumptive argument that within convent walls is the wrong place to honor Jesus, who went about doing good, and did good deeds in the face of a frowning public.

It was in that place that the soul was brought to the realization that it was confined to a very small place, as well as the body, and that it desired to fly to the ends of the earth and tell of the love of the Saviour, instead of having its wings bound by papal cords. And what were the associations? Were they of those who confide in the Saviour, the King of kings, or in the earthly power of the Pope, who at the present time is not considered infallible by certain members of the Roman Catholic church in Ireland, who are determined to free themselves from England by dynamite.

Then if any one, man or woman, cannot accomplish as much good in solitude as they can before the public, and if there is a reliance in the power of man instead of God, should not this happy "convent bird" use all of her influence to induce others to breathe the free air of liberty, and use the opportunity of doing a great work for their Master, Jesus Christ? And as the child of sorrow has had such a sad experience during the past, may she have a perfect confidence in Jesus that she may go "from grace to grace" and thank the Spirit of consolation for ever directing her feet from the prison of body and soul, to follow the example of her Saviour in caring for the souls and bodies of humanity who are spiritually dead, and treading the pathway toward the grave. The scepter of Rome is fast waning, and we hope to see the Star of Bethlehem take its place. M. A. H.

AN OLD MAN'S SUGGESTIONS.

SCATTER THE TRACTS.

LAMARTINE, Pa.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—I wish to have the following suggestions published for the benefit of the many readers of the Cynosure. I am nearly 76 years old, and should like to see lodges of all kinds put out of existence if the Lord will spare my life. I have always been an anti-slavery and anti-secret man, and know that the National Christian Association is on the side of God. Many plans have been suggested and tried, and have proved successful, for which I thank God, and also that the secret monster has not been able to stop this noble cause.

Now we need the wisest counsel to get the Cynosure and tracts circulated throughout our beloved country and the world for the good of church and state. Now the plan I take is, always keep on hand a good selection of Cynosure tracts. Open your purse and spare not. I supplied the Lutheran Synod at Salem with over 5000 pages two years ago. and last spring also distributed some hundreds of pages at a conference meeting and also at Chautauqua Lake. Last week at our County Court I gave out many tracts; and have now two large packages containing one Cynosure and tracts in each, for men that I spoke to, both being influential men opposed to all kinds of lodges. When I send social or business letters I put in some tracts. It appears to me that it would be a great thing if there were only one man in each congregation to work and pray, in addition to our noble lectures and degree workers. Many of these are not afraid of the face of mortal man, but we have many on the anti-secret side that are milk-and-water men.

I would say, gird on the armor and go forth to battle. Preachers should proclaim the truth from the pulpit; but often they will not, so it throws the burden on friends of the reform.

Another plan I would give: Suppose the N. C. A. appoint a committee to meet with conferences, presbyteries, synods, classes and all ecclesiastical meetings, and such as Chautauqua Lake, to lecture if permitted, and if not, then circulate tracts and books. No one can hinder that, I think. By practicing the above, the devil with all his combined force must flee. PHILIP KRIBS.

OUR TRACTS IN JAPAN.

We see by a letter in a religious paper that a missionary, recently sent out to Japan, had some of our tracts given him before he sailed, and had evidently made good use of them. He found them interesting; and regards societies which have a worship of God but do not acknowledge Christ, or whose members may not believe in his mediation, as contrary to Scripture and need to be sharply looked after.

May the good seed prosper in Japan. Who can estimate the difference between the results of preaching a Gospel which fellowships lodge worshipers and the Gospel of our Lord who is the only name given under heaven among men whereby they must be saved. What a burlesque! for any missionary or preacher anywhere to preach Christ by day and acknowledge the Grand Lodge above n secret services by night! T. H.

GLEANINGS.

Rev. Daniel Shuck (an honored name in the United Brethren church) sends from Woodbridge, Cal., a cheering voice, saying:

"I am pleased to see the evidences of increased vitality in this much needed reform in America. The influence and power of secretism as organized in this fair section of our common heritage is alarming to any who are at a standpoint to make proper observations. Yet there is 'silver lining' beneath the dark cloud."

Bro. W. O. Dinius appreciates a good book. He writes:

"'In the Coils' came and is read with interest in my family. I consider it one of the neatest and happiest hits on secrecy I ever read."

"A Reader" who observes narrowly the lodge tokens among Chicago ministers gets an effective shot at Dr. Lorimer thus:

"Thanksgiving Day is over and has made its mark. From among the curiosities of mixed pulpiteers in our city we select some words of the Reverend Sir Knight Templar Lorimer, of Immanuel Baptist church, as an illustration of the old adage, Satan reproving sin. Mr. Lorimer very justly assails Monsigneur Capel, the 'social missionary' of Romanism, for his assault upon our public schools and his absurd attempt to persuade Americans that Romanism and their Republicanism are naturally the best of friends; and then the oath-bound Knight Templar draws his sword and thrusts it at Mr. Capel. But alas! alas! the sword is sharp at both ends, and in his zeal to stab Capel and Romanism also stabs himself and his own proud Templarism. Here is the weapon:

'No, Mr. Capel, we do not want such freedom as this, a freedom whereby at the word of command wheels into rank thousands of your subjects to blindly do your bidding. That is not the freedom we desire in this country, and let us suggest that when you pull the trigger it may be well that you be sure your blunderbuss be not loaded else your fire may be returned with a charge of dynamite that shall blow your institutions skyward.'

Well said, Doctor Lorimer! The 'blunderbuss' of free speech is as dangerous 'dynamite' to your own lodgery as it is to Romanism. Those who live in glass houses should not begin throwing stones."

LESSON XII.—December 23, 1883.—Death of Saul and Jonathan. 1 Sam. 31:1-13.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"The wicked is driven away in his wickedness: but the righteous hath hope in his death."—Prov. 14:32.

DAILY READINGS.

A churlish man	1 Sam. 25:2-13.
Abigail's Intercession	1 Sam. 25:23-31.
Saul again in Peril	1 Sam. 26:5-25.
A Grave Mistake	1 Sam. 27:1-12.
Using Witchcraft	1 Sam. 28:7-19.
David's Lamentation	2 Sam. 1:17-27.
A Remembered Pledge	2 Sam. 9:1-13.

PRACTICAL.

After studying briefly the history recorded in this lesson, glance over the life of Saul as a whole, noting

1. His early advantages.—(a) His quiet home training afforded an opportunity for strengthening the roots of his character. (b) His early traits of character displayed at the time he was called to the throne; modesty, thoughtfulness of parents, bravery, wisdom, etc. (c) The law marked out his duty as king very plainly (Deut. 17:14-20). (d) He was the subject of the Spirit's influences. (e) Although exalted to the throne in opposition to the will of Samuel, he might have enjoyed his hearty cooperation. (f) He came to the throne at a time when peace and prosperity had been restored to Israel through Samuel's influence.

2. Manifold exhortations and warnings.—(a) Although Israel incurred the Lord's displeasure in asking a king, he promised his blessing on both the people and the king if they would now be obedient (1 Sam. 12:14, 15). (b) Warnings are given after his acts of disobedience, by Samuel (1 Sam. 13:11; 15:14). (c) He was also entreated, both by Jonathan and David, to cease his persecutions of him whom he regarded as his rival.

3. Flagrant and persistent disobedience.—(a) He assumed the priestly function (ch. 13:19). (b) He manifested his self-will by unwarranted legislation concerning fasting (14:24). (c) He expressly violated a positive command in the matter of the Amalekites (15:9). (d) He persisted in persecuting David in spite of entreaties, warnings, and his own solemn vows.

4. A fearful doom.—(a) Forsaken by the Lord. (b) Defeated by the Philistines. (c) Despair leads to death by his own hand. (d) Indignity heaped on his body. And here we leave him with his Lord and Judge.

The picture itself should be a sufficient warning against disregarding the invitations and calls of the Gospel, and against sinning in the face of the Word of God. Judgment may be long delayed, but it is none the less certain. The threatenings as well as the promises of God are yea and amen; we should see to it that we stand in a safe and proper relation to God's Word.

Sin may be long cherished in the heart and yet not give forth any sign of its bitter fruit, but it will surely come sooner or later. Two men were once walking along the banks of a stream when their attention was called to a tree which had been broken square off the previous night by the wind. They expressed surprise that a tree so strong and apparently so sound should be broken off in that way. But coming nearer they discovered that an inward rot had been going on for years, until nothing but the shell remained. The destruction came suddenly, but it had been a preparing for many years. So "he that being often reproved hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy."—U. P. Bible Teacher.

CHARACTER OF SAUL.—(1) His opportunities—1 Sam. 10:6-8; 12:14, 20, 25; 12:23. (2) What acts of disobedience—1 Sam. 13:12, 13; 14:24; 15:19, 21, 22; 25:17, 18; 28:7-10. (3) Effect on his character—1 Sam. 15:23; 16:14; 17:11; 18:8, 9; 28:8; 31:4.

CHARACTER OF JONATHAN.—1 Sam. 14:6; 20:42. What made the difference between him and his father?

LESSONS.—1. God tested his ancient people by laws, in obedience to which they showed faith in him. 2. God tests the faith of sinners in Christ by their works. 3. The Spirit, since Pentecost poured out on all flesh, leaves every sinner still unsaved without excuse. 4. Disobedience to Christ evidence of unbelief and present condemnation. John 3:18. 5. Indifference to Christ is rejection of him. 6. Rejection of Christ hardens the heart and increases the guilt of the sinner. "Evil men and seducers wax worse and worse." 1 John 5:19. 7. Certainty of eternal retribution—the ceaseless verdict of every sinner's life in this world. Most terrible element of future eternal punishment, the conviction of every lost sinner that his eternal loss is his own fault. 8. Bible gives no hope to any sinner dying in unbelief. Therefore—Matt. 11:28; 7:33; John 3:16, 36; Acts 16:31; Rom. 8:11.

HINTS.—1. Notice the Divine helps and favoring circumstances of your life.

2. Many things you call obstacles are God's ways of bringing you nearer to himself.

3. See the lovely character of Jonathan notwithstanding his home influences.

4. Example of Saul recorded as a warning to us to cherish all influences of the Holy Spirit.

5. Devotion of Jonathan to David (1 Sam. 20:4) is just what each one of us should show to the Lord Jesus Christ.—Notes for Bible study,

BAND OF HOPE BIBLE LESSON.

CHILDREN OF GOD SEEK TO BE GODLIKE.

1. Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God: therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not.

2. Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is.

3. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure.

4. Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law; for sin is the transgression of the law.

5. And ye know that he was manifested to take away our sins; and in him is no sin.

6. Whosoever abideth in him sinneth not; whosoever sinneth hath not seen him, neither known him.

7. Little children, let no man deceive you; he that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as he is righteous.

8. He that committeth sin is of the devil; for the devil sinneth from the beginning. For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil.

9. Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him; and he cannot sin because he is born of God.

10. In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil: whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother.

11. For this is the message that ye heard from the beginning, that we should love one another. 1 John 3:2-11.

GOLDEN TEXT.—For every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure. 1 John 3:3.

CENTRAL TRUTH.—If we would be God's children we must try to be like him.

1. Christians are like the disguised princes we sometimes read of, who put on a plain dress, and travel about like common men. They bear no outward sign of their heavenly rank and the world cannot see their true greatness.

2. The world did not know Christ because he came in a lowly human disguise. Paul tells us (1 Cor. 2:8) that if it had known him, i. e., known his rank as the Son of God, it would not have crucified the Lord of Glory.

3. To purify ourselves is to break off from sin. We cannot be perfectly pure till we reach heaven, but the work must begin here.

4. When we are adopted into God's family we are given new natures. To sin is against this new nature. Christians often do what is wrong because they have so much of the old nature in them; but they do not do it willfully, or because they like to sin.

5. To do righteousness is to do right. God is perfectly righteous, and if we are his children we must bear a likeness to him.

6. We cannot truly love our brother and not try to save him from the curse of drink. In the United States it sends 100,000 men and women to prison annually and 200,000 children to the poor house.

7. Love will not allow a man to continue in a habit which annoys and hurts others like the use of tobacco. He will not poison his family or himself with a pipe or cigar after he knows the harm it does.

8. It is stated on good authority that 400,000,000 pounds of tobacco are raised annually—nearly four pounds to every dweller on the earth. Thus "it is more universal than bread, and even whisky is more universal than the potato."

9. If a man truly loves his brother he will not desire to enter a secret lodge from whose benefits more than four-fifths of the race, including all the weak and unfortunate, are excluded.

10. If we keep clear ourselves from these sins but do not warn others against them we do not truly love our brother, and are therefore not like God.

PRACTICAL TRUTHS.

Christians must be like God (1) in hating sin (2) in loving mankind.

They must show their love by fighting the evils which hurt humanity, like rum, tobacco and secrecy.

LESSON TALK.

Hans Christian Anderson tells in one of his fairy stories of a swan that was reared in a duck pond. All the ducks laughed at it, it was so big and homely and clumsy; and called it an Ugly Duck. The poor swan felt very sad and miserable till one day it saw a flock of its own kindred, and obeying the instinct within it spread its wings and soared away to join them, leaving forever its uncongenial companions in the duck pond. The true Christian is very much like this swan. His affections, ideas and tastes are so different from those of the world that he is not understood. He is often laughed at, called weak, fanatical and foolish. The world does not know that he is of a royal race, that he is one of the sons of God, any more than the ducks knew that the strange bird, so different from themselves was a beautiful swan. One great reason why the world hates Christians is because of the witness they bear against sin, and especially popular sins, which the world never likes to have meddled with. If it can tempt them to be silent about these sins, or to seem to approve them it is satisfied. Some of the early Christians in the times of the Roman emperors were merely required to throw a grain of incense on the altar, thus giving them an appearance of worshiping the gods. Many underwent terrible deaths rather than do this. Those poor Christians were some of them slaves. What a wonderful thing it must have seemed to them to find themselves princes, sons of the Eternal King! Let us continually bear in mind what a surpassing dignity this is, and try every day not to say or do anything dishonoring to our Heavenly Father.

—Statistics of the religions of British India, based upon the census of 1882, which reckoned the entire population at 254,899,516, make the following enumeration: Various sects and castes of Hindoos, 187,937,450; Mohammedans, 50,121,585; nature worshipers, 6,426,511; Buddhists, 3,418,884; native Christians, 1,862,634; Jains, a sect whose worship is mingled Buddhism and Hindooism, 1,221,896; Sikhs, who are simple theists, 853,426; miscellaneous and unspecified, 3,057,130. The native Protestant Christians number only about 500,000, but this is an increase of 86 per cent. within ten years.

"It is of very little account what men think of us, but it is of great importance what God thinks of us."

OBITUARY.

DAVID NELSON was born in Lyman (now Monroe) N. H., Oct. 3, 1805. He was of Scotch parentage, his people settling in that State before the war of 1775. He was the seventh of fourteen children, eleven of whom reached maturity. Of the eleven seven are still living, and only two have died under eighty years of age. From his parents he received a strong constitution which showed itself in great physical strength and courage. It is related that at one time having bought a barrel of flour at a store in McIndoes, Vt., he placed it upon his shoulder, carried it to the Connecticut River, rowed it across, and shouldering it again carried it up over the bluff to his home. It is a singular fact that at one time when the use of strong drink was so common among the best of people, when the minister in his pastoral calls was invited to taste the contents of the family decanter, when it was always in his father's house, he, though a boy, would never taste it. He believed it was wrong, and at one time he gave one of his boy associates, who had asked him to drink, such a temperance lecture as was not forgotten for many years. Thus he started out in the temperance work and continued his labors in this field during his whole life. One of the last things that he did was to defeat in our commissioner's court an application for license to sell intoxicating liquors in our little town.

In 1834 he married Isabel Hinman of Monroe, N. H., and about two years afterwards moved to southern Illinois. It was a long journey by stage, and by canal and river boats; but after about six weeks they were safely settled on eighty acres of land about thirty-five miles north and east of St. Louis. He had brought with him his New England ideas—that love of liberty and lively sense of human right and justice which was inherent in his nature, and which was intensified by the free and picturesque mountain scenery of his early home. Here it was that they experienced religion and became members of the M. E. church. In this organization they both were active members for nearly forty years. His position now threw him closely in contact with the curse of slavery, and he at once became one of the strongest Abolitionists. His house became the depot of an underground railroad from St. Louis to Chicago, and many a poor fugitive found safety at his hand, and after being fed and supplied with some necessary clothing was placed upon the train and sent onward to that city. None were ever taken back to bondage from his premises. He was outspoken against any institution, church or organization, that would tolerate so great an evil.

When the war closed and the slavery question was settled, he had more opportunity for studying and investigating another evil whose growth he had watched from his early manhood. I have heard him tell many times how he was a young man about twenty years of age when Morgan was murdered and abducted. I have heard him say that nearly every one believed that Morgan was murdered, and that by Masons; that the best men left the lodge, and that it was generally believed for a number of years thereafter that Masonry was dead. He was always an Anti-mason, and the more he studied secret organizations the more he believed them the works of the devil. As he said, "They are worse than slavery—enslaving the souls of men." He denounced the ministry that were Masons; he denounced any church that would tolerate such an institution in its midst, and it was for this reason that he felt it his duty to withdraw from the M. E. church. He afterwards united with the United Brethren. Here his membership continued until death.

He was a man of the strongest convictions, and having taken a position that he believed to be the true one he had the moral courage to defend it under all circumstances and in the face of all opposition. As he advocated freedom from slavery long years before it was reached, so he has stood for the truth in the freedom of souls from the bondage of the lodge. As he was right in the one, may we not believe he was right in the other also? and that there will come a time, and that not far distant, when God will sweep from our midst all the evils of lodgery and plant in their stead the germs of human justice, love and truth. God will take his own good time. Lowell has said—

Careless seems the dread avenger, history's pages but record,
One death grapple in the darkness 'twixt old systems and his word;
Truth forever on the scaffold, wrong forever on throne,
Yet that scaffold rules the future, and behind the dread unknown
Standeth God within the shadow keeping watch above his own.

FARM NOTES.

FEED FOR MILK.

The following are the conclusions reached at the Iowa Agricultural College:

The supply of milk depends essentially upon the rapid growth of new cells in the milk glands. These cells consist largely of proteine. The caseine and fat (cheese and butter elements) are formed from the proteine; hence profitable dairying must depend largely on the amount of proteine contained in the food, and made on cheap food. Where rations rich in proteine are fed, such as clover and oil meal, the following results may be noticed:

1st. A decided increase in the quantity of milk and very little shrinkage for a long time.

2d. Considerable gain in the solid matter of the milk, as shown by chemical tests, or by the increased butter and cheese production.

3d. Again in the quality of the milk, where fodders rich in carbonhydrates and fats are given. The slight increase in quantity and richness of the milk is not due to any direct action these have, but to the assistance they afford the proteine in preventing its oxydation. Animals fed mainly on sugar beets, potatoes, or corn, will give considerable milk; but it is done at the expense of the proteine of the body, and after a while the animal will suddenly waste away.

In view of these well established facts, what shall be the economical milk ration for farmers?

Calculated upon the basis of the amount of proteine contained in each, and taking corn as the unit of value, when corn is worth fifty cents per hundred pounds, the following articles will approximately be worth per hundred:

Corn	$ 50
Wheat	65
Oats	60
Barley	55
Wheat bran	70
Oil meal	1 45
Clover hay	80
Timothy	50
Potatoes	10

This is not absolutely correct, because the carbonhydrates and fats in some of these would materially aid the proteine, and hence, would be worth relatively more than above represented.

It is, however, sufficiently correct to show that the cheap foods for milk in Iowa are well cured clover hay, wheat bran, with a little corn meal and oil meal added.

A SURE CURE FOR POULTRY LICE.

Lice are the great pest of the poultry-house. Hens left to range about the farm or garden will keep clean by wallowing in the dry dust. But for a good part of the year the villagers have to keep their hens in confinement, and very soon, without constant watchfulness, lice appear; and if the poultry-house is near the barn, or within it, the vermin spread to the cow and horse stables and make trouble there. White-washing, if it were attended to every month, would be effectual, if the wash penetrated all the cracks. But this involves a great deal of labor, and it is difficult to reach all the crevices. There is the same objection to sulphur and tobacco smoke. A few of the lice are generally left for seed after every smoking.

The best remedy we have ever applied is crude petroleum, or if more convenient the common kerosene oil used for lamps. This is always at hand, and a few minutes labor with the oil can will rout the enemy. Generally one application is enough to destroy them. We apply it directly to the perches, pouring a continuous stream from the spout. The hens get this oil upon their feet and legs, and it is rubbed all over the feathers. It is penetrating, and the odor seems to be exceedingly offensive to all insects. We have no lousy hens since the application of this remedy.—Exchange.

HIS OWN EXECUTOR.

A WELL-KNOWN GENTLEMAN'S PHILANTHROPHY AND THE COMMOTION CAUSED BY ONE OF HIS LETTERS.

(Rochester Democrat and Chronicle).

We published in our local columns yesterday morning a significant letter from a gentleman known personally or by reputation to nearly every person in the land. We have received a number of letters, protesting against the use of our columns for such "palpable frauds and misrepresentations;" therefore, to confirm beyond a doubt the authenticity of the letter, and the genuineness of its sentiments, a reporter of this paper was commissioned to ascertain all the possible facts in the matter. Accordingly he visited Clifton Springs, saw the author of the letter, and with the following result:

Dr. Henry Foster, the gentleman in question, is 63 or 64 years of age, and has an extremely cordial manner. He presides as superintendent over the celebrated sanitarium which accomodates over 500 guests and is unquestionably the leading health resort of the country. Several years ago this benevolent man wisely determined to be his own executor; and, therefore turned over this magnificent property worth $300,000, as a free gift to a board of trustees, representing the principal evangelical denominations. Among the trustees are Bishop A. C. Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, Buffalo; Bishop Mathew Simpson, Philadelphia, Methodist Episcopal; President M. B. Anderson, of the University of Rochester; Rev. Dr. Clark, Secretary of the A. B. C. F. M., Boston. The benevolent purpose of the institution is the care: 1st.—of evangelical missionaries and their families whose health has been broken in their work. 2nd.—of ministers of any denomination, in good standing. 3rd.—of members of any church, who otherwise would be unable to secure such care and treatment. The current expenses of the institution are met by the receipt from the hundreds of distinguished and wealthy people who every year crowd its utmost capacity. Here come men and women who were once in perfect health, but neglected the first symptoms of disease. The uncertain pains they felt at first were overlooked until their health became impaired. They little realized the danger before them, nor how alarming even trifling ailments might prove. They constitute all classes, including ministers and bishops, lawyers, judges, statesmen, millionaires, journalists, college professors and officials from all parts of the land.

Drawing the morning Democrat and Chronicle from his pocket, the reporter remarked, "Doctor, that letter of yours has created a good deal of talk, and many of our readers have questioned its authenticity."

"To what do you refer?" remarked the doctor.

"Have you not seen the paper?"

"Yes, but I have not had time to read it yet."

The reporter thereupon showed him the letter, which was as follows:

CLIFTON SPRINGS SANITARIUM CO. }
CLIFTON SPRINGS, N. Y., Oct. 11, '83 }

DEAR SIR: I am using Warner's Safe Cure, and I regard it as the best remedy for some forms of kidney disease that we have. I am watching with great care some cases I am now treating with it, and I hope for favorable results.

I wish you might come down yourself, as I would like very much to talk with you about your sterling remedy and show you over our institution.

Yours truly,
[Signed] HENRY FOSTER, M. D.

"I do not see why anybody should be skeptical concerning that letter," remarked the doctor.

"Isn't it unusual for a physician of your standing and influence to commend a proprietary preparation?"

"I don't know how it may be with others, but in this institution we allow no person to dictate to us what we shall use. Our purpose is to cure the sick, and for that work we use anything we know to be valuable. Because I know Warner's Safe Cure is a very valuable preparation, I commend it. As its power is manifested under my use, so shall I add to the completeness of my commendation."

"Have you ever analyzed it, doctor?"

"We always analyze before we try any preparation of which we do not know the constituents. But analysis, you know, only gives the elements; it does not give the all-important proportions. The remarkable power of Warner's Safe Cure undoubtedly consists in the proportions according to which its elements are mixed. While there may be a thousand remedies made of the same elements, unless they are put together in proper proportions, they are worthless as kidney and liver preparations.

"I hope some day to meet Mr. Warner personally, and extend fuller congratulations to him on the excellence of his preparations. I have heard much of him as the founder of the Warner Observatory, and as a man of large benevolence. The reputed high character of the man himself gave assurance to me in the first place that he would not put a remedy upon the market that was not trustworthy; and it was a source of a good deal of gratification to me to find out by actual experiment that the remedy itself sustained my impressions."

The conclusion reached by Dr. Foster is precisely the same found by Dr. Dio Lewis, Dr. Robert A. Gunn, ex-Surgeon-General Gallagher and others, and proves beyond a doubt the great efficacy of the remedy which has awakened so much attention in the land and rescued so many men, women and children from disease and death.

THE CYNOSURE CLUBBING LIST.

Every subscriber to this paper who wishes to take other standard journals will do well to look over our list, and notice how he can expend his money with most economy. The Cynosure at two dollars per year will be sent together with either of the publications below, for the price in cash named in the second column. The price in the first column is what you would have to pay for the two by sending direct to the publisher of the paper named. These prices are for new or old subscribers to the Cynosure, but new only for the other papers.

An Awful Responsibility.

EVERYBODY has something to say about consumption. We all deplore its terrible ravages, but only a few of us seem to have enough common sense to take the proper means of preventing it. It is as simple as "two and two are four," that Hale's Honey of Horehound and Tar, taken as a remedy for coughs, colds, difficult breathing, hoarseness, or any of the symptoms which pave the way for that terrible destroyer, will effect a radical and rapid cure of the ailment, and avert all danger. Whoever, under these circumstances, neglects to resort to the true specific, assumes a fearful responsibility. Of druggists.

PARTY PROSPECTS.

The National Republican of Washington, dips its pencil in the colors of the rainbow, and draws the future of its party thus:

"The wrangles of factions, the jealousies between individuals, the disputes over matters of administration, and the dangerous indifferentism over great questions supposed to have been settled, no longer threaten the Republican party of the nation. Each element in the party is looking beyond its own circle, and realizing that a re-union of all can alone avert the dire disaster of Southern ascendency.

Altogether, it may be said that never upon the assemblage of Congress prior to a Presidential campaign have the Republican party prospects looked brighter."

What say the three hundred thousand once-Republicans, but now Prohibitionists in Ohio, the twenty-one thousand who voted for Judge Pitman in Massachusetts; and the baffled and betrayed thousands in Kansas and Iowa, to this Republican lullaby? Can thinking men fail to notice that the most popular Republican leaders, Grant, Logan, etc., have been life-long Democrats?—that there are tariff Democrats and free-trade Republicans, where their favorite wares and manufactures, or interests are concerned; and that the very terms Democrat and Republican, as party names, are, "Empty as the whistling wind?"

Before the opening of Congress the single question, Who shall be the Speaker of the House? filled more columns, and shed more ink than all other political discussions put together. And a Republican administration has put and now keeps the son of Confederate Gen. Albert Pike in a lucrative office, and pays him a high salary from the treasury of that government, whieh his father raised and led two regiments of Indians to destroy at the battle of Pea Ridge?

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

THE FORTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS.

This body assembled on Monday last, and as the Christmas holidays with the attendant carousals are so near but little will be done but strictly preliminary work, as organization, appointing the army of pages, laborers, door-keepers and sub-door-keepers, etc.; with some "notices of bills."

It is a mistake to suppose that ordinary news from Washington can be given from our "Headquarters" through the anti-secret press. Lightning is quicker than the mail; and the "doings of Congress" are better given in the Chicago dailies, every morning, than they are, or can be, in the daily papers here. What we are to do, in the words of Secretary Stoddard, is, to give Congressional news "WHICH IS NOT STRAINED THROUGH THE MASONIC SIEVE;" and we begin by giving our readers an estimate of the new Congress.

This is virtually a body of followers without leaders. Not that there are no men of capacity to be leaders if there were any party ends to aim at, or principles to guide them. But there are not. Slavery is gone. Republicans and Democrats are equally loud for free ballot and a fair count. All alike are for negro education. No man in either House would dare propose to abolish all tariffs and run the government by direct taxation; and so nothing is left of the "tariff-question" but a squabble between sectional interests. Polygamy is universally unpopular, except among the Mormon leaders who practice it; and Gen. Rosecrans has already given notice of a bill to abolish the evil by a Constitutional amendment on the ground that it is contrary to "our civilization,"—not Christian civilization: that would mean something; but "our civilization;" and that includes Mormon civilization, which governs several Territories already, and is rapidly reaching for more!

It is true the traditions of the Republican party still give it prestige; and, since Mahone's defeat, and the Danville and other Democratic murders, the National Republican here, comes out strong for a solid North to meet the "solid South" which has just overwhelmingly elected Mr. Carlisle Speaker of the House of Representatives. But the solid North has already gone to pieces on the rock Prohibition, in Kansas, Iowa, and on the thousands of Prohibitionist voters in other States, who never will again bow their necks patiently to saloon rule. And what hope the Republican party has of roping in these Prohibitionists can be easily seen in two simple facts: first, that the Presidential mansion here, in the hands of Republican President Arthur, is a National Liquor-saloon; and the restaurants of both Houses of Congress are liquor-saloons, where you can "get anything you call for."

But the Republicans insist that they are the friends of the negroes, and must have their one million votes. And it is true, that Prohibition Republicans are the negroes' friends. But eight Republican judges on our Supreme Bench here, have just practically repealed the Fourteenth Amendment, and by re-enacting the old State Rights heresy, so far as negroes are concerned, these Republican judges have turned the colored voter over to the shot-guns and revolvers of Louisiana, Mississippi, and the other States, whose voting-places have been made slippery with the blood of colored, and even white Republicans. In the face of such facts, he must be party-blind who hopes for a solid Republican North, supported by negro votes.

What then is this 48th Congress to do? What can they do? What is left them but a mere scramble for office now, and in November, 1884? They are as good men and patriots as the average of home politicians. But they have a Constitution whose TERMS make no difference between the Mormon, pagan, and Christian religions. They are most of them away from their families, and there are the saloons in both Senate and House restaurants, and ten thousand honest-seeming drinking men, and history and experience tell us that while those saloons are there their temptations will not be restrained, and Congressmen will be drunk, and visit two other houses which stand just beyond the saloon!

In this dilemma Messrs. Logan and Blaine, who are able men and patriots, but not reformers, come to us with each his substitute for Prohibition and for putting liquor-saloons on a law level with mock-auctions, lotteries and gambling hells.

Both Logan and Blaine propose to tax the liquor trade, and make it perpetual by making the life of the nation to rest on it! Logan proposes to make liquor support education, and Blaine proposes to make it pay our State and county expenses! The voters will never consent to either of these methods of dodging the Prohibition issue. We are an over-taxed people. But we know too well that liquor creates much more taxes than it will pay.

Well, what is the remedy? Read the American Platform and see.

ART. I. "We hold that ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation." Adopt this and it covers polygamy, for Christ is the only law-giver who marries one man to one woman.

ART. III. "We hold that the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question."

As to the colored voters, open the Masonic lodge-room closet, and show them there kept the disguises and masks of the Ku-Klux, Knights of the Golden Circle, and White Leagues, and they will vote Art. IV., that such lodges "shall be prohibited by law." And women, who are excluded by the lodge and martyred by the saloon, give them the ballot and they will pray and vote down both.

—The terse letter of Mr. Joseph Cook, the world-renowned Boston lecturer, on our first page, is sharp pointed toward the lodge with a more fearful condemnation than has yet, we believe, appeared from his pen. A considerable examination of the new Indian theology shows that some further account of it is due the readers of the CYNOSURE, which space will not this week allow.

—The convention of Hollanders which was announced in the Cynosure of Nov. 1st, will meet on the 19th and 20th of December in Holland, Ottawa county, Michigan. This will be a meeting of great significance in our reform—the first held among a foreign speaking people, and in which a foreign tongue predominates.

—Although the Interior ceased to make a specialty of the lodge discussion after gracefully turning over the debate to the Cynosure, it is of interest to note that the Evening Journal daily, in its report of the Farwell Hall S. S. lesson exposition, publishes some telling arguments against the orders. The extract printed last week should bave been credited to the Journal.

—While the government is engaged in a desperate battle with the Louisiana lotteries, our daily papers, as last year, have begun to print advertisements for the nefarious business, so deceptively arranged as to be mistaken for ordinary reading matter, giving editorial endorsement to the business.

—A discussion of great interest has been going on in the columns of the Nation for several weeks upon the utility of the college secret societies, especially those of the Yale Senior class. Without taking any part themselves the editors of the Nation have opened their columns to students and alumni, who use great liberty in condemning these college pests. Further notice will be given to this matter.

—Word comes of the death on the 20th ult. of Moses Varney, of Springdale, Iowa, than whom the Cynosure had few more faithful and enduring friends. Hc died at his home after a painful illness of several months. He was an early settler in Iowa, and was a Christian who was not in favor of any of the works of the devil. Young men who were of his acquaintance and under the influence of his sterling character have occasion to thank God for his upright example, ennobling the humble walk of a Christian man above the character of those who arc great in the praise of this world only.

—The San Jose Morning Times, Cal., sent us by a correspondent contains a graphic account of the execution in that city of Joseph Jewell. Two others were concerned in the desperate murder, one a saloon keeper who was building a hotel, and planned the murder to get money to continue the work. This is onc of the lessons of the crime—a scheme of a whisky dealer to perpetuatc and enlarge his murderous traffic makes no account of the human life or suffering that may stand in the way.

—The Catholic Review cautions its readers against trusting unquestioningly in the press dispatches from Rome, since they are in the hands of numbers of secret societies, who distort facts which are unpleasing to them. This is a caution in favor of the Pope, and we give it for what it is worth; but there is no doubt that the press dispatches all over the world are more or less tinged with lodge prejudice; a marked instance being that referred to by the New York Witness in an extract in another part of this paper.

"YE FEARFUL SAINTS FRESH COURAGE TAKE."

BUFFALO, Dec. 3.—A United Presbyterian minister who listened to my remarks last evening said to me this morning, "You can't hit Masonry too hard to suit me, but to tell the truth I am almost discouraged about ever seeing much done towards its destruction."

This is the feeling of a great many and if it was universal among opponents of the lodge, little or no progress would be made. This feeling I apprehend is the result of causes for which the distrustful man is himself mainly responsible and which he has it in his power largely to correct.

The radical cause is first a want of "faith in God" as applied to this particular form of evil, which is itself a sin, and may, as the same sin prevented the Egyptian refugees from entering the Promised Land, prevent him from seeing the consummation of his wishes. Nothing is too hard for God; the stronger and more aggravated the evil the greater will be the manifestation of Divine power in its destruction. The lightning shivers the sinewy oak with as much facility as it brushes the foliage from the most delicate plant, and one eye-flash of God's anger sends a quiver through the whole earth. "He looketh upon the earth and it trembleth," and all the inhabitants thereof are as grasshoppers in his sight.

Second, this feeling is partly begotten of ignorance. A cursory glance over the surface is delusive and leads to wrong conclusions. Inferences drawn from localities are too restricted to furnish anything like a just conception of the case. Men must broaden out and dig down to take the true gauge of the reform. Those who keep posted are as a rule hopeful and stout-hearted, while those who neglect the literature of our movement are given to despondency. You need weekly reports from all parts of the field and able discussions such as are furnished in the Cynosure by our reporters and correspondents to keep your courage up.

Third, some enter the work with a burning zeal and strong expectation of speedy and easy victory, and when they are disappointed in results their ardor cools and the fervor of their zeal turns to languor, and they conclude it a hopeless struggle.

This suggests a fourth cause of discourgement—inactivity. I have yet to find the man or woman who preaches and prays against the Secret Empire, who talks about it in Sabbath school, who votes against it at the polls, who warns his neighbors of the danger, reads the literature of our reform and urges it upon the attention of others, and contributes according to his ability to sustain the work, who does not recognize a marked progress and look to the future with confidence. The do-littles and the say-littles are the despondents, while the workers receive by faith the substance of the thing hoped for, and now share in the triumph though years may intervene before its full consummation.

Fifth, the remedy is simple. If you are a minister preach on the subject. If you have a tongue, talk and pray about it; not simply when you are with friends but when you meet opposition. If you have a vote, cast it against your own and the common enemy of free government. Contribute of your means as you are able. Read your paper carefully and note especially the progress made in different parts of the field, and go to work and get up a club for the Cynosure among your neighbros. Note all incidents of importance and send them in brief to your paper, and unless you are a chronic, hopcless despondent, "your days of mourning will be past and gone" and the days of real joy and usefulness begun. Try it, and if the cure does not follow write me down in your book of remembrance for a "crank" or a "quack."

VINDICATED!

LATE JUSTICE TO THE LODGE LIES ABOUT THE WASHINGTON FUNERAL.

Upon the reports telegraphed from Washington last spring, which seriously implicated the editor of this paper, the New York Witness of the 6th inst. says editorially:

"A contemporary apologizes to the Rev. Dr. Blanchard, of Illinois, for publishing in May last, severe remarks on his alleged bad conduct at a funeral in Washington, D. C. The charge against the Doctor, which was widely circulated by that very colored medium in matters of religion, temperance, and caste, the Associated Press, was that he, when called upon to officiate at the funeral of a Knight of Pythias, took advantage of the opportunity to inveigh against secret societies, causing thereby a distressing scene in the church.

Dr. Blanchard, who is a Christian gentleman of a high order, simply denied the charge, for which he said there was no foundation, but the severe remarks of our contemporary were not on that account withdrawn. It has, however, corresponded with a clergyman in Washington on whom it can rely, who says the sermon was a good Gospel sermon, without any reference to secret societies; but the preacher being known to be the leading spirit of the numerous class of Christians who deprecate all secret societies, was supposed by the friends of the deceased to be aiming at him and them, and they gave that impression to the reporters, who were not present at the services at all, but who are usually of a class that favors the wrong side of any dispute in which ministers of the Gospel are concerned. Upon the evidence of this trusted Washington correspondent, which is doubtless correct, our contemporary makes an apology, which would have been better had it been made earlier and been full."

HOW TO DO IT.

A TWENTY-FIVE THOUSAND LIST BEFORE JANUARY 1ST.

And all so easily done that you may laugh that it was not thought of before. There are at ordinary computation over 20,000 readers of the Cynosure. Now let each one of these friends get us a two-months subscriber for 25cts., and the work is DONE. For with the present list, that will make 25,000 and more. Give your servants in the office this list, and then it is their business to make, if possible, this magnificent list A PERMANENT ONE.

PUSH IT!

HELP WANTED.

We want you to help us obtain the Masonic standing of the ministers in your place, or of others you may know, so that we can make out a list for reference, and send documents to such as seem to be approachable on the subject. A good way to introduce the subject is to ask them to subscribe for the Christian Cynosure.

NOT TOO LATE YET.

Don't let the favorable season pass without making an effort to get up a club for your paper. Grit and grace will win if you go to work in earnest. Try it and you will be surprised and gratified by results.

WHERE DOES HE BELONG?

The following from a letter from Bro. Hinman to the United Brethren in Christ is a sad portrait of a Philadelphia pastor. Can Gospel health and soundness follow the ministration of such a man?

"The first minister I have found who boldly avowed himself a Freemason, and squarely justified that order, declaring it more benevolent than any Christian church, was the pastor of the leading U. B. church of this city, Rev. Dr. Miller. He told me that the anti-secrecy clause in the Discipline was a dead letter throughout the East, and that the anti-secrecy sentiment, which had been so strong in the West, was rapidly dying out of the church. He said the matter was never referred to in this conference, and that when he joined the conference he was assured by the presiding elder that the anti-secrecy testimony of the church would be wholly discarded. I asked him if he read the Telescope, and he said he did not, but that he and his people took the Itinerant. I asked about the interest which he and his people had in the African mission, and found they had no interest, and but little knowledge in reference to it. He said that many of his members belonged to the secret orders and he thought the course pursued by the anti-secrecy men in the past had been most ruinous. Personally he treated me with much civility and seems an amiable and cultured gentleman; but (as it seems to me) utterly destitute of that principle of common honesty which keeps business men from subscribing to an engagement which they intend to repudiate, or from joining an organization with the fixed intention of subverting its essential principles."

—A female prayer-meeting was begun in the N. C. A. Washington building on Wednesday last, and it is hoped that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union will also hold meetings regularly in the convenient room provided for meetings in the building. The Union Signal speaks thus of Miss F. E. Willard's late visit to Washington:

"Miss Willard was at the National capital on Thanksgiving night, the meeting being held in Calvary Baptist church, which was packed to the altar steps: and crowds failed to gain admittance, Mrs. Sallie La Fetra had decorated the pulpit handsomely wirh large crayons of Mary A. Woodbridge and Judith Ellen Foster, and wrapped the flag around the large reading desk. Mrs. Pope sang Dr. Rankin's beautiful version of "For God and home and native land" to Bischoff's clarion music. The crusade psalm was read in a clear, womanly voice, and all the appointments of the meeting were in the excellent taste for which "the district" has been famed under its gifted president, Mrs. Clara L. Roach. Miss Willard's announcement that one million signatures were to be secured by the W. C. T. U. to a petition for a plank in the presidential convention platforms declaring for prohibition, was received with applause.

Congressman Price, of Wisconsin, brother of Hon. Hiram Price, came to the platform and said to the ladies: "Count on me for anything that I can do, you will never find me wanting." Brainard H. Warner, president of the Y. M. C. A., for the city, tendered our National president a reception. Thanksgiving day was spent by Mrs. Chapin, Misses Willard and Gordon at Senator Blair's. Never was the outlook brighter for temperance at the capital."

RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

The Golden Floral Series introduced last season by Lee and Shepard were among the most popular publications for the gift season. The series has been increased by the addition of a half dozen of the most beautiful specimens of the art of the engraver and printer. The gems of the poet and artist have seldom been placed before the eye in so sumptuous a setting. The Golden Floral Series is a delightful and harmonious combination of the finely illustrated poem with the tasteful and beautiful fringed floral card. The poems selected for such a superb setting are "That Glorious Song of Old," that gem from the pen of Dr. Edmund H. Sears; "Come into the Garden, Maud," Tennyson's exquisite love song; "My Faith Looks up to Thee," Ray Palmer's immortal hymn; "It was the Calm and Silent Night," by Alfred Monet; the well-known and popular ballad, "Curfew Shall not Ring To-night;" and the great psalm of the soldier poet David, "The Lord is my Shepherd." To describe the illustrations which adorn the volumes would be impossible, for each is an art study, and some are no less a manifestation of genius than the poems which they illustrate and adorn. These magnificent works are for sale in Chicago by Jansen, McClurg & Co., at $1.75 each. Published by Lee and Shepard, Boston.

The English Illustrated Magazine for December is the third number of a new monthly issued by Macmillan & Co., publishers well known on both sides the ocean. With less diversity than our illustrated American monthlies, for it has no editorial departments, it is yet in the character of its contributions and the excellence of its engravings a fair rival for the best that we have produced. The present number opens with a sketch of Luther, by James Sime, which has the rare quality of putting the reader in such sympathy with the great reformer that the change in his convictions from an obedient monk to a defiant burner of a papal bulls is easily followed and clearly seen. Portraits and illustrations from photographs and sketches from life by Albert Drurer and Lucas Cranach, Luther's friend, adorn the article. The frontispiece is one of the finest of the multitude of portraits of Luther that have appeared of late. His rugged and indomitable spirit speaks in every line. Other finely illustrated articles are "Some Forgotten Etchers," and "Corn Cockles."

The Scholar's Quarterly, which made an enviable reputation in the hands of Mr. Walters, the Philadelphia publisher, is now issued by Howard Gannett & Co., Boston, with all its old excellence and beauty in illustrations, maps, music and printing. The preparation of the Sabbath-school lesson with this help will cultivate diligence in Bible study on the part of the scholar and give excellent results. The same publishers issue the Little Folks' Quarterly, a publication of equal merit.

The new American Dictionary offered by the American Agriculturist is truly a multum in parvo. The list of its valuable tables, statistics, and historical, political and religious information would fill half a column of the Cynosure. And this is included in the volume besides the dictionary. This valuable book may be had by every yearly subscriber to the Cynosure with the Agriculturist and engraving at $3.20 for the four.

The Advance, of this city, has shown rare business enterprise in making arrangements with Joseph Cook to print in full his Monday morning lectures in Tremont Temple, Boston, this winter, beginning in February. The general subject of the lectures will be "Progressive Theology." The Advance has purchased the copyright and will have the first full report of the lectures.

For the first time since the invention of printing a German book has reached its one-thousandth edition, each of them numbering 3,000 copies, thus making in all 3,000,000 copies. It is a primer by Hacster, published by G. D. Baedecker, of Essen, which first appeared in 1853, and reached its one-hundredth edition in 1863.

—The genuine character of the Christian work in Madagascar was proved recently by the conduct of the Queen of that country, whose policy toward her enemies showed that her religion was no mere profession. After the bombardment of Tamatave by the French, it became necessary that the French subjects should be expelled her capital. When requested to sign the order she replied: "We are Christians, and must remember at this trying time that we are so, and act as becomes Christians. They gave our friends at Majanga an hour. We will give them five days, and not a hair of their heads, remember, is to be harmed." When the French left they could not get bearers to take them to the coast although they offered three times as much as the ordinary price, the men fearing that when they got to Tamatave they would not be allowed to return. But the Queen, through her Prime Minister, ordered bearers to take them at her own cost, and her orders were obeyed.

THE HOME.

HOLINESS BY FAITH.

Church of God, beloved and chosen,
Church of Christ for whom he died,
Claim thy gifts and praise the Giver!—
"Ye are washed and sanctified."
Sanctified by God the Father,
And by Jesus Christ his Son,
And by God the Holy Spirit,
Holy, holy, three in one.

By his will he sanctifieth,
By the Spirit's power within,
By the loving Hand that chasteneth,
Fruits of righteousness to win;
By his truth and by his promise,
By the Word, his gifts unpriced,
By his own blood, and by union
With the risen life of Christ.

Holiness by faith in Jesus,
Not by effort of thine own,—
Sin's dominion crushed and broken
By the power of grace alone—
God's own holiness within thee,
His own beauty on thy brow,—
This shall be thy pilgrim brightness,
This thy blessed portion now.

He will sanctify thee wholly;
Body, spirit, soul shall be
Blameless till thy Saviour's coming
In his glorious majesty;
He hath perfected forever
Those whom he hath sanctified;
Spotless, glorious and holy,
Is the church his chosen bride.

FAITH STRENGTHENING.

BY GEO. MULLER.

"How may I a true believer have my faith strengthened?" The answer is this.

I. Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above and cometh down from the father of lights with whom there is no variableness neither shadow of turning. James 1:17. As the increase of faith is a good gift it must come from God and therefore he ought to be asked for this blessing.

II. The following means however, ought to be used: (1.) the careful reading of the Word of God, combined with meditation on it. Through reading of the Word of God and especially through meditation on the Word of God, the believer becomes more and more acquainted with the nature and character of God, and thus sees more and more, besides his holiness and justice, what a kind, loving, gracious, merciful, mighty, wise and faithful being he is, and, therefore in poverty, affliction of body, bereavement in his family, difficulty in his service, want of a situation or employment, he will repose upon the ability of God to help him, because he has not only learned from his Word that he is of almighty power and infinite wisdom, but he has also seen instance upon instance in the Holy Scriptures in which his almighty power and infinite wisdom have been actually exercised in helping and delivering his people, and he will repose on the willingness of God to help him because, he has not only learned from the Scriptures what a kind, good, merciful, gracious, and faithful being God is, but because he has also seen in the Word of God how in a great variety of instances he has proved himself to be so. And the consideration of this, if God has became known to us through prayer and meditation on his Word will lead us in general at last, with a measure of confidence to rely upon him; and thus the reading of the Word of God, together with meditation on it will be one especial means of strengthening our faith.

III. As, with reference to the growth of every grace of the Spirit, it is of the utmost importance that we seek to maintain an upright heart and a good conscience, and, therefore, do not knowingly and habitually indulge in those things which are contrary to the mind of God. So it is also particularly the case with reference to the growth in faith. How can I possibly continue to act faith upon God, concerning anything, if I continually grieve him and seek to detract from his glory and honor, while I profess to trust in and depend upon him?

All my confidence toward God, all my leaning on him in the hour of trial, will be gone, if I have a guilty conscience, and do not seek to put away this guilty conscience, but still continue to do things which are contrary to the mind of God. And, if in any particular instance, I cannot trust in God, because of this guilty conscience, then my faith is weakened by that instance of distrust; for faith with every fresh trial of it either increases by trusting God and thus getting help, or it decreases by not trusting him, and then there is less and less power of looking simply and directly to him, and a habit of self-dependence is begotten or encouraged. One or the other of these will always be the case in each particular instance. Either we trust in God and in that case we neither trust in ourselves, nor in our fellow men, nor in circumstances, nor in anything else beside, or we do trust in one or more of these and in that case do not trust in God.

IV. If we, indeed, desire our faith to be strengthened, we should not shrink from opportunities where our faith may be tried, and, therefore, through the trial be strengthened. In our natural state we dislike dealing with God alone. Through our natural alienation from God we shrink from him and from eternal realities. This cleaves to us more or less even after our regeneration. Hence it is that, more or less, even as believers, we have the same shrinking from standing with God alone, from depending upon him alone, from looking to him alone; and yet if we wish our faith to be strengthened, this is the very position in which we ought to be. The more I am in a position to be tried in faith with reference to my body, my family, my service for the Lord, my business, etc., the more shall I have opportunity of seeing God's help and deliverance, and every fresh instance in which he helps and delivers me will tend towards the increase of my faith. On this account, therefore the believer should not shrink from situations, positions, circumstances, in which his faith may be tried, but, should cheerfully embrace them as opportunities where he may see the hand of God, stretched out on his behalf, to help and deliver him, and whereby he may thus have his faith strengthened.

V. The last important point for the strengthening of our faith is, that we let God work for us, when the hour of the trial of our faith comes, and do not work a deliverance of our own, wherever God has given faith, it is given, among other reasons for the very purpose of being tried. Yea, however weak our faith may be, God will try it. Only with this restriction, that as, in every way, he leads us on gently, gradually, patiently, so also with reference to the trial of our faith. At first our faith will be tried very little in comparison with what it may be afterwards: for God never lays more upon us than he is willing to enable us to endure. Now, when the trial of faith comes, we are naturally inclined to distrust God, and to trust rather in ourselves, or in our friends or in circumstances. We will rather work a deliverance of our own, some how or other, than simply look to God and wait for his help. But if we do not patiently wait for God's help, if we work a deliverance of our own, then at the next trial of our faith it will be thus again, we shall be again inclined to deliver ourselves; and thus with every fresh instance of that kind, our faith will decrease. Whilst on the other hand, were we to stand still in order to see the salvation of God, to see his hand stretched out on our behalf, trusting in him alone, then our faith would be increased and in every fresh case in which the hand of God is stretched out in our behalf, in the hour of the trial of our faith, our faith would be increased yet more. Would the believer, therefore, have his faith strengthened he must especially give time to God, who tries his faith in order to help and deliver him, the moment it is good for him.—Selected.

THE CONVENIENT SEASON.

When shall the convenient season come? When a misspent life is drawing to a close, and the conscience has been seared as with a hot iron; when the will has lost its power of moral choice, and all purer and nobler desires have long since died away—will that be a convenient season?

When shall it be? When age has bowed your form and robbed you of your manly vigor; when you have no longer anything left to devote to God's service, or any time wherein to serve him; when shriveled and withered by the wintry blasts, you are swept away like a seared leaf by the December blasts—driven away in your wickedness—will that be a convenient season?

When shall it be? When sickness lays you on a dying-bed, and the body is racked with mortal pains; when heart and flesh are failing; when the head is dizzy and the eye dim; when the fevered lips refuse to form the utterance of prayer, and the disordred mind can no longer exercise its powers of thought—will that be a convenient season?

When shall it be? When death lays his cold hand upon you in stern arrest, and the cold dew stands on your brow; when the body, like a worn-out machine, refuses any longer to do its work; when the world rolls away from under your feet, and the realities of eternity start forth upon your terrified spirit—will that be a convenient season?

Oh, my brothers, my brothers! Are your names written in the Lamb's book of life? If you have no reason to know that they are, then let this be the convenient season. Cry, like Christian in the "Pilgrim's Progress," "Life! Life! Life! Eternal Life!" "Behold, now is the accepted time; behold now is the day of salvation."—Rev. W. H. M. H. Aitken.

WHO WILL ANSWER?

A missionary in India was telling the people of a certain province the old story of Jesus and his love. Among those who listened with hungry hearts was a little Hindoo boy, who longed for the salvation bought with so great a price. Conversing with the missionary afterwards, he was deeply moved by the thought that Christ is the only Saviour, and, looking up earnestly into the serious face of the white teacher, the boy asked, "Do your people believe that we will all be lost if we do not believe in Jesus?" When the missionary answered yes, he exclaimed, with thrilling earnestness and wonder, "Oh! why then did your people not send to tell us sooner?" Ah, who will answer the boy's solemn question?

God our Father, who has committed to us the true riches, and cast our lot in gospel lands—he, too, asks the awful question, "Why do you not send the news of salvation to the dying heathen?" Christ our Saviour, who gave his life a ransom for us and for them, and who has saved us from our sins, and filled us with peace and hope and joy—he, too, asks the question. The Holy Spirit, our Comforter, who dwells in us with his light and power and grace—he, too, repeats the question. Who will answer it? Can we justify our slowness of heart and our neglect of duty? What shall we say to the appeals of the heathen, and what shall we answer him who has commanded us to preach the Gospel to every creature?—Sel.

CURE FOR DYSPEPSIA.

Everybody who has dyspeptic friends, which, unfortunately, in this country is equivalent to saying everybody, must have heard of a new and wonderful cure for that dismal complaint and of its brilliant achievements. Fortunately this blessed remedy cannot be patented, for it is nothing more nor less than hot water. It is cheap and not nasty, and though its efficacy may have been exaggerated and the doctors may some day discover that it is a dreadful insult to the stomach, there can be no doubt that its popularity is great and rapidly increasing.

A Poughkeepsie druggist has been so impressed by this fact that he is about to open a hot water fountain in his store. "You would be astonished," he said the other day to a reporter, "to know the number of people who drink hot water during the fall and winter season. They are mostly invalids and used to drink vichy and seltzer, but now hot water seems to be their popular drink. I think a hot water fountain in this town would prove an excellent investment. The hot water these people could get at home is seldom of the proper temperature, and what is worse is usually impure. I intend to clarify the water and make it absolutely pure. The proper temperature to drink it at is about 140 degrees."

CHLORAL HYDRATE.

The real nature of chloral hydrate is not well understood. It carries the blood with force from the extremities to the heart. It does its work remarkably well, so far as securing sleep is concerned. It is not like the opium habit, for no one can ever use chloral for pleasure; nor is it likely to be used for any purpose but to secure sleep. Yet it is a deadly drug, and sure of completely destroying the whole functions of mind and body.

The first apparent tendency is to poison the blood and produce blotches on the skin. It tends also to paralyze the extremities. Tee temperature of the body is lowered by its use, but more particularly of the head and feet. Then follow neuralgic pains, of acute and terrible sort, in the legs, arms and head. The throat is partially paralyzed, making it difficult to enunciate in public when one first rises to speak. The brain is, of course, impaired, as is also the heart for natural circulation. Those who are using chloral should stop at once, and so adjust their lives as to secure rest by natural means. Its use creates terror at bed-time, if one be so situated as not to secure it—a sort of delirious horror. It gets complete mastery. The dose must then be increased, and the final consequences may be sudden death. It is, in fact, a most violent poison, doing its work thoroughly but not speedily.

The moral evil resulting from the use of chloral is proportioned to the intellectual damage. It simply untones the whole system, and puts everything to false issues. The habitual user becomes fretful and suspicious; is uncertain and irresolute, and incapable of any really unselfish view of life. Then follows the misery of knowing that you are not at your best, that you cannot be understood, and are losing all ability to be yourself. One of the very worst of the peculiar effects of the drug is to lead its victims to a semi-conscious condition of action. One of the ablest English poets died within the past few years a victim of this drug, and it is said that two other noted men in England, whose deaths were sudden, were killed by the same means. I am aware that the chloral habit is not by any means peculiar to professional persons; men and women, overtaxed mothers are using it, and I am told that, in minimum doses, it enters into the narcotics given to babes. Infanticide would hardly be a greater crime. It is certain that the increase of deaths by heart disease is largely due from chloral.—Sel.

LIVES OF CELEBRATED MEN.

FRANCIS ALARD.

Francis Alard, the youngest of a numerous family of children, was born in the year 1524. His parents, who were wealthy and of high station, designed him for the clerical profession, and sent him into the convent at Antwerp. Here he gave himself with so much zeal and success to his religious duties as to win the esteem and confidence of his superiors. Though still young, his learning and eloquence led to his appointment as one of the preachers in the cathedral during the season of Lent. He attracted a large crowd to hear him. Among this number was a merchant from Hamburg, who had already embraced the doctrines of Reformation. He was so much impressed by the evident sincerity of this youth and the evangelical tone of his preaching that he was anxious to have him become a preacher of the Gospel. He sought him out and invited him to his lodgings, and then showed him the writings of Luther, and endeavored to lead him from the errors of the papacy in which he was involved to a more perfect knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus Christ. His labors were not in vain. The truth took quick possession of his mind and heart. On his next visit to the city he found this young monk a sincere convert, and desirous of preaching the Gospel instead of the superstitions and errors of the Romish church; but how could he break away from his convent? How could he meet the opposition of his family, all of whom were devoted papists? How could he brave the terrors of the inquisition? These were thoughts that caused him anxiety. The merchant gave him good counsel, and promised to aid him to escape and to furnish him with all the funds he needed to complete his education. The plan was arranged. On the eve of his return home Alard came to his lodgings and was supplied with a complete disguise; he was then accompanied to the vessel that was waiting in the river, and they set sail at once for Hamburg.

Soon his escape became known in the convent and throughout the city. A vessel was dispatched to bring him back, but it was too late, he was beyond the reach of his pursuers.

On their arrival in Hamburg his benefactor took him to his own house and "expounded to him the way of God more perfectly."

After supplying him with whatever he needed, he sent him to the University at Jena to finish his studies.

While Alard was there his benefactor died, and he was left without the means of support. He had now been absent from home two years. He longed to see his friends, and he thought that, perhaps, they would receive him kindly and give him some assistance. He determined to hazard the experiment of returning to them, but he was fully decided, come what would, never to deny his faith.

He made the long journey on foot, and at length, wayworn, destitute, and weary, arrived at the door of the house where his mother lived—his father was now dead. The first person who answered to his call was his sister. He was so changed that she did not recognize him.

"I am your brother Francis," he said.

"What, the heretic!" she cried, and immediately fled from his presence. He then sought his mother, hoping that her maternal love would revive on seeing him after so long an absence, but he had yet to learn the power of religious bigotry in turning the tenderest affection into malignant hatred. She had nothing for him but threatenings and curses. He besought her to hear him, but she would not hear a word unless he would promise to renounce his faith and return at once to his convent. This he could not do. She then threatened to deliver him to the inquisition. But he remained unshaken. She at once informed against him, and he was seized and dragged to the city fortress and lodged in the tower.

The report of his return and arrest, and his imprisonment, flew rapidly through the city. A fanatical crowd surrounded the prison uttering imprecations and vengeance against him. The familiars of the inquisition tried hard, but vainly, to induce him to recant. He persisted in saying, "I know in whom I have believed, and in that belief I will die." Finding all their efforts to induce him to abjure his faith was useless, they condemned him to death. But, in order to avoid a tumult, they decided to take his life by poison in the prison.

He heard his sentence with calmness, and drank the cup without fear or trembling. They locked the door of his cell and went away and left him to die alone. Commending his soul to God he lay down on the damp floor, hoping before the morning dawned to find rest and peace in death. But his time had not yet come.

The poison produced a raging thirst; there was not a drop of water in his cell, but looking through the hole in the wall which served for a window he saw water enough in the dirty ditch that surrounded the castle. It ran close by the foot of the wall. But how could he reach it? Taking the fur cape from his neck and attaching to this the threads which he drew from his garments, he dropped it into the ditch below and drew it up filled with water. Muddy as it was he drank till his thirst was allayed, and then lay down again. Soon a deathly sickness came upon him; but the water, acting with the poison, induced vomiting. This happily relieved him of most of the poison before it had taken fatal effect, but it made him very weak. He spent the night in great suffering.

When they came the next morning to take out his body and bury it, what was their astonishment in finding him still alive! They believed he was in league with the devil, and that he had used some magic arts to get rid of the poison. And now, in order to make sure of his death, they determined to burn him alive in the public square. His mother offered to furnish the faggots, and the same day sent a cartman with several bundles and directed him to cry out as he passed the cell, "Here Francis, is the ration your mother sends you."

Everything was in readiness for the execution on the following day. He had one more night to spend in his dreary cell. He was resolved to spend it in prayer for deliverance from the hands of his persecutors. While at prayer a beam of the rising moon came into the cell by the opening through which he had obtained water on the previous night. Was it possible for him to make his escape through this hole? It was apparently too small, and at too great a height to offer him much encouragement, but it was his only hope, and he determined to try. Stripping off his clothes and tearing them into shreds, he made a long rope. This he fastened to a ring in the cell, the other end he threw outside, and endeavored to crowd himself after it through this narrow opening. This seemed impossible, at first, and had it not been for his slender form, which was now much reduced by his sufferings, he would have failed. But he got through at length, and was slowly descending by his frail rope when it parted and he fell. Fortunately he landed in the soft mud of the ditch, and no bones were broken. Struggling out of this, he made his way to the gate, which was still open, for it was not late. The sentinel was so terrified by the spectacle he presented, that he ran away and left him to go through without opposition. He was so much weakened by his long fasting and sickness, and exhausted by his efforts, that he had only strength enough to drag himself to a piece of woods in the neighborhood. Then concealing himself with bushes and leaves, as well as he could, he fell asleep.

"Now as soon as it was day there was no small stir in the city—what had become of"—their prisoner. They were more sure than ever that he was assisted by—the devil. They went out in all directions, and scoured the country to find him. Meanwhile he lay sleeping soundly and softly in his hiding place, and it was not until evening that the barking of the dogs of his pursuers awakened him.

They came very near to him but did not find him. After dark, when they had given up the search for the day, he ventured out, and directed his steps to the house of a sister who kept a public house in the country, some miles distant. He determined to ask her assistance in his extremity. He hoped she would at least give him a suit of clothes and then he would make his way out of the country. He prayed God to turn her heart toward him, and to bring his efforts to escape to a successful end.

After journeying all night he reached her house in the early morning, but she did not recognize him in his disguise. He almost feared to tell her, but at last, bursting into tears, he said, "I am your brother Francis." "What, the heretic!" she cried, as her sister had done before. She would at once have betrayed him, had not her husband persuaded her to give him some food and clothes and send him on his way. So again his prayer was answered.

From here he made his way across the frontiers into Germany, where he was beyond the reach of his pursuers. But he was without means, alone and friendless, and he knew not which way to go, nor what to do. But the Lord had work for him to do, and after so wonderfully delivering and protecting him, he did not forsake him now. He resolved to try to find out the family of his deceased benefactor in Hamburg, with the hope of receiving some aid from them. He directed his steps toward that city.

The Reformation was now in full progress in Germany. In the duchy of Oldenburg the Gospel had been widely scattered, and a great many souls had been converted. Others were eagerly inquiring after the truth; but they had but few instructors. Gospel preachers were in great demand. Just at this time Francis Alard came to them. The Lord had sent him. He rejoiced in the opportunity of preaching the Gospel for which he had suffered so much. His labors were attended with great success. Many were brought to a knowledge of the truth.

The Prince hearing of his zeal and success as a preacher, sought his acquaintance, and learned from him his wonderful story. He soon raised him to the highest ecclesiastical position and committed to him the oversight of all the churches in the country.

He fulfilled the duties of his high office with fidelity and success. He did much to promote the cause of the Reformation throughout all that region.

And when, at the advanced age of ninety-four years, he was called to leave this life he fell asleep in Jesus, leaving behind him a name bearing the unique and double honor, of one who had suffered martyrdom in his youth, and had yet lived to preach the Gospel for three-quarters of a century.

Such is the story of the martyr of Antwerp, and the Oldenburg reformer, Francis Alard.—Bible Banner.

TEMPERANCE.

PROHIBITION IN MAINE.

Nov. 24.—"Will the Inter Ocean kindly allow me space in its columns for a reply to the following paragraph, which appeared in its issue of the 23d:

Mr. Neal Dow might well employ his surplus energies in fighting rum in his own State of Maine without worrying himself about the Chicago clergy. It seems that 136 more United States liquor licenses were granted in that State last year than the year before. If prohibition really prohibits what good are such licenses to the licentiates?

There are no 'United States liquor licenses' in Maine nor in any other State. The 'special tax' paid to the Internal Revenue Department is in no sense a license, nor does it in any way protect the violation of the Maine law from its penalties. There are low, secret rum-shops in most of the larger cities and towns of Maine, except in Bangor, the second city of the State, where the law is not enforced, and where the grog-shops are numerous and open. This arises from the low tone of morals and religion in that city, where the churches and the political bosses are said to be in accord, that the grog-shops may run freely without fear of the law, if their keepers and their customers will vote the right ticket. I am glad to be able to say, that for all that, the wrong ticket won there at the last election.

THESE SECRET RUM-SHOPS,

which pay the special tax, generally have stocks of liquor on hand amounting to no more than a pint or two, a quart or two, sometimes to a gallon or two, often to no more than a flat half-pint bottle carefully hidden away from the search of the officers, who hunt for them as thoroughly as they would for a stolen watch or a stolen diamond.

In more than three-fourths of our territory—the smaller towns and villages and rural districts—the liquor traffic has been nearly swept away. The Daily Press, of Portland, recently said: 'In a large part of our State an entire generation has grown up practically unacquainted with the liquor traffic and its effects. There is not in the State a gallon of liquor distilled nor a gallon of beer brewed. Every distillery and brewery has been suppressed. The last distillery has been converted into a machine shop, and the last brewery into a corn-packing establishment.

These grog-shops linger in our larger towns and cities for want of some amendments to our law, which we shall have by and by, while the penalties and processes of the law as it now stands are sufficient to suppress the traffic in the farming districts of the State and in the small towns and villages. Unprejudiced persons will readily admit that the people of Maine know what the results of the law have really been. I send you the resolves adopted by the Republican State Conventions for several years.

THE RESOLUTIONS.

1878—Temperance among the people may be greatly promoted by wise prohibitory legislation, as well as by all those moral agencies which have secured us beneficent results; and it is a source of congratulation that the principle of prohibition which has always been upheld by Republicans is now concurred in by so large a majority of the people that it is no longer a party question, the Democrats having for several years declined to contest and dispute it.

1879—We recognize temperance as a cause which has conferred the greatest benefit on the State, and we sustain the principle of prohibition, which in its operation has so largely suppressed liquor selling and added incalculably to the sum of virtue and prosperity among the people.

1880—Experience has demonstrated the wisdom of the policy of prohibition as an auxiliary of temperance, and as contributing to the material wealth, happiness, and prosperity of the State; and we refer with confidence and pride to our undeviating support of the same as one of the cardinal principles of the Republican party of Maine.

In 1881 there was no election and no convention, but in 1882 there was held the largest convention ever assembled in the State, and the resolve adopted by it is as follows:

1882—We refer with confidence and pride to the general record of the Republican party in support of the policy of prohibiting the traffic in intoxicating liquors, the wisdom and efficiency of which legislation in promoting the moral and material interests of Maine have been demonstrated through the practical annihilation of that traffic in a large portion of the State, and we favor such legislation and such enforcement of law as will secure to every portion of our territory freedom from that traffic. We further recommend the submission to the people of a constitutional prohibitory amendment."

I submit whether this ought not to be received as conclusive of the whole matter, especially as in no way whatever has any part of these resolves been controverted or excepted to by anybody; they have been universally accepted as true. NEAL DOW."

We enter our most earnest and solemn protest against the appointment of drinking men to places of trust where human life may be jeopardized by their imprudence. Men in the habit of drinking intoxicating liquors notoriously drink most when they ought to be most sober. Drinking men should not be in command of vessels, nor conductors nor engineers, nor brakemen on railroads. They ought not to be military officers, nor civil officers, nor judges, nor jurymen. They are just fit for two things, to-wit: saloon-keepers and bummers at bars.—C. C. Advocate.

The Cincinnati saloon-keepers are terrible sticklers for "personal liberty," but they want it all on their side. It has been the custom of certain poor women to keep coffee stands at the public markets. The saloon-keepers have organized to break up this business, since it interferes with the sale of beer, and they have induced the Board of Health, which has charge of the markets, to prohibit the sale of coffee at the public markets.

THE CHURCHES.

—At Mr. Moody's meetings in London the Bible readings have been attended by about 3,000 persons daily and the preaching by 5,000. Over-flow meetings have often been necessary. The work is highly commended by the London press.

—The Sabbath-school of the Chicago Avenue church, this city, last week re-elected D. L. Moody and J. M. Hitchcock superintendents. The committee of the church also formally invited Pres. C. A. Blanchard to become pastor of the church.

—The General Conference of Swedish Baptists was held recently in Chicago. It was reported that there was much activity during the year in church building, that there were fruitful revivals, and that it had been necessary to form two new district conferences, one in the Eastern States and one in Iowa.

—An effort is being made in the South Carolina Methodist Conference to raise their missionary collections by regular contributions of one cent from each member per week. When this is impossible eggs are received in lieu of the coin, and it is not unusual to collect a hat full of eggs at a service.

—On Sabbath afternoon and evening an important meeting was held in Farwell Hall to arouse an interest in medical missions. A large number of medical students were present and were addressed by Rev. Dr. Scudder, formerly missionary in India, the veteran Syrian missionary, Rev. H. H. Jessup, and Rev. Mr. Cameron, from China.

—Dr. Garabed Kevorkian, an Armenian who was educated in Dr. Van Lennep's seminary at Tokat, Asia Minor, before the institution was destroyed by the Roman Catholics, and who accompanied the Dr. to this country, is about to return to Tokat to establish himself as a missionary physician. Bro. Kevorkian came to Chicago to pursue medical studies several years ago, by the advice of Bro. A. D. Zaraphonithes, who was then in this country, and who rendered him every possible service. He also received much kind assistance from the professors and students of the Rush Medical College, for which, as a stranger and without means, he was duly grateful. The churches, however, did not generally show him the same kindness, being unduly influenced by the missionaries of the American Board, whose unfriendliness to Armenian students in this country at that time was a matter the churches must ever regret. The change of policy by the Board toward the Armenian churhes by the action of that body at its last meeting is, we hope, a token of friendliness also to young men who come among us to better prepare for missionary labors among their own people.

—It is understood that Rev. G. H. Filian who was two years ago ordained as a missionary in Wheaton, is about to return to Caesarea (in Cappadocia of Acts). He has been preaching for a time in Constantinople, where he has been married. The society for the assistance of native missions of which Mrs. L. H. Plumb of Streator, Ill., is treasurer, was established to aid this brother in particular.

—The Wesleyan evangelist, Rev. C. F. Hawley, of Wheaton, is now laboring with good results for the kingdom of Christ in Seneca Falls, N. Y.

—The Rev. C. A. Blanchard, President of Wheaton College, who has attracted so much attention lately as an expounder of the Sabbath-school lesson at Farwell Hall on Saturdays, has received a call to the pastorate of the Chicago Avenue church, the pulpit of which he has filled for several weeks. If he can harmonize the new position with his duties at Wheaton, it is said to be quite likely that he will accept the call.—Inter Ocean.

—The Presbyterian State Synodical Missions of Michigan, Wisconsin, Illinois, Iowa and Kansas met at the Matteson House in this city last week to arrange for a series of conventions of the denomination, to consider missions.

—The Sunday-school superintendents and others connected with the Congregational Sunday-schools of the city held a meeting at the Union Park church Thursday evening to take steps toward the building of another missionary Gospel ship, the Morning Star, to be used among the Micronesian Islands. The Congregational churches have two of these Gospel steamships already in the missionary field, and they are so effective that others are to be built.

—Finland has about 2,000,000 people. They are Lutherans, having 219 pastors, 487 churches, and 514 chapels. Their university at Helsingfors ranks high with 1,300 students and 160 theologues. Instruction is imparted in the Swedish and the Finnish languages.

—Rev. Geo. T. Crissman, Presbyterian missionary of Nebraska, in his annual report, says that he has assisted in organizing 22 churches; 5 churches have become self-supporting, with a prospect of a greater number next year. He thus indicates the growth of the church in Nebraska: "In 1880 there were reported 75 ministers, 128 churches and 4,340 members. There are reported this year 124 ministers, 191 churches and 6,137 members. There have been added this year 24 ministers, 22 churches and 1,393 members and 16 new church buildings, with repairs and enlargements on several others."

—A precious work of grace has been going on at Watseka, Ill. Ten entire families were brought to Christ. Almost the entire neighborhood, made up chiefly of prosperous farmers, has been converted. They have been organized into a Presbyterian church, consisting of 46 members, who a month ago were living without God, but are now rejoicing in Christ.

—Rev. Henry D. Wood, colored, a native of Trenton, N. J., and a graduate of Lincoln University, has been laboring for more than two years in North Carolina, with his center at Carthage. He has organized four churches, each having a Sabbath school. Of his work and the character of his people, he says: "The membership of the churches, numbering about 150, are of the best of the people, though poorest of the poor. That much of their poverty or destitute condition is due to their thoughtlessness and improvidence is too true; but it is also true their improvidence is, for the most part due to their early training."

MAJOR WHITTLE IN IRELAND.

A dispatch from Wexford, Ireland, Dec. 3d, where Major Whittle, of this city, is engaged in Gospel labors, tells a fearful story thus: "A mob here last evening attacked the theater in which an evangelical service was being held, and attempted to burn the building. The mob took full possession of the town, broke the windows of a Protestant church and those of nearly all the houses in the place occupied by Protestants. The dresses of ladies who attended service at the church and theater were torn off, and the gentlemen accompanying them were stoned and several of them injured severely. The mob paraded the streets for several hours, singing, 'God save Ireland!'

"The service at the theater last night was being conducted by Major Whittle of Chicago. The mob made a bonfire of all the Bibles and hymn-books that could be found. One Protestant gentleman was attacked and carried down to the harbor, the intention of his assailants being to drown him, but some respectable Catholics interfered and saved him. Another Protestant was chased through the streets, and finally sought refuge at the police barracks, where he was told that the police were unable to protect him. He was seriously wounded. The police were confined to the barracks throughout the riot. The victims intend to seek compensation."

The friends of Major Whittle in Chicago doubted if these reports were true, and later dispatches have modified them, yet the fact of some disturbance and the necessity of police protection is established, little to the credit of the Catholic priesthood.

THE McALL MISSION IN FRANCE.

Robert McAll, a Scotchman, now more than sixty years of age, went to Paris, from (as Friends would say) "religious concern," soon after the close of the German war, now about twelve years since, and without a knowledge of the language, without pecuniary support, or especial friends but with a burning zeal for the salvation of souls and heart filled with love to God and love to his fellow men, commenced his labors. He has persevered in them until the present time and the results are very remarkable. The great devotion of Robert McAll and his excellent wife soon attracted attention, and means have been freely supplied to sustain their work. They have rented ordinary business rooms on the lower floor, opening into the street, in the most crowded portion of the city, and in the immediate suburbs, until they now occupy sixty six of such stations with sittings for 11,275 persons. They have also extended their work to other towns and cities in France, until the total number of their stations is eighty, having sittings for 13,200. A large number of native French Evangelists have been raised up, many of whom have been sent to England for some training in their methods of work. Many of these are persons of great ability and eloquence, and full of the Holy Ghost. We were greatly interested in attending a meeting of the workers for prayer and consultation held weekly, and to witness their zeal and devotion, as well as to extend to them cordial Christian greetings and the word of encouragement. There were probably fifty present, and they were an intelligent, earnest, highly spiritual body of men and women. One of the ablest afterwards accompanied us for several days in our visits to the asylums in the vicinity of Paris, and we have rarely met with an illustration more striking of a life of faith and service of God, than we found in our dear friend E. Signol. Their course of proceedings is to seat the room rented with plain seats—put in a small platform for the speakers, and a small cabinet organ. They use a French translation of the Moody and Sankey hymns, and nearly every evening several devoted laborers go to each station and commence singing hymns, while others go out in the streets and invite in every passer-by. In this way they soon have a room filled with a motley crowd—some remain but a few moments, but their place is soon filled by others. Many become interested and remain the whole hour, during which the services are continued. When the room is sufficiently filled, Bible readings, prayer and short gospel addresses, interspersed with hymns, follow in rapid succession, as the crowd is mercurial and restless they keep something constantly before them. We listened with deepest interest to the simple story of the cross, told earnestly and beautifully in a foreign language, and never saw more attentive and appreciative audiences. It was my privilege to address several of the meetings in English, which was interpreted by one of the evangelists, and it was touching to see how the simple truths of the Gospel, even when communicated through an interpreter, were listened to with deepest attention and interest.

The preaching of the Evangelists is thoroughly evangelical, and has the clear ring of the full Gospel. What has been the result? During the year 1882, there were held 10,591 religious meetings with an attendance of 717,223 persons. In addition "Sunday-sbhools, children's services, and young women's classes," 3,294, attended by 129,414 persons—12,551 domiciliary visits were paid, and 227,252 Bibles, Testaments, portiere, books, tracts, and illustrated papers were circulated. My wife attended one of the young women's classes made up of shop girls, and taught by a countess and found it deeply interesting. No effort is made to establish a church—some of the converts join the Protestant churches, others continue to attend the services of the Mission. We were very sorry to learn that many of the old Protestant churches are rationalistic, but others are thoroughly evangelical. We were greatly interested in an interview with Theodore Moral, so well known by his noble utterances for higher Christianity. He has a large congregation and is doing a great work, amongst a much higher class than those reached by the McAll Mission. The effect of the acceptance of Christ as a Saviour, is the same upon the French that it is upon the English, and many striking illustrations of its transforming power are to be found.— C. F. Coffin in the Christian Worker.

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CONGRESS.

—A bill introduced by Senator Cullom to reorganize the legislative power of the Territory of Utah provides that the legislative power be vested in the Governor and Legislative Council, composed of nine members, to be appointed by the President.

—Senator Plumb introduced a bill in the Senate providing that every non-commissioned officer, private or other person discharged from the army during the war of the rebellion within two years from the date of enlistment on account of disability incurred in the line of military duty, shall receive a warrant for 160 acres of land.

—Mr. Sherman presented in the Senate to-day a petition from J. W. Niles, colored, of Arkansas, setting forth alleged unlawful combinations to prevent him and his colored associates from exercising the right to make entries of public lands, charging cruel treatment on the part of white citizens of Arkansas, and asking relief.

GENERAL.

—Paris journals say England is making strenuous efforts to effect a peaceful settlement between China and France, and that Marquis Tseng has asked that military preparations be stayed. The basis of a treaty has been suggested by England, and China's adhesion to this plan of settlement may cause trouble for the government on the Chambers.

—Soft snow falling for twelve hours at Denver, Col., Wednesday, adhered to the wires, causing them to assume the dimensions of cables. A wind-storm sprung up Thursday morning, when hundreds of poles gave way under their great weight, blocking a dozen squares and severing outside communication. The storm also impeded railway business, and the damage is heavy.

—In a dispute about a ditch, near Anderson, Ind., Wednesday evening last, Coleman Hawkins dangerously shot John J. Anderson, and upon returning home Hawkins killed himself. Both were wealthy farmers.

—An earthquake shock of forty seconds' duration, accompanied by a loud noise, occurred Wednesday at Rounden Springs, Ark., wrecking household utensils and throwing rocks on the track of the Springfield and Memphis Road.

—The new cantalever bridge over the Niagara River, connecting the Michigan Central and New York Central Railroads, was crossed Thursday by a locomotive.

—The strike of Yorkshire colliery boys has enforced idleness upon 14,000 men.

—The German Crown Prince left Madrid Friday incognito for Seville. From Genoa he goes to visit the Pope.

—British imports comparatively increased £1,600,000 during November, and the exports fell off £238,000.

—The Prince of Wales, Thursday, was re-elected Grand Master of the English Grand Lodge of Freemasons.

—Many ship-builders on the Clyde have notified their workmen that wages will be reduced at the beginning of the year.

—Admiral Peng Yu Lin has informed foreigners at Canton that war with France is imminent, and warns neutral nations to observe treaties and rules of international law. Peng Yu Lin is preparing for the defense of Canton.

—A great fire ruined the legislative chambers in Brussels Thursday. Many firemen were injured, and it is reported several grenadiers were killed by falling walls. The fire destroyed the original constitutional charter and most of the documents relating to the foundation of Belgian independence. The damage is 12,000,000 francs.

—Patents have been refused in Washington on clock dials having twenty-four hours on the face, it being known that in 1547 a watch was made on the face of which the hours from 1 to 24 appeared on two concentric circles.

—Tony Laymiller, teaching school near Canton, Ohio, suspended Mary Oglethorpe, aged 11, for six and one-half hours by the wrists, her toes barely touching the floor, seriously injuring the child. He has been held for trial.

—In attempting to aid a vessel in distress, Captain Brown and seven men of the Dominion steamer Newfield perished off Halifax.

—A terrible storm prevailed on the Newfoundland coast Dec. 2. The waves were the highest ever known, and it is feared many wrecks occurred.

—A silver mine of great richness has been discovered near Boyd, Wis., by William Nowell. The Eau Claire Silver Company is being organized to work the lead.

—A frame tenement at New York, occupied by forty-seven families, burned Monday evening last week. Three children perished in the flames and many persons had hairbreadth escapes.

—Chicago distillers indorse the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury for the removal of tax from alcohol for manufacturing purposes, and say that it will enable America to compete with England in many manufactures which it cannot now.

—Two tanks in Glick Brothers' sausage casing factory, Chicago, exploded, badly injuring eight men, two of them probably fatally, and involving almost a total loss of the building and contents. Cause, confined gases which had no vent.

—Governor Newell, of Oregon, has signed the woman-suffrage act, and now women can vote in one State (Oregon) and two Territories (Wyoming and Utah) of the Union.

—Reports from eighty counties in Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, Arkansas and Missouri, state the winter-wheat plant is in a vigorous condition seldom before equaled, and that the acreage has been increased.

—Developments in the Bank of Montreal affairs caused a semi-panic on the Montreal stock market Wednesday. Craig, president of the bank, has vanished after squandering in speculation and by other means about $1,000,000 of the funds.

"The Christian Statesman deserves a VERY LARGE CIRCULATION. It fills a place supplied by no other."—HON. JUDGE STRONG.

The Need of the Nation

Can only be supplied by an acknowledgement of Christ's authority and an acceptance of His Divine Law as the

BASIS OF NATIONAL LIFE.

To secure this, and maintain all existing Christian features of the American government, is the object of the National Reform Association, an organization undenominational in character, with a membership of many thousands, including leading ministers, educators, authors and jurists all over our nation.

THE CHRISTIAN STATESMAN,

A large, elegantly printed sixteen-page journal, advocates the principles of this Association, and discusses all public questions in the light of the Christian religion. The Maintenance of our Sabbath Laws, and of the Christian Law of Marriage and Divorce, the use of the Bible in the Public Schools, the Prohibition of the Liquor Traffic, the Mormon Question, the Rights of the Indian and the Chinaman, receive constant attention in its columns. It gives thorough expositions of the International Bible Lessons, and their bearing on national questions is not overlooked. Price, $2.00 per year. ☞Sample copies free. Address,

THE CHRISTIAN STATESMAN

"In its course has been manly and consistent, its editorials able, and its success, under the conditions of apathy and prejudice which surrounds the whole subject, marvelous."—THE REV. S. F. SCOVEL, PRESIDENT OF WOOSTER UNIVERSITY.

THE PUREST IS THE BEST.

In the selection of SUNDAY-SCHOOL PAPERS, the most important point to be considered is the moral tone of the subject matter. If this is of a questionable character, the papers should be shunned, no matter how large, how attractive, or how low the price. Such papers are

COSTLY AT ANY PRICE.

The country is being flooded with S. S. literature that is largely composed of what may be properly termed "RELIGIOUS FICTION," the tendency of which is to create a distaste for sound reading and foster an appetite for fiction of a more deleterious character.

The engravings of these papers are equally objectionable. In many cases a lady or girl dressed in the height of fashion is made the HEROINE OF A STORY, thus putting the highest sanction to extravagance and pride. With such instructors in our Sunday-schools we cannot expect the children to grow up with a love for sound literature and with correct ideas of Christian propriety. With a view of supplying S. S. papers, of a pure and elevating character, the publishers are issuing

FOUR MONTHLY PAPERS.

They are FREE FROM FICTION, and the cuts are chosen with great care. While they are thus carefully edited, they are not lacking in attractiveness. They are well printed on beautiful tinted paper. The children are delighted with them. The very low price at which this line of S. S. papers is issued, places them within the reach of even schools of limited means

DANIEL F. BEATTY, Washington, New Jersey.

IN BRIEF.

—The Cleveland Leader says there are at present 120 papers in the United States of which the publishers, editors, and chief contributors are negroes. There is no fear of the intellectual progress of a race that conducts and supports so many newspapers. The Jews were kept at an outside all over Europe, but they betook themselves to various kinds of industry, trading and the learned professions, and gradually by application and sobriety reached the top of every walk of life that they tried. In the same way, if they adopt it, the colored people will rise to respectability, and many of them to eminence.

The London St. James Gazette, in a recent issue, says: "It seems that America, after all, is unable to make good her claim to the possession of the tallest and largest trees in the world. Every one has read of the marvels of Yosemite Valley and of Yellowstone Park, the huge national sporting ground of the United States. But what are the giants of California in comparison with a tree which has lately been discovered in Tasmania there are eucalypti measuring 200 feet from the ground to the first branch, and more than 350 feet in total height; and there is, or lately was, on Mount Washington, near Hobart Town, a tree of this species the trunk of which was eighty-six feet in circumference. But a still more gigantic monarch of the woods has been discovered in Victoria. It is a well-proportioned specimen of the Eucalyptus amygdalina, and its top is nearer to the sky than the cross of St. Paul's Cathedral, for it is no less than 430 feet above the ground."

The great through railroad lines in their vigorous efforts to cover as much Western territory as possible, have all of them unquestionably built "ahead of time," which fact accounts to some extent for the present depreciation in railroad securities. And yet this constant pushing to cover new territory is well nigh unavoidable on the part of many railroads. If one does not possess the land some rival will, and thus secure control of the region. This rivalry leads to some amusing circumstances. Not long since two of the trunk lines opened negotiations for a local railroad running between their routes. Neither wanted the third, but neither wanted the other to acquire possession of it. One day the president and other officers of one of the roads chartered a special car and proceeded over the local line to make examination with a view to purchasing. No sooner had the officers of the other line learned of this fact than they immediately, on that very forenoon, closed with the offer which had been made them; acquired possession of the new line, and in the middle of the afternoon ordered back home the special car containing the president and other reconnoitering officers of the rival road.

The Gallas, in South America, were much amused when Mr. Wakefield, a missionary, entered their country. "How many toes have you?" they asked. "Just as many as you have," he answered. "Will you pull that off and let us see?" they said, pointing at his boot, and shaking their heads. When he had done so they all laughed, for even now they could not, for his stocking, see his toes. At last one exclaimed, "What a strange man this is to put his foot in a bag! We never heard of a man putting his foot in a bag before!"

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE.

Specific Virtues in Dyspepsia.

Dr. A. JENKINS, Great Falls, N. H., says: "I can testify to its seemingly almost specific virtues in cases of dyspepsia, nervousness and morbid vigilance or wakefulness."

"What be them?" said a countryman, stopping in front of a fruit store in a neighboring city, the other day, and pointing to a bunch of bananas. Having learned, he bought a plump red skin, and, without stopping to peel it, bit off the end. The banana was finished in the same primeval style, and then the granger remarked: "The rhine ain't much, but the peth is putty fair."

Smith's Tonic Syrup

FEVER and AGUE

Or CHILLS and FEVER.

AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamp on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN J. SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, of Louisville, Ky. Examine well the label on each bottle. If my private stamp is not on each bottle do not purchase, or you will be deceived.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

NIGHTS IN A BAR-ROOM

T. S. Arthur's great temperance book, complete and illustrated. By mail, 5c each; 50c per doz. By express, $3.50 per 100.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC THE GREAT SOURCE OF CRIME.

Leaves from the diary of an old lawyer.—By Hon. A. B. Richmond, author of "Court and Prison," etc. A book of intense interest, rivaling the famous "Diary of a Physician," and, in its truthful, terrible pictures of the power and crime of intemperance, excelling the well-known "Ten Nights in a Bar-room." The temperance issue of the present time is, Shall prohibition be partial or entire? Shall the branches of the death-bearing tree be pruned and trimmed, or shall the tree itself be cut down and its stump be torn up by the roots? The answer of "Leaves from the Diary" is, "Cut down the tree, tear up the roots, leave not a shoot or shred behind." It is certainly a very strong and eloquent volume. Complete edition on fine, heavy paper, with colored lithograph of Sewall's stomach plates. By mail, 30c each, $3 per doz. By express, $20 per 100. Abridged edition, by mail, 15c; $1.25 per doz. By express, $9 per 100.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC AND THE SOBER CITIZEN.

An able and telling work, by Rev. J. H. Sherman, which brings out the effects of the liquor traffic in a new light. The following are some of the commendations of the first edition.

"The author drives the nails of conviction through and clinches them."—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

"Speakers and workers in the temperance field will find valuable aid in this pamphlet. It is crowded with convincing facts."—Zion's Herald

"One of the ablest reviews of the drink curse ever issued from the press."—The Morning and Day of Reform.

"The arguments are put in telling form."—Judge Pittman.

New revised and enlarged edition. By mail, 10c each, $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

DRINKS FROM DRUGS.

A startling exposure of the liquor traffic, by Eli Johnson. A book that cannot fail to arouse the American people to the gigantic swindle now being perpetrated. The writer was offered $10,000 by a leading brewer to keep still. Liquor not only doctored, but made entirely from drugs. Extracts from a whole library of secret hooks, giving receipts for making and doctoring; advertisements of essences, fac-similes of labels, engravings, etc., etc. Claret, port, sherry, champagne, whisky, brandy, gin, rum, etc., all out of one barrel, and made at less than 25 cents a quart. Wine that never saw grape juice; cider that never saw apples; beer factories in place of breweries, fine cream ale without barley or brewing; whisky from arsenic; millions of gallons of liquor that pays no revenue tax. The farmer's corn and barley "all in your eye." A wholesale liquor store in a ten-foot square cellar; more French wine sold in New York City than is produced in the whole of France. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By Express, $6 per 100.

W. C. T. U. ORGANIZATION AND WORK.

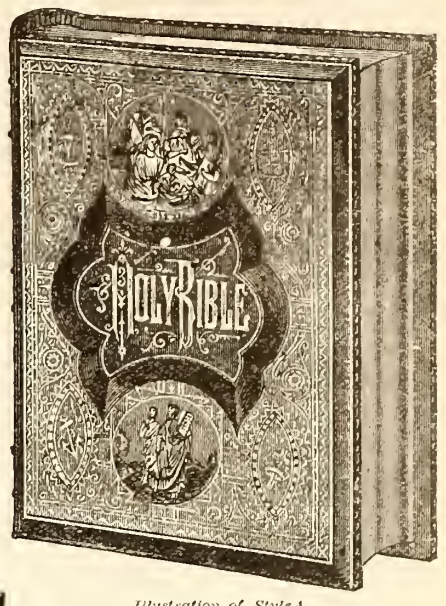
A book of general information on how to organize and run successfully a Woman's Christian Temperance Union. This book should be widely distributed among W. C. T. U. presidents, pastor's wives and other representative women. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

BAND OF HOPE SONG BOOK.

Band of Hope Songs.—Fifty-seven choice pieces for juvenile temperance gatherings, Bands of Hope, etc. Old, familiar tunes, also choice new words and music. Words far in advance of anything else issued. By mail, 8c each; 75c per doz. By express, $4 per 100.

DANIEL'S BAND.

A temperance concert exercise, with parts suitable for all ages; entirely new. Songs, recitations, dialogues, etc., of a thoroughly aggressive character; sure to carry weight with the rendering of it. By mail, 5c each; 50c per dozen, By express, $2 per 100.



TEMPERANCE ANTHEM BOOK.

Temperance Anthems.—A new idea; nothing else of the kind in existence. Will insure good music by the choir at temperance meetings. Forty-eight pages of choice anthems by ablest writers. By mail, 15c each; $1.50 per doz. By express, $10 per 100.

PUSH AGAIN!!

THE TWO MONTHS-FOR-25-CENTS OFFER.

The readers of the CYNOSURE have it in their power to easily make up a CYNOSURE list to TWENTY-FIVE THOUSAND before January 1st: See "How" on another page.

A NEW AND VALUABLE ARRANGEMENT

provided for the Cynosure readers during the year 1884, is a special exposition of the Bible lesson for Sabbath schools, by

THE AUTHOR OF "HOLDEN WITH CORDS."

This talented writer has consented to contribute during the year a weekly application of the international lessons, and bring the Scripture truth to bear upon our reform principles. Parents and Sabbath school teachers will appreciate this valuable assistance in their work of instruction. If the tide of lodgery is stopped the streams that feed it must be turned into other channels. This is a grand work to be done in home and Sabbath-school instruction—teach the children to be Christ-like, open-hearted, undeceptive, and they will never swear to vain secrets in the lodge. The Cynosure lesson exposition with God's blessing will be an invaluable assistance in thousands of homes during the coming year. Let every reader by all means in their power extend its influence and circulation.

DON'T forget to read our clubbing list carefully, page 7; and the offer of the CYNOSURE with the Anti-Infidel Library for $2.50; or with the American Agriculturist, Dictionary and engraving for $3.20. See last page.

Don't let the favorable season pass without making an effort to get up a club for your paper. Grit and grace will win if you go to work in earnest. Try it and you will be surprised and gratified by results.

HELP WANTED.

We want you to help us obtain the Masonic standing of the ministers in your place, or of others you may know, so that we can make out a list for reference, and send documents to such as seem to be approachable on the subject. A good way to introduce the subject is to ask them to subscribe for the Christian Cynosure.

On the opening day of Congress there were 227 bills presented in the Senate, and hundreds have been brought forward since, and the House has been no less prolific. It is of course impossible that a quarter of these bills be considered. They are sent to committees as to a Venetian dungeon. This volume of bills increases year by year; many of them are of real importance, but their value is dangerously concealed by the pile of other stuff which is urged into notice and prevents intelligent discussion and amendment of urgent measures. It is more than a suspicion that this surplus of statesmanship is only to keep up the appearance of doing something before expectant constituents in the country districts.

O'Donnell was hanged Monday morning at 8 o'clock. His sympathizers in this country have been unwisely active in his behalf. A large delegation from Congress headed by S. S. Cox of New York called the other day on President Arthur requesting him to interfere officially to prevent the execution of a so-called American citizen, condemned after an unfair trial. Here in Chicago our shameless mayor presided over meetings where fiery resolves of the same sort were made, and demands telegraphed to Washington; the city Council even thought it a part of their duty to take similar action. The Congressional delegation made their request, confessing that it was an unreasonable one and unblushingly admitting that it was made to satisfy their Irish constituents. It seems, however, that Secretary Felinghuysen, on the possibility of O'Donnell's citizenship, had addressed a note of inquiry to England and had received a courteous reply, that a careful examination failed to show any reason for staying the execution.

It is said that $47,000 were raised in this country for O'Donnell's defense, and Gen. Roger A. Pryor was sent over to assist, but found that his services would do more harm than good since the appearance of an American lawyer paid by an American subscription among the counsel would prejudice the case. No doubt the subscribers were disappointed that Prior was not permitted to use the American tactics of court obstruction and draw out the trial for weeks as in Gitteau's case. There has been one puzzling question in this case. If O'Donnell killed Carey willfully, knowing him to be Carey, he was certainly guilty of murder and anyone can see that to apply the law would condemn him. If, however, he did not know Carey or willfully shoot him, it is impossible to imagine why the Irish people should take such an interest in his case. The English police have done their utmost to get proof that O'Donnell was an "Invincible." They got neither confession from him nor evidence from anyone else; but on Thursday in an interview with his brother, O'Donnell admitted himself a member of the dreaded band of secret assassins. The fact explains why so many Irishmen were engaged for his defense. If he were not a member of the secret order nor guilty of willful murder no one need be told that the sentimental interest in the man would never have been manifested. This is true and it is pitiful. It clouds whatever of justice there may be in Ireland's complaint, and the sympathies of the world will be largely shut up from her cry, so long as her cause is represented by the advocates of secret assassination.

Affairs in Tonquin have come to a sort of crisis. The king of Anam has been assassinated, and that China and France are both inclined to make as much as possible by the event. The French government strives to make the impression that the deed was of Chinese instigation, for the purpose of removing all local approval of the French occupation; but other reports say the Anamese king had repented of his bargain with France, and to prevent his making a fresh alliance with China French interests secured his death. The French troops in some of their engagements have shown such inhumanity as modern wars have not known. A French correspondent writing to a Paris paper from Tonquin tells calmly of revolting cruelty. Bamboo villages were fired and the miserable natives were massacred as they ran half burnt. What a picture is this horrid war:

"The great butchery then commenced. Two volleys (feux de salve) we fired, and it was quite a treat (cetait un plaisir) to see these fan-like streams of bullets, so easily manageable, sweeping down upon the fugitives, twice in one minute, at the word of command, in a sure and methodical manner. It was like the jet from a huge watering-pot, which mowed them down by dozens in a cloud of dust and gravel. We could see some of them, who seemed to be driven quite mad, and who, picking themselves up, ran about limping, now one way and now another, like wounded animals, gathering up their robes in a comical manner. Their long hair having got unfastened, streamed down, and made them look like women. Others tried to escape by swimming the lagoon to try and reach the junks; these were killed in the water. Some were very good divers, and remained a long time under water; but our men continued to kill them all the same, when they came up to breathe like seals.

To a heart that is full of joy, all it sees is joyful; but to a sad heart all is sad. Change of heart is the greatest change.

THE POWER OF A HOLY LIFE.

BY ELDER A. SIMS.

The most sublime, comprehensive, and yet concise sermon ever preached on earth, was that from the text Matthew 5: 16. It is not only an epitome of practical religious truths, but a model of plainness, grandeur and power. For instruction "in righteousness," no productions of human teachers ever did, or can equal, much less excel it. It stands unrivaled for its fulness of meaning, its deep spirituality, and heart-searching words. But chiefly is this sermon noted for its high authority. It contains the verbal expressions of the Saviour's mind; and being directly uttered by Christ for the divine instruction of mankind—but more particularly for Christians—we should give them our utmost reverence and serious attention. In the preceding verses, our Lord has given us a brief, but true description of real Christians. He has there shown what important position they fill among men. In emphatic language he says, "Ye are the light of the world." Matt. 5: 14. And then, after having referred to the conspicuous places in which men generally place lights, he forcibly adds, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father, which is in heaven." We have

1. A duty prescribed: "Let your light so shine before men." It is evident, that the light here referred to, means holiness of life; for in the same verse it is termed "good works." As such it is rightly designated. For as the deeds of ungodly men are characterized as the 'works of darkness," because they proceed from a principle of evil, so, the actions of Christians are termed "light," because they proceed from a principle of holiness, which is light itself. Every soul saved by Christ, receives divine light from him. The moral darkness of ignorance, sin and misery is chased from his mind; and the glorious light of knowledge, holiness and happiness is implanted in its stead. So that being illuminated with these heavenly sunbeams, which are only borrowed rays from the Sun of righteousness, such a one may be said to have become, "light in the Lord." And, having this light, it is his imperative duty to let it shine—to let the grace, which God has given him, be manifest in the whole of his outward deportment; and by precept and example, to show, in things both great and small, the right—the Christian way of living. The Christian's conduct should be a continual exemplification of the manner in which men should love and serve their God—how they should devote their time, talents and substance to his service. If God has given to a man wisdom and discretion in divine things, he must use them not only privately, but publicly. If he has severed his connection with the prince of darkness, and espoused the cause of Christ, he must, when in the company of the wicked, so act and speak, that they will see he is not of them, nor of their spirit, but of Christ. That is the place where religion has to shine; not so much in secret, but "before men,"—before friends and enemies, scoffers and persecutors, before empty professors and self-righteous Pharisees. No matter where the place, or what the circumstances may be, we must, at the risk of all displeasure, sneers, scoffs, reproaches and losses, let our piety be seen,—seen in bright bold colors,—seen as plainly as a city on a hill,—seen so that we shall be "known and read of all men," as being burning and shining lights.

It is a lamentable fact, that this is just the point where the greater part of professing Christians seriously fail. When brought into contact with worldlings, what light they may have, they are very slow to manifest; or, if they show it at all, it only glimmers like a rush-light; it does not shine clearly and brightly. And no wonder, for instead of exhibiting their Christianity to the full view of the world,—instead of bringing it right to the front, where every one may see it, they keep it in the background, and nearly conceal it; or else they place it in some other obscure position, where it is difficult for men to discern it. But Christ has here taught us, that the Christian's life, so far from giving such a dull light as this, must be so resplendent with holiness,—so radiant with grace divine, that it will be impossible for men not to see his good works, and behold the beauty of the same. Christ requires each one of his followers to be as a flame of fire in his day and generation,—a living witness of the truthfulness of his Gospel, and of the efficacy of his blood to cleanse men from all sin, and make them like God.

2. There is a two-fold purpose to this duty.

First, "That men may see your good works." It is evident from these words, God has intended that Christianity should not be a solitary, but a social religiou. The very end for which he places Christians in the world, and casts the lot of some of them in notoriously wicked places, is that they should be lights to society around them, and be the means of guiding men from the thick mists of sin, into the way of light and life. God's people sometimes wish that they were in some position, where they would not be surrounded with so many ungodly characters, and see the prevalence of so much vice and crime; but they forget that where sin most abounds is the most needy place for religion in all its beauty, loveliness and purity to be lived. And who are to give these examples but men and women whose hearts and lives have been changed? If we wish, in some measure, to check wicked men in their course of sin and folly; by what more powerful human means can we effect it, than by living righteously before them? If Christians entirely desert the world, on account of the wickedness they see, how then can they be called "the light of the world?" and, "the salt of the earth?" In the ever memorable prayer Christ offered up on behalf of his disciples ere leaving this world, he did not pray that they might be taken out of the world; but that they might be preserved from its evil. He designed that they should remain in it, to bless it, and to make it better. that the grace they received from him might through them be communicated to others; that their holy tempers, words, and works should have a salutary influence upon mankind and lead them to do likewise. One of the methods God has been pleased to make the most effective and successful in turning men from sin to holiness, has been the godly, blameless example of his own children. Such example has not only powerfully convinced men when precept has failed, but it has stopped the mouths of infidels, and proved to them beyond all doubt the reality and excelleucy of the Christian religion. The worst and most abandoned characters cannot withstand the influence of a godly man in their midst. Witnessing his good works, they are frequently convinced of their own folly; and they are led to seek salvation.

A certain infidel once owned a grist-mill, which he kept in operation week and Sabbath alike. Near his mill was a Baptist church; and the people who attended that house of worship were necessitated to pass by the infidel's mill. Among these worshipers was a devout and holy deacon, whose life exerted such a mighty influence upon the infidel that so soon as he saw this man of God approaching the sanctuary he was constrained by the very sight of him to go and stop his machinery until the deacon had got out of sight again. But if God has designed that so much good shall result to the world from Christians living in it, how utterly false and unscriptural must be the notions of the Romish church, which teaches that it is better for the practice of virtue that pious persons should be shut out from the world in monasteries and convents!

The preaching of the Gospel, it is true, is a divinely appointed means of saving souls, but it is also an appointment of God, that men should see it lived likewise; so that by both hearing of the theory of religion, and seeing living examples of it, they may be left without any excuse for the neglect of it. God's Word affirms that the "blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin." 1 John 1: 7. If a Christian wants to prove to a demonstration the truth of that glorious statement before the world, his best and most convincing way, is not only to declare it with his tongue, but to live it in his daily conduct; such an argument will be irrisistible in its force. Therefore, every system, and every plea which would shut Christians up in privacy, and exclude religion from human sight, is in direct opposition to the teaching of Christ, and a hindrance to the spread of Scriptural holiness.

The second purpose of letting our light shine before men, is that they may "glorify our Father, which is in heaven." Observe, it does not say that they may glorify us, but our Father. We must not make a show of our good works for the sake of getting the praise of men, like the Pharisees, but for God's glory; we must aim at no other end than this. If we are called upon publicly to contribute to some benevolent object, or to perform some other good deed, let us not do it because we are in public, but to please God, and lead others to do the same. And what higher motive,—what more powerful incentive to the practice of all good works can a Christian have than this? The prevalence of wickedness and crime around us may incite us to give the contrary example of virtue; the lack of life and energy in the Christian church may impel us to infuse greater zeal and vigor into our own outward service; the increased happiness we may reap thereby, both on earth and in heaven, may present to us a cogent argument for saintly living; but the consideration that the glory of our Father in heaven may be promoted by our good works being seen, will move us with ten thousand fold greater force. O, that with a heaven-born, mighty impulse it may move us to exhibit holiness in our lives! Respecting the supreme end of man God has expressly said, "I have created him for my glory," (Isa. 43: 7.). But is it not a fact too patent to be denied that the greater part of mankind are very far from accomplishing this grand purpose, and give every evidence of being "earthly, sensual, devilish?" God has designed to use Christians for the two-fold purpose of yielding glory to him, and inciting their fellows to do the same. But when may we know that any person is led to glorify God by having witnessed our good works? Not merely when he approves religion and becomes moral, but when he admires the ways of righteousness, and turns to them; when he experiences conversion to God, and becomes a temple of the Holy Ghost. It is then that his tongue is used in adoring God, instead of uttering oaths and curses. It is then that another tribute of praise is rendered to the everlasting Father, and another gem inserted in the Redeemer's crown. It is then that another witness is raised up for Christ, and another agency set on foot for the evangelization of the world.

WHAT FREEMASONS SAY.

BY J. P. STODDARD.

Freemasons tell us that their order is very powerful; which is doubtless true.

They tell us that it extends over the civilized world and is so perfectly organized that its strength may be directed by a few leading minds to any given point; which is likewise true.

They tell us that their members are in every gathering of importance for business, pleasure, or worship, noting everything said or doue with iuterest; which is very significant.

They tell us their members are bouud by a solemn oath to assist each other and co-operate together for the good of the order and each one of its members; and no observing man will deny this statement.

They tell us that they have secret means of recognition by which one Mason may know another in the darkas well as in the light; which may readily be concluded.

They tell us it is dangerous for members to secede and expose the secrets of the lodge, and men aud even ministers arc warned not to speak too freely of an order of which they are said to be ignorant. These claims are freely made by Masons and the evidence on record justifies them.

Granting all that is claimed above let us consider what, may or may not follow.

1. Power may be used for the best or worst purposes. It is not a synonym for virtue, goodness or justice. Satan, the god of this world, has great power. The liquor leagues and Mormonism are strong enough to perplex and resist the government. A desperado or a ferocious beast is vested with power to terrify and destroy, and the power of Freemasonry is no index of its character, or proof of its goodness.

2. Wickedness is wide spread and in some of its deportments thoroughly organized. Licentiousness and gambling are engineered by a comparatively few who make crime a study and a business. The great rebellion was not merely a foray but a deep laid scheme ordered by method and consummated in blood; and judged simply by its structure and the extent of its membership, Masonry may be either like or unlike the Southern conspiracy.

3. The presence of Masons in every gathering for business, pleasure or worship is no guarantee that they are there for a good purpose. The District of Columbia was full of spies who watched every movement in Congress and dogged the steps of every man whose influence they feared. The governments of Europe are to-day infested with spies deeply interested in every movement; but this does not prove that the "Invincibles" and "Black Hand" attendants at court are innocent or safe members of society, even though they atteud worship.

4. The Irish American secret societies, like the Ku-Klux and White Leaguers, have each taken a solemn oath to mutually aid and protect each other, which is certainly not proof positive that Gladstone and the British Parliament are committing an outrage upon their rights in their efforts to suppress them.

5. Conspirators, banditti and outlaws of every description have their secret means of recognition and the fact that Masons obtain a like means of recognition suggests caution in accepting their professions. At least they copy the rogues methods if they do not imitate their practices.

6. Why is it dangerous to oppose or even expose Freemasonry if it is the handmaid of virtue, a school of patriotism and the stepping-stone to Christianity? It is not easy to understand how a man or minister should come under the ban of their displeasure for giving a true expose of their secrets, if the superstructure is based on justice and judgment. The man, it would seem, deserved the highest encomiums who is loudest and boldest in proclaiming the truth and the best methods of inculcating it, but Masons warn their members not to proclaim their doings "on the house top," and ministers they say can only oppose them at their peril. How is this?

If Masonry uses its power for selfish and sinister ends; if it is a wide-spread conspiracy against law and liberty; if its members are distributed as spies in every important assembly; if secret means of recognition are for mutual protectiou in crime; and if seceders and opposing ministers are endangered by the inherent villainy of the order, the mystery vanishes and the whole question becomes transparent as light itself. For one, I am thoroughly convinced that this is the true state of the case, Freemasonry is a deep-laid, wide-spread conspiracy against all who will not humbly and silently bow to its behests. It is armed with the implements of tyranny and enveloped in that secrecy and silence to which the vilest flee for refuge. It proceeds upon the assumption that outsiders, and especially seceders, or active opponents, may, and ought to be "plucked" to "feather the nests" of "the sons of light," and that when "a brother" defrauds a neighbor, or even commits a deliberate murder, his appeal for help must be recognized as a case of real distress and timely aid rendered according to the solemn oath by which they are bound.

That this is the correct view of the case is confirmed by ample testimony. A case in point was reported to me in a town where I spoke recently. Two neighbors had a difficulty about the trespass of stock. Mr. A, a Freemason, sent word to Mr. B, not a Mason, to call and settle damages. Mr. B went as requested, and was shot dead by Mr. A in the presence of a third party. The murderer was put on trial and the man who saw the shooting swore to the facts. It was a clear case of premeditated, unprovoked, willful murder, and the man was in imminent danger. Special meetings of the lodge were held while the trial was in progress, and men who sat in the jury box by day sat in the lodge at night. Whatever influence the night sessions may or may not have had upon the finding of the jury, the result was that the man was cleared; and there are men who assert openly and boldly that it was Masonry that did it.

In the same town was a faithful and devout pastor who dared to rebuke the secret system and warn his people to beware of its cruel devices. Through the influence of one of his deacons who was a Mason, and other members of the craft inside and outside the church, he was dismissed and it became a general neighborhood talk that "it is dangerous for a minister to oppose the lodge."

These are specimens of numerous cases reported to me in all parts of our country, showing that the Masonic boast of power is not an idle, empty sound, but a real element of oppression and gross injustice, doing its savage and lawless work in state and church with a vengeance.

THE JURY SYSTEM A FARCE.

BY ELDER E. L. HARRIS.

That a man may be tried for misdemeanor by a jury of his peers is a popular theory and one not easily surrendered by the American people; and yet, as administered by our courts, it is questionable whether on the whole it is productive of more good than evil. Having a leisure hour or two to spend in one of our Western cities, I stepped into a court room and witnessed the empanneling of a jury. The case was upon the indictment of a man for wilfully and maliciously killing his neighbor's mule. The deed had evidently elicited no little attention in the county as it had been put off from time to time. Each of the jurymen was asked the usual question: "Have you expressed an opinion?" The answer was generally, "No." "Have you an opinion?" "No." "Have you heard anything of it?" One or two said they had read of it in the county papers. This was sufficient to set them aside. Another question was, "Are you connected with either of the parties by blood or marriage?" An affirmative answer was enough to set the man aside.

My reflections on this occasion were these: Must a man be an ignoramus to be capable of sitting on this jury? Does he read no papers? Is he destitute of an opinion? or incapable of having one till helped to it by a lawyer? Must one be incapacitated as a juryman who has any alliance to either party by blood or marriage and nothing said of that other alliance or bond which in Masonic parlance is stronger than literal cords? May one bound by the "mystic tie" of lodge brotherhood be left to cause disagreement in a jury, or influence a partial decision? No, rather let the sifting go on. Let the same rule extend to the fraternal bonds of sworn secrecy as well as to any any other relation. Then may there be some probability that a man may be fairly tried by a jury of his peers.

Andover, Kans.

SOME MORAL DISTINCTIONS IGNORED BY THE LODGE.

No person, no principle, no enterprise, no institution is out of the sphere of candid Christian criticism. A Canadian by running away from his country may escape the operation of British law; a Methodist by joining the Baptist church may put himself beyond the jurisdiction of Methodist discipline, but no man can soar to any height or dive to any depth or flee to any length or hide in any hole where he is beyond the operation and jurisdiction of moral law. His secret thoughts, his whispered words and covert deeds are all open to the eye of God, and his conduct is open to criticism by those whose duty it is to teach moral principles and enforce moral obligations. "Go ye into all the world," said Christ, "and preach the Gospel to every creature." This command involves the discharge of every duty and the abandonment of every sin. If any man say to the Christian ambassador therefore, "My conduct is hidden, you don't know whether I am right or wrong; you don't know what I teach or what I learn, what I do or do not do, what I promise or do not promise, what I swear or do not swear either to do or to conceal, and therefore you have no business to critisise my conduct, or take any cognizance of it," such Christian ambassador may justly reply, "I have a right to condemn your conduct because it is secret." That very fact stamps it with suspicion. "He that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved." As a Christian brother I have a right to know what you do whether right or wrong. I am under no obligation to treat you as a Christian brother, and lay my life and conduct and motives and aims and purposes all open to your inspection and criticism unless you do the same with me. As a Christian you have no right to pursue a questionable course, and especially a course that has been questioned and is being questioned by many of the wise and the good, many of whom distinctly testify that to their personal knowledge the course is wrong, vicious, unscriptural and subversive of all Christian consistency and success, and which we know to be destructive of mutual confidence among Christian brethren. Reason condemns it; the interests of the world condemn it; God condemns it, hence it is fairly open to criticism and deserving of censure. Nor does the fact that such a course is authorized by a powerful human organization, numbering among its membership a large number of Christians and Christian ministers, exempt such conduct from criticism or condemnation. Who authorized any man, or any combination of men, any Christian, or combination of Christians, any minister or combination of ministers, any potentate or any combination of potentates, to do or endorse what God has forbidden? It is too often the case, however, that the authority of sinful men counts for more than the authority of the supreme God. But let no one claim immunity from Christian criticism and censure when he pursues a questioned and questionable course, not only, but a course that has been openly impeached by living and eminent Christian men who are themselves eye and ear witnesses of the things whereof they write, and their testimony is not denied.

Nor is it any justification of wrong-doing because men have bound themselves under oath to do a certain thing. Such an oath is itself wrong. If this were not so, all sin, even murder itself, might be justified under this pretext. We are told that on a certain occasion, "Certain Jews banded themselves together and bound themselves under a curse, saying that they would neither eat nor drink till they had killed Paul," (Acts 23:12). But does anyone imagine that these men were morally bound by that oath? Does anyone think they would have done wrong to break it? Evidently,

1. No secret conclave of men have any moral or civil right to administer oaths and impose penalties.

2. Every man commits a wrong who binds himself by any such unlawful or extra-judicial oath, no matter to what it relates.

3. Every wrong act should be repented of the moment it is discovered. There was a time when God winked at men's sins of ignorance "but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent" of every wrong. It is not enough to regret in our hearts that we have done wrong but we must bring forth fruits meet for repentance by renouncing and forsaking the sin.

4. The many Christian men, therefore, who have renounced and exposed Masonic oaths for the purpose of preventing others from getting into the same bondage, have evidently done right, and are not open to the charge of perjury, but deserve the commendation of all right thinking men. It was the superstitious idea that such oaths were binding that led Jephtha to sacrifice his own daughter, and Herod to behead the forerunner of our Lord. Interpreted in the light of divine truth and Christian morality the only obligation by which a Mason is bound is to break his oath and renounce its claims.

"It is a sin to swear unto a sin;
But greater sin to keep a sinful oath."

A TRIBUTE TO WOMAN.

Warriors and statesmen have their meed of praise
And what they do or suffer, men record;
But the long sacrifice of woman's days,
Passes without a thought, without a word;
And many a holy struggle for the sake
Of duties sternly, faithfully fulfilled,—
For which the anxious mind must watch and wake,
And the strong feelings of the heart be stilled,
Goes by unheeded as the summer wind,
And leaves no memory and no trace behind.
Yet it may be, more lofty courage dwells
In one meek heart which braves an adverse fate,
Than his whose ardent soul indignant swells,
Warm'd by the fight, or cheer'd through high debate.

THE FUTURE OF OUR COUNTRY.

BY DR. JOHN LORD.

The world has witnessed many powerful empires which have passed away, "leaving scarcely a wreck behind." What remains of the antediluvian world? Not even a spike of Noah's Ark, larger and stronger than any modern ship. What remains of Babylon, of Thebes, of Tyre, of Carthage—those great cities of wealth and power? What remains of Roman greatness even, except in laws and literature, and renovated statutes? Remember there is an undeviating uniformity in the past history of nations. What is the simple story of all the ages?—industry, wealth, corruption, decay and ruin. What conservative power has been strong enough to arrest the ruin of the nations of antiquity? Have not material forces and glories been developed and exhibited, whatever the religion and morals of the fallen nations? Cannot a country grow materially to a point under the most adverse influence in a religious and moral point of view? Yet for lack of religion and morals the nations perished, and their Babel towers were buried in the dust. They perished for lack of true conservative forces—at least that is the judgment of historians. Nobody doubts the splendor of the material glories of the ancient nations. The ruins of Baalbec, of Palmyra, of Athens, prove this, to say nothing of history. The material glories of the ancient nations passed away.

Now, if this is to be the destiny of America—an unbounded material growth followed by corruption and ruin—then Columbus has simply extended the realm for men to try material experiments. Make New York a second Carthage, and Boston a second Athens, and Philadelphia a second Antioch, and Washington a second Rome, and we simply repeat the old experiment. Did not the Romans have nearly all we have, materially, except our modern scientific inventions? But has America no higher destiny than to repeat the old experiments, and improve upon them and become rich and powerful? Has she no higher and nobler mission? Can she lay hold of forces that the Old World never had, such as will prevent the uniform doom of nations? I maintain that there is no reason that can be urged, based on history and experience, why she should escape the fate of the nations of antiquity, unless new forces arise on this continent, different from what the world has known, and which have a conservative influence. If America has a great mission to declare and to fulfill, she must put forth altogether new forces and they not material. That alone will save her, and save the world. It is mournful to contemplate even the future material glories of America, if they are not to be preserved—if these are to share the fate of ancient wonders. It is obvious that the real glory of America is to be something entirely different from that of which the ancients boasted. And this is to be the moral and spiritual, that which the ancients lacked.

Unless something new is born here, which has a peculiar power to save, wherein will America ultimately differ from other Christendom? We must have schools in which the heart as well as the brain is educated, and newspapers which aspire to something higher than to fan prejudices and appeal to perverted tastes. Our hope is not in books which treat infidelity under the name of science; not in pulpits which cannot be sustained without sensational oratory; not in journals which trade on the religious sentiments of the people; nor Sabbath-school books which are an insult to the human understanding; nor colleges that fit youth merely for making money; nor schools of technology to give an impulse to material interests; nor legislatures controlled by monopolists; nor judges elected by demagogues; nor philanthropic societies to ventilate impractical theories. These will neither renovate nor conserve what is most precious in life. Unless a nation grows morally as well as materially there is something wrong at the core of society. As I have said, no material expansion will avail if society becomes rotten at the core. America is a glorious boon to civilization, but only as she fulfills a new mission in history—not to become more potent in material forces, but in those spiritual agencies which prevent corruption and decay.

We all know that Christianity is the only hope of the world. The question is whether America is, or is not, more favorable for its healthy development and application than the other countries of Christendom. We believe that it is. If it is not, then America is only a new field for the spread and triumph of material forces. If it is, we may look forward to such improvements in education, in political institutions, in social life, in religious organizations, in philanthropic enterprise, that the country will be sought by the poor and enslaved classes of Europe more for its moral and intellectual advantages than for mines or farms, and the objects of the Puritan settlers will be gained.

We have sometimes wondered how the popularity of the soldier's sacrifices and achievements were to be rendered subservient to the interest of secret societies when the present organization of the G. A. R. by the course of nature dies out. All old soldiers like everyone else must yield at length to the decree of "dust thou art." The lodge is not to be foiled, however, by nature's stern decrees, and has seized upon the plan of organizing a secret society embracing the sons of the veterans. We believe the title given this new society is "The Sons of Veterans." This will enable secretism to ride down the march of time on the shoulders of patriotism. We entertain great respect for soldiers and their descendants, having served between three and four years in the late "unpleasantness." In fact, we entertain too much respect for the patriotic sentiment of the country to see it prostituted to the promotion of organized secretism, without entering our earnest protest.—Wesleyan.

A lawyer once undertook the defence of a robber on the promise of a thousand crowns reward. He won his case, and his client brought him the coveted money. The night being stormy, the lawyer invited him to lodge in his house. At midnight the robber arose, gagged his legal defender, retook the thousand crowns, and gathered all the treasure he could find, bade his helpless host good-bye. Such is the deceit of sin and the reward of iniquity.

THE STATE ASSOCIATION OF KENTUCKY CHURCHES.

DEAR BRO. BLANCHARD:—You are aware that as early as 1847 churches were formed in Kentucky refusing fellowship with slave-holders, also bearing practical testimony against caste and secret oath-bound societies. One of the early helpers, demitted from the lodge that he might co-operate, after a twelve months went back; was then dismissed from service and fellowship and soon lost all Christian character. Other churches was formed and remained strictly independent up to 1857-8.

After hesitation of the part of some an "Association" was formed, which adopted the following

CONSTITUTION.

1. This organization shall be known as "The State Association of Christian Ministers and Churches of Kentucky."
2. The object of the Association shall be the promotion of Christian fellowship, the aid of feeble churches, and the more efficient proclamation of the Gospel of Christ.
3. This Association shall be composed of churches and ministers, and the condition of membership shall be faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, evinced by a manifestation of his Spirit and obedience to his commandments. Each church may be represented by two delegates.
4. The officers of this Association shall be a Moderator, a Clerk and a Treasurer. The Moderator shall be elected annually, and the Clerk and Treasurer triennially.
5. This Constitution may be amended at any regular meeting by a vote of two-thirds of those present; provided the proposed amendment shall have been read at a previous meeting, and given to the clerk.

By further examination of the paper I send to you, you will see that "Christian character" is regarded as an equivalent of "manifested faith in Christ;" that this is so interpreted that Calvinistic sentiment, Arminian sentiment, immersion or sprinkling, or even neither of the latter, as in case of the Quaker, is considered as consistent with "Christian character." Thus there is an agreement—"a settled opinion."

If this settled opinion be absolutely right then no necessity to the individual person or independent church to depart from it. If wrong, history shows that permanent associations, with constitutional compacts, slowly, if ever, grow out of the "settled opinion."

However simple the basis of a permanent association history shows that such ultimately adopt denominational appliances, grow in to hierarchies, and adopt a name to mark such. Is independency the way out?

More, at the recent meeting of the Association (Nov. 30; Dec. 2), the fact was developed that one of the churches represented, has in its membership three adhering Masons. The pastor stated that he had preached against secret societies, yet affirmed that some of these secret society persons were among his best members—one was "a Mason and an Odd-fellow, and one of the most godly men in Louisville;" that he was not going to oppose them as he had. When asked if persons connected with secret orders had been received as members into the church of which he was pastor, he replied, he did not know, and this after having united in the previous meeting of the Association (Oct. 1881), in the following preamble and resolution:

WHEREAS, Secret societies hinder true religion by drawing men from meetings of the church and diverting the Lord's money into improper channels, and further alienate men from Christ by leading them to be "unequally yoked together with unbelievers," deluding with the false notion that compliance with the requirements of these societies, will fit them for heaven; and

WHEREAS, These societies, as we believe, tend to the subversion of justice,

Resolved, That as Christians it is our imperative duty to bear solemn protest against those anti-Christian institutions, and that we will faithfully endeavor to enlighten the people concerning their real character and evil tendencies.

At the recent meeting of the Association (30th ult.), the following additional resolutions were adopted:

1. Resolved, That secret societies organized to secure for themselves special advantages in social, civil, political and business relations over their equals in virtue, knowledge and capacity, but not connected with these societies, and bound by solemn covenants and oaths to secrecy and partiality, are detrimental to the peace of society, embarrassing to the administration of justice, and subversive of pure and undefiled religion.
2. Resolved, That Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship being most conspicuous and most dangerous among these societies should be especialy discountenanced and opposed by all Christians and all good citizens.

To this was appended the following as an amendment:

"And that ministers and churches are derelict in duty if they do not deal with persons who are thus connected with such institutions as when connected with other practices conceded to be anti-Christian and subversive of the religion of Christ—pure and undefiled religion."

Against this amendment the pastor of the church, the only pastor in the Association sustained by the American Missionary Association, and Bro. Joseph E. Roy, the field agent of the same Association, then present as a corresponding member, made strong protests on the ground that the pastor had preached against secret orders, and that our Association has no right of discipline.

Our reply was, Whatever may be the avowals of individuals or associations, whenever men from a permanent organization, or a constitutional basis, they are responsible for the fellowship of those who persist in practices grossly inconsistent with the very basis of the association; and nothing short of a declaration that ministers and churches are derelict in duty if they fail to deal with those who persist in practices anti-Christian and subversive of pure and undefiled religion could free us from responsibility and nothing short of this as a first step could justify continued fellowship.

Others besides the pastor and Bro. Roy protested against the amendment. The pastor said he should not regard the resolutions. We will see what the resolutions and recommendations of the American Missionary Association, on the matter of lodgery amount to. I shall rejoice if the results shall be for great good.

You remember slave-holders cared but little for resolutions unless they contemplated action. In those days Baptists had associations in the South similar in organization with this one I have referred to. We hold that these associations were responsible for the anti-Christian conduct of members of the associations and that ministers and churches were derelict in duty if they did not deal with those who were guilty of practices anti-Christian and subversive of pure and undefiled religion.

JOHN G. FEE.

THE NEW STOCK COMPANY.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 14, 1883.

The arrangements for the joint stock company to publish the new paper are rapidly taking definite shape. Perhaps in the end we shall not suffer from the long delay, provided we push the matter with energy henceforth. I have visited and corresponded with many people in New England and have met with encouragement everywhere. Perhaps it will save constant repetition in writing if I publish a copy of the subscription paper which has already been extensively circulated with liberal responses:

WHEREAS, A joint stock company is being organized to publish a paper in Washington, D. C., to advocate the principles of the American party, the undersigned promise to take the number of shares set opposite their names respectively, on the following conditions, to-wit:

1. The capital stock shall be $25,000, divided into 1,000 shares of $25 each.

2. One-fifth of each share shall be paid when the company is fully organized, and the remainder shall be subject to subsequent assessments, if necessary, to meet current expenses.

3. The provisions of the charter shall be such that no stockholder shall be liable for the debts of the company to an amount greater than the unpaid stock subscribed by himself.

This plan has now the almost unanimous endorsement of those whom we have been able to consult. It was first suggested by Senator Pomeroy and has been endorsed by several State conventions, as well as by all the informal consultation meetings held here and elsewhere. The views of those who think the capital should be $100,000 are to be met by a provision in the charter by which we can at any time increase the capital if it shall be thought necessary or best. Thus the views of all are recognized and absolute unity of action secured. Next week the charter is to be obtained and there need be no further delay, if the subscriptions are immediately run up to the required sum. We want $5,000 cash and the paper will start forthwith. I am receiving letters daily with pledges to take shares; but they should come more rapidly. Some write that they will "do something" as soon as the plans take definite shape. That time has apparently now come. Let every writer say definitely how many shares he will take. Of the subscriptions thus far received about forty per cent. promise to pay their shares in full. This is better than we anticipated, as it will give us a larger cash capital. If by this means our cash capital should reach $10,000 it will be equal to the largest sum proposed to begin on.

This movement is the next great way-mark of the reform. It is by every one regarded as a step of vast importance. It has taken nearly a year to perfect the plans, complete the building, and consult parties interested, but so far as I know we are now ready to consummate the work. Let all friends of the cause write to me at once and make definite pledges.

I am frequently asked "When do you want the money?" My answer now is that we are ready for it. Mr. Milton Ford is treasurer of the Washington Central Executive Committee and until the officers of the new company are elected he will take charge of all funds. He is a responsible man, as all who know him are aware, and money sent to me will be put in his charge. Now let the responses come promptly from all parts of the land. My address is 215, 4½ St., N. W. Washington, D. C.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

IMPORTANT AND INTERESTING RECOLLECTIONS OF THE MORGAN TIMES.

RANSOMVILLE, Niagara Co., N. Y., Dec. 11, 1883.

It is just a week since I came to this county. I have spoken seven times, viz., at New Fane, Wright's Corners, Warren's Corners, Randall Road and Ransomville. I have met many friends and trust something has been done for the Master. There is a general desire among the people for information and a willingness to sustain the cause with their means and active co-operation. Yesterday I visited Youngstown with Bro. Bennett and made a personal inspection of the old fort and arsenal. Geo. Swain, Esq., gave us half a day of his time, which was to us very valuable. He was born in Youngstown in 1819, and his recollections of events of 1826 and later are very distinct. Col. King was his father's near neighbor, and for a time the familics were on very familiar terms. George Swain's father was instrumental in securing King's election to the legislature. The latter's connection with Morgan's murder has been stated by Thurlow Weed, which Mr. Swain had not seen, but which he fully confirmed, adding many incidents from personal knowledge.

The night that Morgan was sunk in Niagara and after Col. King had returned home he was called up toward morning by a stranger "from the east." This stranger inquired where Morgan was. The Colonel replied, "He is taken care of." The man flew into a rage and drawing a long knife from his coat said, "I was ordered to quiet Morgan and came here for that purpose, and you had no right or authority to do it." After threatening King, who told him that Morgan would never be seen by him or any human being, he left in a perfect rage of disappointment.

Col. King was much disturbed and became seriously ill. The lodge at Lewiston deputed members from their number to be constantly with him. Two came from Lewiston in the morning, remaining through the day and at evening were relieved by two others for the night. This was continued for about two weeks when the Colonel became more calm and was left in care of his family. The Masons attributed the Colonel's agitation to his defeat for a second term in the legislature; but citizens not Masons thought he was tortured and frenzied by visions of a coming retribution for Morgan's murder. Miss Hinman, sister of Squire Hinman, was intimate in the King family, and was one of the very few who were allowed to see the Colonel occasionally during his sickness. She said his agony of mind was horrible beyond description. He would spring from his couch or chair and rush wildly around the room in spite of the efforts of his Masonic attendants to restrain him, exclaiming. "O that I had been killed in battle! O that I had died an honorable death and not brought reproach and shame upon my family, and eternal ruin on my soul! But I can't. I can't. I never can; I never will tell!" And thus he would rage until exhausted when he would succumb to the efforts of his "watchful brethren" and sink into a kind of stupor for a time.

After his partial recovery he was sent by the "fraters" to Governor Clinton at Albany, and by him to Washington, and from there to the Red River country. When legal investigations had proceeded for some time and reached a point where the craft supposed itself in possession of the courts and able to exonerate the Colonel from any legal charge that might be brought against him. he suddenly appeared in Youngstown.

Mr. Swain remarked, "I can see him now, as if it was but yesterday, walking on the porch at the old hotel, and I stood very near him when he said, "I have come back to stand my trial, but ten thousand men could not have brought me in irons from the Red River country."

While on the porch Mr. Swain's father came up, and recognizing his old neighbor and benefactor, King stepped ward extending his hand, saying, "How do you do, my old friend?" Mr. Swain, looking sternly said, "Colonel, I cannot take that hand. It is stained with blood!"

King was deeply affected; his countenance fell, and he soon withdrew from the crowd. Not long after a courier came from Lockport and announced that Eli Bruce was on the witness stand making a clean breast of the whole Morgan affair. King was horrified and sought relief in drink. All the day he drank heavily at the tavern and in the evening went to his house (which was shown me) on the main street. Mrs. King was out of health and the Colonel, with his little boy John, occupied a room together. John testified that before going to bed his father took from his pocket a paper containing a white powder which he emptied into a glass with water and drank it. He was awakened in the night by the groans of his father, and going to his mother told her that his father was sick. His mother replied, "Go back to bed; your father is no sicker than I am."

The boy went back, but just as the day began to dawn ventured again to call his mother. She came and found the Colonel insensible, lying on his back; his eyes glazed, his lips parted and a white foam spattered over his face and upon the pillow. Dr. Hyde was immediately called, but every effort to restore consciousness was unvailing and he died soon after. He was buried by the Freemasons in the soldiers' grave-yard where his body now lies.

These are the facts as related to me yesterday by George Swain, Esq., who was present at the funeral and personally knowing to most of them. Mr. Swain is a man of unquestioned veracity. Has been sheriff of Niagara county and talks with perfect freedom of these matters. He has no doubt that Col. King was one of the murderers of Morgan, and that King died by poison administered by his own hand, to which act of self-murder he was driven by remorse of conscience and apprehensions of punishment due to his participation in one of the darkest cold-blooded murders that ever occurred in the annals of human butcheries.

J. P. STODDARD.

NEW YORK MANIFESTO.

DALE, N. Y., Dec. 14, 1883.

DEAR EDITOR:—I would like to say a few things in reference to a winter's campaign which is contemplated in New York State. Shall we make this winter's work tell for God and humanity, or shall we fold our arms and "listen to the song of the siren until she transforms us into beasts?" This is a question which must be decided by all. How will you decide, men and women of New York State? The time was when to be a child of the "Old handmaid" was to be held in disrepute. But alas, for misguided humanity, how different are things to-day! They glory in their shame. Conscience stifled, ceases to give her warning voice. The Morgan tragedy is being obliterated from the minds of the young. They are taught to regard Finney, Bernard, Starry, and Ronayne and others who have exposed the foolish mummery of Masonry, as mere "cranks," pretending to discuss something they know nothing about. Notwithstanding the fact that (at the time Morgan was kidnapped and drowned) there were over 300 lodges in this State that gave up their charters, and scarce an adhering Mason could be found, there are hundreds of men and women to-day who will deny that Morgan was murdered by the Masons for revealing the secrets of their society.

Many perhaps, and I might say nearly all, who lived in those times have long since gone to sing the praises of God and the Lamb forever and ever. Yet there are a few who linger this side the river who are fighting nobly for Christ and his kingdom. Such men as Capwell, Clark, Palmer, Williams and many others of the same stamp, are doing much toward the overthrow of the powers of darkness here, and will be remembered by the coming millions with gratitude, long after they have gone to their reward, as benefactors of humanity and helpers in bringing in Christ's reign on the earth.

Public sentiment is still largely on the side of Christ as opposed to lodgism. There are, however, a great many rings and newly-hatched secret societies that are governing the press and obstructing free speech. No individual is likely to be very active in opposing Masonry when he belongs to a similar society.

It seems to me that the time has come when we must stand like men against this incoming tide, or be swept on to destruction. What say you, brethren? Shall we improve the time and speak out our convictions, or not? The word is, "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve." "If the Lord be God serve him: if Baal then serve him." We boast of our liberty! But do we not see the same forces at work in our land that destroyed many a mighty nation in the past? "By a continual dropping the stone is worn away."

It is the plan of the N. Y. State convention to have meetings held all through the State, and see what, by the help of God, may be done toward the overthrow of this gigantic swindle which is secretly working the destruction of the church, family and state.

I spoke to an attentive audience in the Freewill Baptist church at Dale, Rev. J. C. Seele pastor, Monday evening, Dec. 10th. and expect (D. V.) to fill four appointments next week, the first on Monday evening in the M. E. church, Alexander. The pastor, Rev. C. S. Daley, is a devoted Christian, has read Finney on Masonry, and desires more light on the subject. He said that he would assist me what he could in my work there. I go from Alexander to Bro. Palmer's near Batavia, and am to speak in a school-house near by in the evening.

Let those who may desire a lecture in their vicinity, and have not already done so, write Bro. F. W. Capwell, at Dale, immediately, so that arrangements for a series of meetings can be completed. I have met with some success in raising funds for State work, which you will find reported in the Cynosure. There should be a fund in the treasury to be used in procuring halls in places where there is not enough interest taken to open churches, and other necessary expenses incurred by the State convention. Those who have any of the Lord's money that should be used in this way will please forward the same to F. W. Capwell, Pres., Dale, N. Y., or M. Merrick, treasurer, Syracuse, N. Y.

I leave the question with you, dear reader, will you by your prayers, counsel and aid make this winter's work tell for God and humanity? Yours for Christ,

W. B. STODDARD, State Ag't.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

JONATHAN BLANCHARD,
OF ILLINOIS.

For Vice President,

JOHN A. CONANT,
OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

T. De Witt Talmage passed through Chicago last week, and gave a press reporter his views of the political prospect thus: "My admiration for the two political parties is below zero. They are full of corruption, and will be knocked beams-end some day by a party that will make dominant the better principles that faintly appear in the present parties now. No, I think I shall take no hand in politics. I never take part in partisan discussions, but I discuss great political principles from my pulpit."

Ex-Congressman Charles B. Farwell of this city, makes some conjectures about the whisky tax and the Presidential nomination which were printed in the Inter Ocean. Heaven forbid that a perpetuation of the whisky business should make a President:

"I see in the papers Mr. Blaine's letter providing for the distribution of the whisky tax among the States, and General Logan's bill giving $50,000,000 of said tax to the States for the purpose of educating the children therein, and am led to ask what this all means. Is it a bid upon the part of each for the Presidential nomination? And is it the hobby upon which our next President is to ride into power? If so, I suggest that neither is entitled to a patent upon this hobby, but that it belongs to another, and his name is Uncle Joseph Medill, and he would make a better President than either of them."

AT LAST.

After a dozen or fifteen years of unremitted effort on the part of an exceedingly small minority in Vermont, our Anti-masonic books have been got into a Vermont circulating library. So completely hood-winked is the Vermont voter by the Grand-master tricksters of the lodge, that our Anti-masonic literature is as little known in that State as the Bible was in Mexico a few years ago. After fifteen years work we at last got the lodge in a dilemma; they had to take the Anti-masonic library which we offered them, or we should have appealed the case to the people. Therefore, they concluded that a "free circulating library" had better take the books. But it went terribly against the Masonic grain.

We would recommend the American party to take this course everywhere; offer our Anti-masonic, anti-monopoly library to the circulating libraries of their neighborhood, and if the Masonic committees reject them, then make an appeal to the people. The dead Hirams have no fear of God, for he is but a Grand Master Architect; but they do fear the people. Therefore, bring them before the people, whom they have imposed upon long enough, one would suppose. DOWN EAST.

SECRETISM IN POLITICS.

The newspaper press, though exercising the utmost circumspection lest any word of opposition to the ordinary secret lodges appear in their columns, yet occasionally, on some outbreak of Nihilism or of the Irish assassination leagues, condemn these latter with suspicious boldness, since the objects of their malediction are unable to harm their subscription lists. The lodges, with whose character and operations all Americans are becoming familiar, may practice their political jugglery without fear of rebuke. But an unusual case is reported from Worcester, Mass., which we would be glad to see written up by the pen of our late New England correspondent, Bro. Bailey, now removed to Washington. The nature of this new lodge outbreak against the rights of every citizen must be learned from the following note and editorial comment in the Worcester Daily Spy of Dec. 6th, while at the same time the Spy deserves a sincere acknowledgment for its bold and honest speaking:

MR. EDITOR:—Will you kindly inform your readers as to the probable existence in this community of a political organization known as the "Dark Lantern" or "Know Nothing" party, and also, if there be such a reality, what are its purposes as regards our municipal affairs? The necessity for intelligent political action is so pressing that any light upon this much discussed question will be most gratefully received. Yours with great respect.

Worcester, December 5th.

Our correspondent, it will be observed, asks information for readers in general, not for himself. He knows we suspect, more about the mysterious party than we do. Rumors, some of them vague, others more definite, have reached us from time to time during the last two years as to the existence in the city of a secret organization designed to influence municipal politics. Its purpose is always said to be to keep the city offices, and especially the schools, in the hands of native born citizens. There

CORRESPONDENCE.

TOPEKA AND LECOMPTON.

STRAWBERRY, Kansas, Dec., 1883.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—"Going east in search of light," etc., I brought up at Topeka, where one, not initiated, gets light on various subjects. Among other things, I found it was a capital lodge city and that the G. A. R. has broken the usual monotony of peace and brotherly love by having a division and family quarrel. I discover it is quite a factor in politics, too—the G. A. R. is.

It seems nearly everybody belongs to secret orders there, with the idea as near as I can understand, that it is a great social, political or financial advantage.

Leaving there I arrived at Lecompton. Having heard that it had no lodge I was anxious to see what kind of a place it could be. In many important respects it is an anomaly. There was a time in its history when it was the Territorial capital with 10,000 inhabitants and 113 saloons, when every man, and some of the women, carried arms—at that time it probably had that relic of the dark ages, the lodge. But it was torn down to the foundation and built up, we trust, to suit the "Great Architect" (so to speak). And now it has absolutely nothing of an evil character whereby the young can be drawn into vice and immorality.

Now Lecompton is a growing little town of perhaps 300 residents, a good school called Lane University, with a good and increasing patronage, good faculty, etc. The school, though denominational, is unsectarian, and any denomination could send there without danger of proselyting or discrimination. A new and commodious college building has recently been erected, and the old building is fitted up, containing forty rooms, for the accommodation of students in any and every way, giving them a chance to get their education cheaply if they are poor. This building has a trusty occupant whose business it is to guard against any possible misconduct among the students. It is in two divisions, one for males and the other for females. Board is from $2.50 to $2.75 per week; but students club and hire a cook if they wish, when it costs them from $1.20 to $1.50 per week for board. A poor student or citizen is just as good as any one, aristocratic ideas not prevailing.

During a sojourn of over a week I might say I heard nothing of an obscene or profane character in the town. It is a healthy location, only two students having died in eighteen years past. Church privileges are excellent. Fruit is abundant and markets good. Homes are within reach of all. Readers of the Cynosure who want their children away from many of the ordinary temptations go to Lecompton. R. HART.

UNION IN CHRIST.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—In the able article by Rev. W. T. Hogg in your issue of Nov. 29th there is an admirable presentation of the unity of the church, and I am glad to see that while he excuses divisions he does not regard them as good in themselves, but holds that God has something better in reserve for his people.

But there are some things which should be noticed:

1. It is assumed that we are not to expect visible unity among Christians until the Great Shepherd shall appear, and hence he infers that it is unwise to labor for its accomplishment. But our Saviour prayed for this unity, and surely his people should labor for it. Many people believe that all men are not to be converted till the Lord comes, but surely we must labor that if possible we may save some. If in but a single instance we can see all the people of God who live in a given community visibly united in his service, we ought to rejoice as in answer to the prayer of Christ.

2. It is assumed that those who believe that there ought to be "no schism in the body" are in error and that they do not "keep the unity of the Spirit," and are "more prolific of thorns than of fruit." It is a very common mistake to suppose that we can defend any system by blackening the reputation of those who oppose it. That is the way, and the only way that men could defend slavery. So, too, they defend Freemasonry. How often have I heard the venerable president of Wheaton College denounced as a "bad man," simply because he reproved this iniquity. It may be conceded that no man or set of men are free from error; but this has nothing whatever to do with the principles for which they contend.

3. Our brother makes the common mistake of supposing that all who discard sects are opposed to any religious organizations. The assumption is that every organization is of necessity a sect, and that to discard sects is to be separated from all of God's people in Christian work. But the primitive churches were organized, but not sects, and when the people of God in any place come together in the name of Jesus only, they are not a sect, and it is gross injustice to call them so. There are many such congregations which are churches just as truly as the churches at Corinth and at Jerusalem, and no more sects than they were.

The fourth mistake is in assuming that sects are necessary in order that there may be both unity and diversity. But if this were true there would need to be as many sects as there are individual Christians, for no two are precisely alike in opinions or methods of worship. They were not alike in the primitive church, and yet they are expressly forbidden to divide on that account. It is doubtless true that when people think more of forms and opinions than they do of Christ, or when for any reason his kingdom and his righteousness become subordinate to something else, they will straightway form a sect, and contend for it, but until then they have both unity and diversity.

A fifth mistake is in supposing that our Saviour prayed merely for spiritual unity. But God's people are and always have been spiritually one. They were not then and are not now visibly one. This external and visible unity has been the prayer of God's people in all ages, and both the prophets and the Saviour have declared that it will come. (See Ez. 38:11–28; John 10:16.) The present condition of the Christian world is abnormal and deplorable. I am aware of the difficulties in the way of visible unity, and of the mistakes of some who have labored for it, but if I am true to Christ I must both pray and labor for what he prayed for, that "They all may be one."

In conclusion I wish to cordially agree with our brother that the divisions to be deplored are heart divisions. Now it is just for this reason we deplore the divisions of God's people into parties that are under constant temptation to oppose and resist each other, and to resort to most improper methods to build up and sustain their organizations. The fact that the great religious denominations are full of Freemasons, and that so gross and terrible an iniquity cannot be exposed even to the innocent and unoffending members, is proof that as a rule the love of Christ is in all these denominations subordinate to the love of sect. In other words denominational zeal becomes great modern idolatry. May the Lord keep us from it, and help us to smite all idols that are in our midst.

H. H. HINMAN.

POINTERS.

Elder Harris having removed from Delavan, Wis., to Andover, Kansas, makes some observations:

"This is emphatically a new country. People have hardly got to living yet. But it has all the merits or natural advantages of a rich farming country. We have not been here long enough to test the effect of the climate on weak lungs, but hope it will be favorable, as it is dry and clear, the mercury ranging from 40 to 58 above zero."

Bro. Thomas C. Haines from away across the continent (Portland, Oregon) sends this approval of the Washington enterprise:

"One glance, however, at Washington. I felt enthused by Bro. Bailey's enthusiasm. I hope it will be very contagious. And now that the fund tide is signaled for, I hope for a real Fund-y rise (or raise). I am greatly in favor of such a 'signal service,' with department head at Washington. The eyes and ears must be opened to see and hear, and the heart to feel, ere we can confidently expect men, means and votes to speed on our good ship of state beyond the maelstrom already whirling her toward the center of secret darkness and destruction. 'He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless return again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him.' If Paul and Apollos will 'plant' and 'water' they may then look to God for 'increase.'"

Another shaft at Romanism from an occasional Chicago contributor:

"The well known Baptist preacher, Justin D. Fulton, of New York, calls attention to 'Rome' in a late Standard, of this city, and declares that in New York 'Rome has more brains, more culture, more money, and more hearty devotees than dwell in the Eternal City. Rome is almost master here in politics, in literature and religion.... I believe that Romanism is simply paganism revived.' The work of the great sophist Capel in New York taps anew the ink bottle of Mr. Fulton and opens his mouth in the Brooklyn Temple against the danger. Mr. Fulton has done good service and hits some time-serving brethren when he says, 'the average minister feels he must preach and build up his church in praying for the conversion of heathen in India or Italy, and in neglecting those in his immediate vicinity.' But he says he 'hits error wherever he meets it,' and so we invite his attention also to the popularity of lodgery which is spreading its cancerous paganism among Protestant, aye, even among Baptist churches."

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON XIII.—December 30, 1883.—Review.

The lessons of the quarter may be profitably condensed and reviewed in connection with the three leading characters which they present—Samuel, Saul and David.

I. The life of Samuel should be so reviewed as to show how much one godly life may accomplish. His character may be considered in a four-fold aspect: 1st, as a man; 2d, as a prophet; 3d, as a priest; 4th, as a judge. The teacher may ask for traits of personal character; then for the time when each was displayed. When did he first exercise the office of a prophet? Give other instances of its exercise. Inquire in like manner as to the priestly office. Then ask for characteristics of his rulings as judge; also for some of the results of his faithfulness; the occasion of his retirement, and his subsequent conduct.

II. The life of Saul should be so reviewed as to show the tendency and bitter results of disobedience. To this end bring out distinctly, 1st, his prosperity and brilliant prospects at the beginning: people enthusiastic, God's forgiveness and the prophet's co-operation offered; his own character also promising happy results—modesty, wisdom, courage, etc. 2d. Bring out the first evidence of his defection, and mark the progress of his insubordination to the divine will. 3d. Sum up the evil consequences of his course to himself, his family, and the nation.

III. The life of David may be reviewed as that of a scholar in the divine school. We see how he is being prepared for the weightier responsibilities yet before him. 1st, in his home—godly ancestry, Boaz, Ruth, etc. He inherited prayers of grandparents as well as parents. He speaks of his mother as the "handmaid" of the Lord (Ps. 116:16). 2d. As a shepherd boy. This not only gave opportunity for meditation and devotion, favorable to depth of character and experience, but also required the exercise of fidelity and courage. 3d. By the prophet's anointing. This would awaken his mind somewhat as to what lay before him. 4th. In the king's court. His near relation to Saul himself would give one of his keen perceptions much insight into the duties of a sovereign. 5th. In the school of affliction. No sooner does his courage and heroic conduct place him before the eyes of the nation than his trials begin; the peaceable fruits of which the people of God are still reaping in the inimitable songs of prayer and praise which he was inspired to write.

BAND OF HOPE BIBLE LESSON.

TRUE AND FALSE CHARITY.

31. And as ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise.
32. For if ye love them which love you, what thanks have ye? for sinners also love those that love them.
33. And if ye do good to them which do good to you, what thanks have ye? for sinners also do even the same.
34. And if ye lend to them of whom ye hope to receive, what thanks have ye? for sinners also lend to sinners to receive as much again.
35. But love ye your enemies, and do good, and lend, hoping for nothing again; and your reward shall be great, and ye shall be the children of the Highest: for He is kind unto the unthankful and to the evil. Luke 6:31-35.
12. Then said he also to them that bade him, when thou makest a dinner or supper, call not thy friends, nor thy brethren, neither thy kinsmen, nor thy rich neighbors; lest they also bid thee again, and a recompense be made thee.
13. But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind;
14. And thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompense thee: for thou shall be recompensed at the resurrection of the just. Luke 14:12-14.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Do good and lend, hoping for nothing again.

CENTRAL TRUTH.—True charity gives freely, not expecting anything in return.

1. This is called the Golden Rule because it is the plainest, easiest, highest rule of life ever given to man. If universally followed it would banish every wrong from the earth, and make our world like heaven.

2. True charity is kind to all without respect of persons; false charity is kind only to a few from whom it expects to receive some equivalent.

3. Secret societies like Masonry, Odd-fellowship, etc., are the channels through which much of this false charity flows.

4. Masons swear to assist needy members of their own order but no others. True charity does good to all men.

5. All women, all the colored race, all the crippled and unfortunate, all the young and the aged are excluded from Masonic lodges—the very classes which Christianity especially invites.

6. Masonry teaches revenge. Instead of loving its foes, it persecutes and sometimes takes their lives.

7. Its costly temples, expensive regalia, parades and banquets, have to be paid for. Thus widows and orphans are actually robbed, for it is out of the hard-earned savings of their husbands and fathers that Masonry obtains its great wealth.

8. Odd-fellows exclude all women, the totally deaf, dumb and blind, men with chronic diseases, or any infirmity which prevents their earning a livelihood; and all races and colors but the pure white Caucasian.

9. Grand Lodge statistics show that only one dollar is paid out for relief to three dollars paid in.

10. In contrast we see Christian men and women giving their time, strength and money to help the poor and degraded, feeding the hungry, clothing the naked and teaching the ignorant. Every year the Christian church pays out millions of dollars to support asylums, hospitals, missions, and various kinds of benevolent work. It offers salvation without money and without price. Christianity, like God himself, is love. "The lodge is organized selfishness."

PRACTICAL TRUTHS.

It is selfish to love only those who love us.

Masonry and Odd-fellowship so far from being charitable are not even honest to their own members.

True charity has its reward above—false charity has its reward below.

QUESTIONS.

1. What is the Christian's rule of conduct toward others? v. 31. Why do we call it the Golden Rule?

2. What is the world's rule of conduct toward others? vs. 32–34. What then is the difference between true and false charity?

3. Give an example of false charity.

4. What do Masons swear to do? How is this contrary to Christ's rule?

5. What classes are excluded from Masonic lodges? How general is the invitation of Christ's church? Rev. 22:17. How has Christianity honored woman? Luke 2:7; John 20:11–18. How does it regard different races and colors? Acts 10:34, 35; 17:26. How does it comfort the weak and unfortunate? Matt. 11:28. What kind words does it have for the aged? Isa. 46:4. For children? Luke 18:16.

6. What is the Gospel rule? v. 35. Does Masonry teach this?

7. Prove that Masonry actually robs the poor? What is the reward of true charity? Matt. 5:7; Ps. 41:1. How does love make us the children of the Highest? 1 John 4:16. Does God's kindness extend only to those who love him? v. 35 l. c.

8. What classes does Odd-fellowship exclude?

9. How much does it pay out for relief in proportion to what is paid in? Supposing it paid back every cent to its members would it be charity? What would it be? What are we commanded not to do? v. 12. For what reason? l. c. Who are we commanded to bid in preference to the rich and happy? When shall we receive our reward? v. 14.

10. What do Christian men and women do? What is the church doing every year? What then is the difference between Christianity and the secret lodge?

LESSON TALK.

If we search human records through we shall find that the noblest deeds of self-sacrifice have been prompted by Christian love. Perhaps no act of self-denial has ever surpassed that of the Moravian missionaries, who voluntarily imprisoned themselves in leper houses, knowing that once in they could never come out—that they must be outcasts from humanity, dying by inches of a loathsome and terrible disease—all that they might tell the good news of salvation to the poor lepers, though they were not their kindred, or even of their own race or color. Masonry and Odd-fellowship, especially the latter, claim to be more benevolent than Christianity, though all thinking people the moment they investigate can see the difference. Said a young lady, when an Anti-masonic acquaintance was telling her of the evils of secret orders, "I don't know much about them, only I know that the Odd-fellows get up nice entertainments. "Where does the money come from?" pertinently inquired her friend. The young lady was silent. Probably the thought entered her mind for the first time that the widows and orphans must lose in proportion to the money which the lodge takes from its charity fund to spend on frivolous gayeties. One reason why so many people are deceived by their pretense of charity is because they do not stop to reflect about it. For one man who thinks for himself there are ninety-nine who let others do their thinking for them. But we are commanded to "prove all things." Still another reason is because Satan blinds their eyes so they are willingly deceived. One of the most terrible punishments with which the Bible threatens those who wilfully embrace error is that they will finally lose their power of distinguishing between a truth and a delusion. If they choose a falsehood and love it God will give them up to be deceived hopelessly and eternally.

LESSON HYMN.

"Blest is the man whose softening heart Feels all another's pain."

—Mrs. Elizabeth B. Harbert, one of the Inter Ocean editors, writes in that paper that Elizabeth Cady Stanton uses this heathenish form of "grace" at table: "Heavenly Father and Mother, make us ever mindful of the patient hands that oft in weariness and trial prepare our daily food, for humanity's sake. Amen."

MRS. DASH, THE MASON,

OR THE ORIGIN OF STAR LODGE MASONRY.

BY ADDIE SLAWSON.

Now Mr. Dash was a Mason good,
Who blowed and blustered all he could,
He gloried much as a Mason should,
In the fact that, he was a Mason.

Mr. Dash had a troublesome wife
Who was the torment of his life,
And what was the cause of all their strife?
She could not be a Mason.

"NOW, MR. DASH," she would loudly say;
"I'LL NOT STAND THIS ANOTHER DAY;
Your strutting around so grand and gay,
While I can't be a Mason."

While from the Lodge he staid away,
His raven locks were turning grey,
And he grew so haggard day by day,
It was noticed by the Masons.

They soon found out his sorrow's cause,
And quite a troublesome case it was,
For it is forbidden by their laws,
That women should be Masons.

Now what to do they did not know,
Till some one whispered sly and low
"Let's fix for them a little side-show
And play that they are Masons."

They then contrived a small affair,
Arranged it doubtless "on the square,"
Then told Mrs. Dash to come up there,
And she could be made a Mason.

Then Mrs. Dash "sent in" her name,
And when received, the aspiring dame,
She to her husband did proclaim:
"She had been made a Mason."

Mr. Dash's eyes then opened wide,
As he turned his head a grin to hide,
He chuckled as he said—aside;
"Poor fool! She's hinks she's a Mason."

—The New York police authorities discovered that a law passed in 1870 annuls the licenses of all persons who have been found guilty of a violation of the excise law. The result was that several liquor dealers were arrested, the claim being made that their licenses were null and void.

—There were 417 blast furnaces in operation in the United States on Jan. 1 and but 331 on Nov. 1. On the first of July 528,590 tons of pig iron were unsold, while Nov. 1 but 232,350 tons remained in the hands of makers and agents.

—The final report from Washington on the corn crop shows a reduction, when compared with last year, of 1½ bushels per acre, being a total of 40,000,000 bushels.

A HUMAN FIRE.

THE PHENOMENON OF A BURNING MINE REPEATED IN THE PHYSICAL SYSTEM.

A few years ago one of the most important coal mines in Pennsylvania caught fire. It started slowly but soon obtained such headway that it spread through the greater portion of the entire mine. To flood it with water would extinguish the fire, but well nigh ruin the mine; and still the flames continued to increase. At that juncture a young man stepped forward and suggested that all the entrances and vent holes of the mine be covered and secured, thus shutting off the supply of air. His advice was followed and the flames were finally subdued.

To compare the condition of this mine with many phases of the human system, is most natural and appropriate. "Fire in the blood" is not a mere expression, it is a most serious fact. How it originates, it may be impossible to say; but that it burns and rages with an increasing fury, the one who is its victim only too painfully knows. The blood is the life. It is designed by nature to purify, strengthen and sustain the system. It is too often made the channel through which poison and death are transported. Poisonous acids coming through the veins and arteries inflame and cause a fire just as real as the one that existed in the mine. They burn and irritate causing the brain to become weak and the nerves unstrung; they carry pains to the muscles and leave agonies in the joints; they bring destruction instead of strength; they devastate the very portions of the body that most require help, and they hasten the approach of death in its most horrible form. These things have been felt by innumerable people who have been the victims of rheumatic disorders, and the agonies they have endured confirm this description.

There is but one way by which this fire in the blood can be extinguished, and that is by shutting off the supply of these poisonous acids. The lactic, lithic and uric acids come in to the blood through the liver and kidneys, and they remain in solution in the blood producing inflammatory rheumatism, sciatica, lumbago; neuralgia, gout and all rheumatic fevers and affections. When they are deposited as gritty crystals in and near the joints, they cause articular rheumatism; when in the muscles, muscular rheumatism and lumbago; when in the tissues covering the nerves, sciatica; when in the face, head and nerves generally, neuralgia. In every case they are painful; in most instances, dangerous. Inflammatory rheumatism is likely to locate in some joint and become chronic, or suddenly attack the brain or heart, causing apoplexy or heart disease. The fire in the blood must extinguished—the supply must be shut off. This can only be done by guarding the portals to the blood—the kidneys and liver; and no means has ever been found for accomplishing this which can equal Warner's Safe Rheumatic Cure. It acts directly upon the seat of the disorder; it extinguishes the fire by controlling the supply and removing the cause.

The well known standing of H. H. Warner & Co of Rochester, N. Y., the remarkable success which Warner's Safe Cure has achieved, being indorsed by no less a personage than Dr. Robert A. Gunn, Dean of the United States Medical College, New York, and the fidelity with which they have carried out all their promises to the public, should be a sufficient warrant that the above statements are true. They, however, guarantee to cure ninety-five per cent. of all rheumatic troubles, especially acute, knowing full well that the demonstrated power of the remedy justifies them in so doing. Nothing can be fairer than this, and those who suffer in the future from rheumatism with such an offer before them, do so on their own responsibility, and can blame no one if living pain and untimely death are the results.

'FREEMASONRY AT A GLANCE."

An exposition of the first three degrees of Freemasonry in every village for little or no money! How can it be done? By sending to W. I. Phillips, Treasurer N. C. A., for a 32-page pamphlet, containing 40 illustrations with explanations, with the legal attestation of the past master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago, as to the correctness of said exposition. We will send, postpaid, from now to first of January, thirty (30) of these pamphlets for one dollar; sixty-five (65) for two dollars, and 165 for five dollars.

Edmund Ronayne says: "One of these pamphlets put in each family will do as much good as a public exposition would do." The way to get them without money is to send new subscriptions for the Cynosure at $2.00 each, receiving for three such subscriptions 36 of the pamphlets exposing the first three degrees of Freemasonry.

Many have written: "Send a lecturer to our place, we need one very much." This is often impossible, but the above plan is much better than no lecture; does not need a church or hall, which often cannot be had; and costs but a fraction of what a lecturer usually costs. Will you see to it that you have one of these lecturers, silent as sunlight and as powerful, in your town. If you cannot afford the dollar or five dollars yourself, you can soon collect from friends for this purpose the needed funds.

N. B. Not less than thirty sent on the above terms, and only open to January 1, 1884. Single copies 6 cents.

THE CYNOSURE CLUBBING LIST.

Every subscriber to this paper who wishes to take other standard journals will do well to look over our list, and notice how he can expend his money with most economy. The Cynosure at two dollars per year will be sent together with either of the publications below, for the price in cash named in the second column. The price in the first column is what you would have to pay for the two by sending direct to the publisher of the paper named. These prices are for new or old subscribers to the Cynosure, but new only for the other papers.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 20, 1883.

DECEMBER PASSES.

Many subscribers will yet see on the little account pasted on their paper that their subscription expires during December. By promptly attending to the renewal they will contribute greatly to the success of their paper and the cause for which it stands. Every December renewal received during the month gets a good interest, that is, the Cynosure free from the expiration of their subscription till Jan. 1st. Then they have the paper for the whole year 1884 beside.

If each one will add to his effort for a good cause the name of a new subscriber, enclosing $4.00 for both, the two subscriptions will be good till Jan. 1, 1885, and the sender may have also his choice of the following valuable pamphlets:

1. The Batavia Convention pamphlet, with the great speeches on that occasion, illustrations of the Morgan Monument, etc.; or

2. Egypt in History and Prophecy; or, Pharaoh proclaiming God, by the celebrated Robert Patterson, from Hasting's Anti-infidel Library; or

3. The Anti-masonic Scrap Book, a new and enlarged edition now in press, containing all the tracts published by the N. C. A.; or

4. The Island of Madagascar; the excellent history written by Gen. J. W. Phelps and noticed in a late Cynosure.

5. Copies of any of the pamphlets sold by the N. C. A., to the amount of 25 cents.

A CLUB OF FIVE

trial subscribers (two months for 25 cents) will just now be a valuable accession to the Cynosure list. To every friend who will get one up and enclose the $1.25 and addresses plainly written we will send either of the documents mentioned above.

FOR A CLUB OF TEN the sender may choose any two from the above list.

Get the Cynosure circulated in your town. The lodge does not thrive where it is read.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

THE WASHINGTON SLOGAN.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 10, 1883.

Senator Pomeroy, Mr. Ford, Prof. Bailey and myself met on Saturday last in the latter's sitting room. After prayer, and long and earnest consultation we came harmoniously to the following ideas and results:

There has been a Washington Convention talked of since the purchase here, and there is an accumulating impatience at delay. This delay has been caused by Secretary Stoddard's aversion, and that of others, to meet here with a mortgage over our heads; and he is now toiling night and day to raise that mortgage. This has produced the delay.

But we are all agreed to the Washington Convention, at the earliest moment practicable; if possible on the 16th day of January next, the anniversary day, one year from the entrance of the N. C. A. into possession of this building. There are a thousand reasons for such a convention at the seat of our government at that time. Then, the air here is bracing; Congress hard at work; the city beautiful; and, in the words of Bishop Heber,

> "Every prospect pleases
> And only man is vile,"

nor that either, so far as Congress is concerned. For it must not be admitted, for a moment, that a proud, lofty, pure American people, will ever send a vile man here to represent them. The Philadelphia, S. E. Pennsylvania Convention is ahead of us, on the 18th of December; and that may, possibly, somewhat diminish our attendance here, a month later. But we go strong for a convention here; and as soon as our letters bring Mr. Stoddard here, who is empowered by vote to work up one, a call will issue.

We have heard nothing from Mr. Ezra A. Cook, chairman of the National Central Committee of the American party, and the meeting here is ordered and the building owned by the National Christian Association. Now, Robert Ingersoll has a vote, but he is no Christian. Yet we are willing that he shall cast that vote against the lodge, to which he is said to be opposed; though at his brother's grave, he pictured life itself as a sort of lodge "between two barren peaks with silent eternities, past and future, stretching beyond." To such a mind lodges must be mere questions of taste.

Now Senator Pomeroy suggests, and we all endorse his suggestion, that we hold the strongest Washington Convention which, after Mr. Hinman's we can rally.

And, as Christians are citizens as well, and we have the right and custom to say whom we intend to vote for, let us here nominate men who, in our judgment, are fit for our support, with the understanding and proviso, that our meet somewhere about next June; where and when people make their Presidents IN THE CITY OF CHICAGO; said political convention to be called by the National Central Committee of the American party.

Having reached the above results, we adjourned over from Saturday to Monday when we hope brethren Bowes and Grisham will be with us; and the results of our further conference, our paper included, will follow as a part of this editorial.

AT THE MONDAY MEETING.—Messrs. Pomeroy, Ford, Bailey, Grisham, and Blanchard being present, we agreed to obtain a charter forthwith, either from Illinois or West Virginia, creating a joint stock company to publish a paper here, the State to be determined when Mr. Stoddard gets here. The capital stock to be twenty-five thousand dollars, with the privilege of increasing it to one hundred thousand, single shares to be $25 each. We think the paper should start when five thousand dollars are paid in.

Letters were written on Saturday, requesting Secretary Stoddard to report here as soon as practicable, without detriment to what work he has in hand.

A letter to Bro. Bailey from Mr. Needles was reported, in which the latter acquiesces in the joint stock company outlined above; and the utmost unity of opinion and harmony of feelings obtained in the above results of our deliberations; in short, the skies are bright.

The friends of a religious as well as simply a political organ of our cause, will see the importance of putting the Cynosure on a living basis at once. And as every radical reform blends and harmonizes with every other, all will see the importance of the friends of prohibition, civil recognition of God, equal rights, and impartial suffrage uniting in our cause, which includes them all.

TEMPERANCE AT THE CAPITAL CRIMINAL COURT.

DEC. 11.—I have spent the forenoon in Judge Wylie's Criminal Court here, and have come out a prouder, happier man than I have been for many a day. I went to hear Judge Wylie's decision of the case of Gov. Wm. Pitt Kellogg, accused of Star Route bribery, R. Ingersoll being of his counsel. The last time I had seen Gov. Kellogg, he was my representative in Congress from Illinois; and having been nominated by the Galva Watchman and Galesburg Democrat to succeed him, I went to converse with him on the subject. He said, "I shall not run for another term. I am going out of the District; and you have but to say so, and you will be elected. I will do all I can for you." I refused to run; but the recollection of Mr. Kellogg and his kindness, drew me this morning to the court. His case was continued to next term; when, to my joyous surprise, EIGHT LIQUOR CASES were called and dispatched, one after another, and I saw for the first time in my life, law applied to liquor selling in the American Capital.

The juries, both Grand and Petit, were better looking men and much above the average of city juries, with a sprinkling of black faces (one very black) in the panels. The witnesses were more than half colored, and they walked into the box and gave their testimony with ease and manly independence and candor fully equal to the whites, and, in some cases above them,—here, where, so brief awhile ago the mass of their complexion had no legal recognition or existence. It was enough to make long years of abolition odium, toil and endurance seem but "a light affliction which was but for a moment," and gave one a foretaste of the joy when the lodge shall have no more influence in that court than slavery has now.

The prosecuting attorney was a clean-faced, well-looking young man, assistant to the District Attorney, and he had prepared his cases, his testimony, etc., and put them through admirably. The liquor lawyer carried his sign in his face, and his gray head set off by a whisky-battered countenance, helped the prosecution in every case.

The first case was not his, but that of a decent-looking lawyer who said, "Your honor, this case is that of a brewer who has sold his own beer; and, if your honor please, we know that the law is against us, and also the fact; [a laugh] and we only ask a mild sentence, with a promise given of amendment." The "mild sentence" was granted.

The next was keeping his bar open on Sunday. Defendant not present. Judge—"He must be present. Put the case in assignment." That is, post it outside for hearing next day.

The next man was up for "selling without license." No defence, and fined.

The fourth case kept his bar open on Sunday. No proof of sale, for which the fine would be $105. He had the lesser fine.

Another defendant not present. Judge—"Put the case over for to-morrow morning."

Next comes Michael Leach. Jury impanneled and case tried in half an hour. Two colored witnesses swore straight. They had been sent to drink at Leach's bar. Bought four drinks, two of whisky and two of gin. "Who paid for the drinks?" "I did." "It's none of my business where you got the money." "I am willing to tell you. Mr. Raff gave me the money to get the liquor." "What is your business?" "I work for Mr. Raff." "What do you do for him?" "Every thing he tells me to do if it is right." The poor old grog-lawyer appeared cheap before the calm, out-spoken, courteous colored witness. The jury came in, in twenty minutes. "Are you agreed?" "Agreed." "What is your verdict?" "Guilty." "So says one, so say all?" "Aye, Aye." The judge ordered the fine entered.

The judge (Wylie) handled the cases ably and well. He told the jury:—"This sort of testimony [hired testimony] is looked upon with some suspicion. It is right you should do so. It is not ordinarily the highest sort of men who give it. But if you believe their testimony, you must convict. It makes no difference where they got the money to pay for the liquor. Even if they stole the money; and you believe that the liquor was sold in violation of law, you and I are here to enforce the laws as long as they are upon the statute book whether we approve of the law or not. These cases which now are crowding the police courts and this court are a great burden and expense; twelve men must sit here and try every case, and people must learn to obey the laws. If you believe the testimony you must convict."

Next came the case of Mrs. Gibson. "Why was not her husband indicted?" Answer by attorney: "Because she runs the saloon." "The law presumes where the husband is present that the wife acts by his orders." "The case must be dismissed." So in the District of Columbia, "the husband and wife are but one person; and the husband is that person."

Then came a little, skinny, pale, nervous, decent-looking woman, whose lips worked steadily all the while; and who refused to testify because of her nervousness. She was let off because it appeared she did not intend to violate the law, but had filed her application and paid the license money; though the license had not issued.

I was amazed, delighted, to see the dredge of the law thus cleansing the gutters of Washington; and inly prayed that the wave of legislation might speedily and steadily rise till it reached the saloons in the White House and the National Capitol.

I turned to my good friend, the Confederate Major, who had given me a nice seat within the bar, and said: "Major, are not the hands of the Christian Union women in all this?" "They are playing smash with the liquor," he replied. "When the Lord turned the captivity of Zion, we were like them that sleep," said the Psalmist. "Then was our mouth filled with laughter."

Before the war no colored man could sit on a jury, or testify against the white villain who robbed his house or murdered his child. Now he can do both. And the great Niagara of society moves on tranquilly below the cataract and the rapids.

A Confederate captain said at the table to-day, "Fourteen years ago I joined the Masonic lodge, and six years ago a Christian church: and if I must quit one it would be the church!" This is an intelligent and gentlemanly man. Across the avenue a nice young man keeps shop where I called, to trade. "Where do you go to meeting?" "Nowhere," said he. "Do your parents live in the city?" "Yes, sir." "Are not they church members?" "No, sir; or, yes; they belong to the Jonadabs." This is a secret order with a chaplain. O when will Christian ministers understand what eviscerates churches? B.

THE INDIAN "CHURCH OF GOD."

The reports which were first given of Mr. Mozoomdar's visit to this country were misleading, and upon their information the Cynosure contrasted the system which he represented with Freemasonry to the disparagement of a movement which has evidently a different origin, a different philosophy and a different purpose altogether. Mr. Cook, in the Cynosure of last week, briefly yet with great clearness suggested marked distinctions between the two systems. He has, as he told us last spring, made no careful study of the religious philosophy of the Masonic lodge. Having made such an examination, as his habit of profound research would incline him to do were he to undertake the task, his views would be heard everywhere with the deepest interest. To most of our readers the identy of Masonic religion with those systems of secret priest-craft and mystical false worship which in different ages prevailed in Chaldea, Egypt, Phœnicia, Greece and Rome is understood as a fact confessed by every lodge writer of prominence. It will therefore be only necessary to present some facts respecting the Brahmo Somaj (church of God) to which we are indebted to a very able and interesting article in the Missionary Review for July and August, 1878, and our exchanges.

When Keshub Chunder Sen visited Europe in 1870 he was at the head of this movement in India, and so clearly declared his acceptance of Jesus Christ as teacher and guide that it was hoped that he and his followers would definitely accept Christianity in its historic character. But the Brahmo Somaj is still known as a theistic movement merely, greatly influenced by Christianity in its character and aiming at the overthrow of Brahminism, caste and idolatry in India. Chunder Sen defines sin in these words:

"Siu is not aecidental. It is radical. Heaven does not take cognizance of outward crimes, but deals with the root of the evil in the heart. Sin is a moral disease, not merely a legal offense. The root of this disease is in the depths of our nature, and though not manifested always, it exists still iu latent forms."

In a lecture, published in 1879 in the Friend of India, he says:

"Is not a new and aggressive civilizatiou wiuning is way, day after day and year after year into the very heart and soul of the people? You canuot deuy that our hearts have been touched, conquered and subjugated by a superior power. That power is Christ. Christ rules British India, and not the British government. England has sent us a tremendous moral force in the life and character of that mighty Prophet to conquer and hold this vast empire. Nonc but Jesus, none but Jesus, none but Jesus ever deserved this bright, this precious diadem—India—and Christ shall have it."

In a letter to his disciples when on his visit to England Chunder Sen writes urging them to a noble duty and self-sacrifice in their efforts to overthrow the reigning idolatry. The Masonic religion on the other hand would accept what Sen would destroy and would without question fellowship the Mohammedans, the Brahmins or the pagans of any caste and receive them into the lodge:

"The Lord hath purchased you with the price of his abounding grace, and ye are wholly his. Ye cannot uow sell your body or mind or heart to idols—ye cannot worship man or beast or creeping things. Nor can ye in any way take part in idolatrous rites and ceremonies, for the least touch of that unclean thing, idolatry, is defiling. Ye must altogether abjure every form and manner of idol-worship. Nay, ye should do more, Ye must wage war with the awful system of idolatry that prevails in India; ye must declare a crusade against the three hundred and thirty millions of gods and goddesses that rule the country.

"To give up outward idols is easy; but hard, very hard, is it to sever the heart from the ties which bind it the various fascinations of the world, and dedicate it wholly to God. And yet this you must do if you wish to prove true to the theist's name. If it is outward idolatry to adore stocks and stones, it is iuward idolatry to love father and mother, wife and childreu, riches and fame more than God. The theist is bound to abhor and abjure both."

In Mozoomdar's book, "The Oriental Christ," which is published in our language, his account of his finding Christ deserves careful attenqion and reads much like the experience of many in our own Christian churches:

"It was a week-day evening; I forget the date now. The gloomy and haunted shades had suddenly thickened into darkness, and all things, both far aud near, had assumed an unearthly mysteriousness. I was contemplating the state of my soul, and the cure of all spiritual wretchedness, the brightness and peace unknown to me, which was the lot of God's children. I prayed and besought heaven, I cried and shed hot tears. It might be said I was almost in a state of trance. Suddenly it seemed to me, let me own it was revealed to me, that close to me there was a holier, more blessed, most loving personality, upon which I might repose my troubled head. Jesus lay discovered in my heart as a strange, human, kindred love, as a repose, as a sympathetic consolation, an unpurchased treasure, to which I was freely invited. The response of my nature was unhesitating and immediate. Jesus, from that day, to me became a reality whereon I might lean. It was an impulse then, a flood of light, love and consolation. It is no longer an impulse now. It is a faith and principle; it is an experience, verified by a thousand trials."

These brief extracts show what is best respecting the Somajist doctrine. It is to be regretted that Sen and Mozoomdar do not seem to accept, or perhaps to understand, the atonement, to us the soul of the Gospel, the sacrifice of Jesus Christ as the propitiation for our sins. Of this failure to receive Christ fully Mr. Cook said on his late visit to Chicago in an interview:

"Mozoomdar is not more than in the vestibule of Christianity, but his face is turned toward the inner doors. Some radical Unitarians are also within the vestibule, but their faces are toward the outer doors. I believe in paying considerable attention to Chunder Sen and Mozoomdar, for they are walking in the right direction aud making progress toward orthodoxy. He is an eloquent man and a uatural orator, devout as well as able, but he makes two mistakes as to Christianity. First, he overrates the importance of the divisions of evangelical Christendom. Second, he seems not to have fully grasped the truth of Christ's divinity as revealed in the gospels. Third, it is the fault of the Brahmos that they don't pray too much, but that they study too little. Keshub Chunder Sen is a man of the Oriental type of mind; he appreciates religion emotionally. Mozoomdar is of that type that appreciates it intellectually; Christianity is too vast for both; they see but a fragment of it yet. I believe them, however, honest men, and very devout. The missionaries are divided in opinion about Chunder Sen, but I thoroughly believe in his honesty. He can't be called profound although he is devout."

With Mr. Cook, Rev. Dr. Scudder of the Plymouth Congregational church this city, for many years a missionary in India, and Rev. R. G. Wilder, editor of the Missionary Review, also a returned missionary from India, substantially agree. Dr. Scudder believes both the expounders of the Somaj to be Christians, and that their system is practically Christian and the result of missionary effort indirectly developed.

—Bro. W. B. Stoddard, lately appointed State agent and colporteur in New York, lectured in the Baptist church in Dale on Monday evening of last week. New York friends will read his appeal to them elsewhere.

—The College church at Wheaton makes reform topics a special subject on one prayer-meeting evening of every month. Such an occasion last Thursday evening was well attended, and was of especial interest.

—Our Monday morning mail often brings in important commuuications which require immediate publication, yet to do so makes no little inconvenience in the office. Friends who write to us will please bear this in mind and help their own interests and our convenience.

—On Saturday evening a very interesting parlor discussion took place at the residence of Bro. E. A. Cook, former publisher of the Cynosure, on Washington Boulevard in this city. An arrangement had been made for Pres. C. A. Blanchard to meet a Mr. Barry, a young lawyer of Chicago, who had declared his willingness to defend Freemasonry in debate. A large number of friends interested in the subject were present who were much encouraged with the result.

—The Cynosure has endeavored to testify faithfully against the popular but pagan "Christmas" festival at various times during the past year, when the minds of readers would be more free to apprehend the truth than now. The religious press all about us are are filled with weakly-conceived stories and poems upon this un-Christian celebration, which would cease instantly with a change of fashion.

—A Peace Conference is to be held in Albion, Iowa, on the 21st and 22nd inst., to be addressed by a number of speakers from the Friends. The topics include several practical applications of the principles of peace to the present conditiou of society in relation to this important reform. We should be glad to know that others beside Friends were active in this meeting.

—The Cynosure is reminded that the excelleut article "Friends have nothing to fellowship in the Lodge," iu the Nov. 29th number was from The Friend, aud not the Friend's Review. The extract was sent from Philadelphia, with no clue to its origin, but a subsequent letter implied that it was from the paper to which it was credited. Thanks to friend Sellew for putting us right.

HOW TO DO IT.

A TWENTY-FIVE THOUSAND LIST BEFORE JANUARY 1ST.

And all so easily done that you may laugh that it was not thought of before. There are at ordinary computation over 20,000 readers of the Cynosure. Now let each one of these friends get us a two-mouths subscriber for 25cts., and the work is DONE. For with the present list, that will make 25,000 and more. Give your servants in the office this list, and then it is their busiuess to make, if possible, this magnificent list A PERMANENT ONE.

RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

THE GOLDEN TRUTHS SERIES: GOLDEN TRUTHS, WORDS OF HOPE, LIVING THOUGHTS. Edited by Mrs. C. M. Means. Published by Lee & Shepard, Boston. Price $1.25.

The same publishers who have given to book lovers the superbly beautiful Golden Floral Series have in these modestly adorned volumes consulted the taste of many readers both in character and style. The cover beautiful with floral and gilt designs and the mechanical work without flaw set forth gems of poetry and prose from numerous Christian writers. The selections are short and excellent for quiet hours and devotional reading; they are grouped, in the first volume, under the topics "The Inner Life," "Trials by the Way," "Work for Christ," "The Unfailing Friend," "The Heavenly Home." Words of Hope is prepared for those who know the pain of parting with loved ones of earth, and the sections present such words of peace and consolation as will make this a cherished volume to many hearts. The third volume is a happy compilatiou upon "Christian Experience," "The Christian Graces," "Christian Effort," and "The Source of Strength." These charming volumes whether singly or together will make a gift worth a long and high appreciation. For sale in Chicago by S. A. Maxwell & Co.

THE MODEL PRAYER. By George C. Baldwin, D.D. Published by Lee & Shepard. Price $1.25. pp. 298.

This series of eleven lectures by Dr. Baldwin is one of the best upon our Lord's Prayer. Few among the many volumes upon this inexhaustible theme will be read with more interest and profit. The style is practical and vigorous, the analysis careful, the argument able and convincing. The style of the volume is like that of the Golden Truths Series. Sold by S. A. Maxwell & Co., Chicago.

THE PRINCESS. A Medley. By Alfred Tennyson. Illustrated. Octavo. pp. 223. Boston: James R. Osgood & Co. Price $6.00.

A few years ago when the same publishers issued their magnificent Fine Art edition of "The Lady of the Lake" it seemed that the perfection of bookmaking had been reached, and that its beauty of design and exquisiteness of finish could hardly be equalled, certainly not excelled. But this recent edition of Tennyson's "Princess" compels the acknowledgment that the resources of the bookmaker's art were not then exhausted. The "Princess," as a poem, needs no introduction to intelligent readers. It added lustre to the already honored name of its author, and our publishers have given so illustrious a gem a worthy setting. They promised a "superb edition," and have well kept their word. Beside the richness of the binding, the faultlessness of paper and typography, there are a hundred and twenty illustrations by our best American artists, who have most happily conceived and expressed the spirit of the poem. The frontispiece is one of Dielman's charming drawings—a portrait of the Princess, sketched from the poet's lines:

"There at a board by tome and papers sat,
With two tame leopards crouched beside her throne,
All beauty compassed in a female form,
The Princess."

Of this rare combination of high poetic and artistic merit Harper's Magazine well says: "It is unrivalled by any other for the perfection of its typography, and the wealth, beauty and infinite variety of its illustratious. These are thoroughly in harmony with the finely poetical, semi-mediæval, semi-modern spirit of the poem, and enable us to discover new beauties that were latent in it, and to arrive at a more perfect conception of it as a work of art, by causing all its exquisite imagery and subtle machinery, all its moving situations, picturesque scenes and piquant characters, to take a definite shape, as they are made to pass in panoramic procession before the eye, robed in the thousandfold minute and dainty accessories with which the poet lends a softened grace or imparts a heightened beauty to the genuine flesh-and-blood actors in his half-real, half-legendary tale." The illustrations prepared for this elegant volume, a hundred and twenty in number, were drawn and engraved under the supervision of A. V. S. Anthony, the drawings having been executed by the best American artists.

Dio Lewis's Monthly for December is a strong number. We note some of the best things. "Maia, an Every-day Story," translated from the Germau by a granddaughter of the famous historian, Mr. Wirt. "My Insane Asylum Experience," by Edward A. Bundy, is the story of an unhappy victim of one of our asylums. "Home and School Teaching," by L. F. Gardner. "A Spirited Brooklyn Girl" shows up in a piquant way the nonsense of our fast young men who pretend they cauuot afford to marry, but spend twice as much upon their personal indulgences as would meet the expenses of a modest family. "Afterwards," by Sarah K. Bolton, is a tender thoughtful discussion of married life. "The Disciples," by Elder Joshua C. Goodrich, a preacher of that denomination, gives a clear idea of the church of which President Garfield was a member. "Up and Dowu in Norway," by Prof. E. P. Thwing, gives us a flying, breezy trip through portions of that interesting country. "The Idea and Outlook of the Quakers," by Benjamin Smith, a leader among them, may give information about our excellent "Friends," which will be new to many people. "Observations in Natural History," by M. E. Lazarus. "Divorce" is a thoughtful paper on this much discussed topic, by Emily Faithfull, the English philanthropist. "Sanitary Science," by Joseph Drexel Holmes. "Hygiene of the Brain," by Dr. M. L. Holbrook, is a very important discussion of the conditions under which our brains may reach their highest and best work. The editor has iu this number several long and important papers, all in his peculiar style, attracting and interesting all classes, one of them, "Vivisection, or the Act of Dissecting Living Animals," the longest article in this number, will awaken indignation and tears.

Vick's Illustrated Magazine closes the year with a charming contribution to the floral wreath of the year. No season does it leave unadorned with beauty copied from the summer flowers. The December number has also a finely illustrated article ou Harrisburg, Pa., besides contributions on The Condition of Horticulture," "Fruit Raising," "Winter," "Experiment Station" and "The Seed Crop." The "Correspondence" is interesting and practical, "Foreign Notes" good; and the other departments full and attractive.

Edward Eggleston continues iu the January Century his series on early colonial history, with a paper on "Husbandry in Colony Times." In connection with the recent attempts at silk culture in the United States, his story of the trials of the colonists in starting this industry will be of interest. Before corn had grown in the Jamestown settlement sufficient to keep away starvation, mulberry trees had been planted, and the culture of silk begun. In almost every American colony the same experiment was tried, and always with discouraging results. Silk was at one time believed to be the long-sought staple that should take away the reproach of barrenness from New England. Dr. Eggleston describes also the beginnings of tobacco, rice, indigo and wheat culture.

THE HOME.

AN APPEAL.

"Let the peace of God rule in your hearts." COL. 3: 15.

Why is thy human heart distrest
When all the world is full of rest,
And in Christ Jesus man is blest?

You scent the sweets in thymy vales,
And hear soft notes in summer gales,
And feel the calm that there prevails.

You tread the hills where heather grows;
Caressed by every breeze that blows,
And find unbroken, deep repose.

You catch the soothing melody
Of gentle waves on summer sea,
And know how glad is liberty.

You test the happy solitude
In the deep heart of the wild wood,
And learn that quiet must be good.

And yet, a glance, a fear, a thought,
May turn these teachings into naught,
And leave thee tossed and tempest wrought.

Oh, timid soul, be strong again,
And learn from restlessness and pain
To win the peace that shall remain!

And yet thou need'st no strong endeavor,
To win the peace that passeth never;
God gives it to thee now, forever!

Oh, bow thee meekly down. and take,
With thankful heart, for His love's sake,
The gift that shall thy heaven make!

If but that angel rule within,
'Twill banish care and grief and sin,—
Oh, let the peace of Christ come in!

ASHAMED OF SELF.

I remember hearing of a young convert who got up to say something for Christ in the open air. Not being accustomed to speak, he stammered a good deal at first, when an infael came right along and shouted out, "Young man, you ought to be ashamed of yourself, standing and talking like that." "Well," the young man replied, "I'm ashamed of myself, but I'm not ashamed of Christ." That was a good answer.

Hedley Vicars took a very good way when he laid down his open Bible on the mess-table, and when his brother officers began to joke and laugh at it he began to defend it. That was how he confessed Christ among his ungodly comrades.

I had a conversation some time ago with a man in America, and we talked about confessing Christ. "Well," he said, "I must go home and confess Christ to-night." When he got home he couldn't help feeling a little timid, and his wife said, "What's the trouble?" He had made up his mind it would be good to begin by erecting a family altar.

Next morning he got up half an hour earlier and called for his family, and taking his Bible, he read a bit, and when he got down to pray he couldn't make a long prayer, but God blessed him, and his whole family were soon converted.

'Now I've noticed that nine-tenths of the men who want to avoid a certain cross get just the cross they want. A man says, "I want to be converted but I don't want to converted amongst the Baptists, the Presbyterians or the Methodists." I've always noticed that he gets converted just right there where he didn't want to. The fact is, man wants his own way, and God would teach him that he must take his will. When a man gives up his will and says, "Lord I take thee to be my Priest and Prophet and King," then he learns to confess Christ. —D. L. Moody.

DANGER TO THE FAMILY.

It is the home, far more than school and college, than Protestant religion or free Parliament, that has made England the nursing mother of modern civilization. No school system, however broad; no rational government, however strong; no church life, however zealous, can compensate for the lack of pure, peaceful, and permanent homes. For the home is the natural kindergarten preparing for all future education, the primary commonwealth teaching the first lessons in self-government, God's appointed wicket-gate of entrance upon a natural, healthy, Christian life. It creates a desire for knowledge, without which the school cannot educate; it forms a habit of obedience, without which the State is a despotism or a mob; it cultivates the elements of faith and love, without which religion is superstition and cruelty. A nation without homes is on the high road to ignorance, irreligion and anarchy. And there are silent, subtle, and powerful influences in America working to destroy home life.

1. Reacting against the Roman Catholic doctrine that marriage is a sacrament, void unless blessed by the church, Protestantism announces the dangerous doctrine that it is simply a civil contract. The parties who are competent to make a contract are equally competent to unmake it. From the doctrine that marriage is simply a partnership naturally followed the doctrine that the partners may dissolve it at will; then, that either party may apply to the courts for a dissolution and a division of the property—that is, the children. What secession is to the nation, divorce is to the family. If the nation is a mere compact of States, any State may dissolve it; if the family is a mere compact of individuals, either individual may dissolve it. The result is the same in both cases—death. The multiplicity of divorces is no mere local disease, but a Protestant epidemic; divorces have been steadily increasing in number in every Protestant State in Europe as in America. Men marry experimentally. In a few of the States marriage is still for life; in more of them it is for good behavior; in several of them it is only for the pleasure of the parties. The false doctrine that "marriage is a civil contract" has brought forth its fruit. It has taken some years to ripen. We have not yet quite got back to Roman morals; but in Connecticut and Indiana it is as easy and almost as cheap to get a divorce as to get married; the courts cut the marriage knots almost as fast as the minister can tie them; and if the Samaritan woman had only been a Puritan she would not have blushed to be told that she had had five husbands; the allowance would not have been extraordinary. Facility of divorce was for a time impeded by the fact that some States refused to recognize divorces obtained across the border. But the legal principle has been recently laid down, and we do not question that it is reasonable as well as legal, that courts of every State must recognize as valid the judgments legally pronounced by the tribunals of any other State. The dissatisfied partner in New York State has now, therefore, only to cross into New Jersey or Connecticut to get his partnership dissolved, and the New York courts recognize the dissolution. In short, under this principle of the "comity of the States," the marriage laws of the nation are not more strict than those of the loosest States.

2. While divorces are multiplying marriage is made more difficult. Education has developed wants more rapidly than it has developed the means of satisfying them. Who in America any longer believes in Paul's doctrine, "Having food and raiment, let us be therewith content?" With all our "higher education," what school or college teaches the lesson Paul acquired in his prison at Rome, "I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content"? Who reads the "Shepherd of Salisbury Plain?" Our boys and girls are taught everything—except self-denial. Our young birds do not know how to build their own nests together, and make the very season of nest-building a season of merry song and joyous flight. There are many and blessed exceptions; but in innumerable instances American education unfits for the commonplaces of American life. The girl who has learned French, music and drawing, and perhaps Latin, Greek and mathematics, is reluctant to descend to the chemistry of the kitchen and the engineering of the parlor and the bed-room; and the boy who has studied in college no problem half so hard as how he can get the greatest number of "cuts" with the smallest number of demerits is loath to exchange the selfish freedom of his errant life for one in which he can win the joys of love only at the cost of self-denial. So he waits unmarried until he can earn enough to hire all service both for himself and his wife; marriage is belated; and its chief joy, that of mutual service and sacrifice, is thrown away altogether for the meaner pleasure of a life of self-indulgence, if not of luxury. The clerk, the salesman, the mechanic—men of intelligence, with a hope and a future before them—earn from $12 to $30 a week. This is enough to live on, with economy and industry; it is not enough to live on unless both husband and wife are care-takers and home-workers.

3. The same causes which lead to delayed marriage lead to childless homes. Children are no longer counted a blessing from the Lord; and the Hebrew text, "Happy the man who hath his quiver full of them," is cited only as a jest. It used to be almost an obloquy to be without children; it is now in some circles almost an obloquy to have them. Our New England homes often sent forth ten, twelve, or fourteen children; the same roof now barely shelters two or three. A large family in a cultured American home is a rare exception. Infanticide is a crime so common that nothing but its exceptional monstrosity prevents it from being almost respectable. Family physicians are constantly called in to prevent the coming of new life into the world; and that they do not often comply is due far more to the ethics of the profession than to the morals of their patrons. Lack of education is partly responsible for this; men who are little above the brutes in power of self-control marry for lust rather than for love, without either the necessary preparation or the intention to assume the duties of fatherhood. The "higher education" is partly responsible; the minds of our girls have been educated at the expense of their bodies; and they shrink from the responsibilities, the cares, the inconveniences, and the pains of maternity, because physical development and accompanying strength and courage have not kept pace with nervous and brain development and social and intellectual culture. We educate our children to be artists, and musicians, and teachers, and doctors, and nurses, and even lawyers and lyceum teachers; but we dare not tell our sons and daughters that God intended them to be parents, and train them for that which is their highest and noblest calling.

4. The migration from the country to the towns and cities, the relative decrease of rural population and increase of urban population, and the consequent gregarious herding of Americans in close quarters, is destructive of home atmosphere. No man has an ideal home until he has a roof of his own, and some ground about it. But even a roof of his own is not in the wildest dream of the most visionary of the average city resident. He huddles his family together in a few rooms in a tenement; or he hires a flat; or he "boards;" or he "stops" at a hotel. The flat constitutes an apology for a home; the boarding-houses, the tenement, and the hotel do not even remotely suggest one. Children brought up under such circumstances do not know what the word home means. Imagine the "Cotter's Saturday Night" transferred to a tenement house near Tompkins Square; or to the almost equally crowded though luxurious tenement called a "hotel" on Fifth Avenue. The quiet, the privacy, the sacred restfulness, the harbor-like qualities, the very integrity of the home, are wholly lost. The average city life in America comes as near home life as an aviary in a museum does to a village of nests in a grove. There is still mating, and breeding, and some singing; for nature will assert itself. But the joyousness, the liberty, the individuality of the home nest are all wanting.—Christian Union.

SCIENTIFIC ACCURACY OF THE BIBLE.

Dr. Samuel Kinus, the author of "Moses and Geology," has for some little time past been giving a series of lectures in the drawing rooms of the aristocracy of England on "The Marvelous Scientific Accuracy of the Bible. The last took place at the Earl of Shaftesbury's, and was attended by a large and very distinguished company. Dr. Kinus, in carrying his audience through his course of reasoning described the various geological strata and the story told by the fossil plants and animals of the earth's condition during the various epochs of its history. He especially interested them, however, in his description of fifteen creative events which he showed were placed by Moses in the correct order of sequence according to the latest discoveries in science. Dr. Kinus then proved that the number of changes that can be made in the order of fifteen things is 1,307,672,368,000—and therefore if Moses placed fifteen important creative events in their proper order, without the possibility of traditional help, it is a very strong proof of his inspiration, for group them as one may, and take off a further percentage for any scientific knowledge possessed by him, still the chances must be reckoned by hundreds of millions against his giving the order correctly without a special revelation from God. To lead his auditors to appreciate this, Dr. Kinus mentioned that a clock beating seconds would take over 30,000 years to tick a trillion times; and that if any fifteen different events could be written down once in every ten minutes, it would take 24,000,000 years to write all the variations that could be made in their order, writing them day and night without intermission, and to further illustrate it, he distributed slips of paper for each to write down the first fifteen letters of the alphabet in an order known only to himself, in something of this order:

g m h d a j e k c f e n i o l and not one corresponded with his. He told them that if all the people in the world were to try to imitate his unknown order, there would be still a thousand chances to one that the whole 1,200,000,000 attempts would be incorrect.

Or, in other words, if all the people in a thousand worlds, each having a population equal to our own, were to try, there would still be a probability that not one list would agree in sequence with the unknown list. After this he asked how will the skeptic explain the marvelous, nay miraculous, accuracy in sequence of the Mosaic cosmogony.—London Record.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

WHERE DO THE WRINKLES COME FROM?

"Where do the wrinkles come from?"
And joyous little Grace
Looked gravely into the mirror
At her rose-tinted face.

"Where do the wrinkles come from?
Why first, dear, I suppose,
The heart lets in a sorrow,
And then a wrinkle grows.

Then anger comes a tapping,
And the heart's door opens wide;
Then hastens naughty envy,
And discontent and pride.

"And the wrinkles follow slowly;
For the face has for its part
To tell just what is doing
Down in the secret heart.

"And the red lips lose their sweetness,"—
"And draw down so,"—said Grace,
"And the lovely youthful angel,
Goes slowly from the face.

"Watch the gate of the heart, my darling,
For the heart is the dwelling-place
Of the magical angel of beauty
Whose smile is seen in the face."

HOW JOSEY WAS CAUGHT.

Josey liked to keep office for his "Uncle Doctor," as he called him. But the doctor did not always like to trust him there when he was called away, for Josey had a habit of looking into things that made the doctor fear he might get into mischief, for Josey was a meddlesome boy. One day, however, he found himself aloue, and began to look at everything on the table. The electric battery pleased him most. "Oh! I know how to fix this," he said. "If any man came in that wanted 'lectric treatment, I could do it as well as Uncle Doctor. There! now it's all right! Now you take hold of these handles." The taking hold was easy enough, but letting go was quite another matter. Any little boy or girl who has ever tried it will know how Josey's arms tingled and ached, but he had to hold on, he could not let go. "You got caught that time, Josey," said his uncle, when he had set him free. "Now, remember that bad habits hold fast to a boy worse than an electric battery does, and are harder to get rid of. And meddling is a very bad habit." "I won't have anything more to do with either of them," said Josey.—Sunbeam.

NO GOOD FROM PASSION.

"Will putting yourself into a passion mend the matter?" said an old gentleman to a boy who had picked up a stone to throw at a dog. The dog had only barked at him in play.

"Yes, it will mend the matter," and quickly threw the stone.

The dog became enraged, sprang at the boy and bit his leg, while the stone bounded against a shop window and broke a pane of glass.

Out ran the shop-keeper and seiz'd the boy, and made him pay for the broken pane.

He had mended the matter finely, indeed!

Take my word for it, it never did or never will mend the matter to get into a passion. If the thing is hard to bear when you are calm, it will be harder when you are in anger.

If you have met with a loss you will only increase it by losing your temper.

There is something very little-minded and silly in giving way to sudden passion. Set yourself against it with all your heart.

Try to be calm in all your troubles, and when greater ones come you will be better able to bear them bravely.—Sel.

EMMA'S MISTAKE.

"O mamma!" said Emma, looking up with flushed face, "there is just the loveliest story in here! It is about a little girl who was ouly ten years old, and her mother went away to see her sick sister, and was gone for a whole week; and this little girl made tea and toast, and baked potatoes, and washed the dishes, and did every single thing for her father—kept house you know, mamma. Now I'm most ten years old, and I could keep house for papa. I wish you would go to Aunt Nellie's and stay a whole month, and let me keep house. I know how to make toast and custard, mamma, just splendidly; and Hattie said she would teach me to make ginger-cake, some day. Won't you please to go, mamma?"

"I don't think I could be coaxed to do it," said Mrs. Eastman. "The mother of that little girl in the book, probably, knew that she could trust her little daughter; but I should expect you to leave the bread while it was toasting, and fly to the gate, if you heard a sound that interested you; and I should expect the potatoes to burn in the oven while you played in the sand at the door. I couldn't trust you in the least."

"Mamma," said Emma, with surprise and indignation in her voice, "why do you say that? You have never tried me at all. Why do you think I wouldn't do as well as a girl in a book?"

"Haven't I tried you, dear? Do you know it is just three-quarters of an hour since I sent you to dust the sitting-room and put everything in nice order for me? Now look at those books, tumbled upside down on the floor, and those papers blowing about the room, and the duster on the chair, aud your toys on the table—while my little girl reads a story about another little girl who helped her mother."

"Oh, well," said Emma, her cheeks very red, "that is different; nothing but this old room to dust. If I had something real grand to do, like keeping house for papa, you would see how hard I would work; I wouldn't stop to play, or to read, or anything."

"Emma, dear, perhaps you will be surprised to hear me say so, but the words of Jesus Christ show that you are mistaken."

"Mamma!" said Emma, again, and her voice showed that she was very much surprised.

"They certainly do—listen: 'He that is faithful in that which is least, is faithful also in much; and he that is unjust in the least, is unjust also in much.'

"And these, also, are his words: 'Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things; I will make thee ruler over many things.' Can I say that to you this morning?"—Pansy.

TEMPERANCE.

At one of the largest Republican meetings held in Iowa last month, where thousands of people congregated, a school house on wheels was marched through the streets, drawn by four horses, and preceded by a brass band, and in the house a school teacher was teaching the children. This was followed by a saloon fitted upon wheels with a representation of a bar, drunken men, and a bar-keeper tempting boys to driuk. These were accompauied by a banner, on which was inscribed, "Look on this picture, and theu on that." The people decided for the home and against the saloon by twenty-five thousand majority.

At a meeting of the English "Anti-Tobacco Society and Anti-Narcotic League," Manchester, England, statements were made respecting the effects of tobacco, calculated even more than the pernicious weed itself, to destroy the nerves of smokers. Among other evils which were said to be the result of smoking the following were specially enumerated: Cancer, affections of the bronchial tubes, loss of appetite and imperfect digestion, disease of liver and respiratory organs, nervous diseases generally. One curious fact was mentioned with deep regret—namely, that "of late years smoking had increased among medical students."

Masou Long is oue of the temperanee preachers of the West. He travels through Indiana and Ohio in a wagon drawn by a span of handsome horse, like tooth-powder venders, and is accompanied by four singing students, two from Oberlin and two from Delaware College. At night the wagon is lighted up with torches, and he harangues the listeniug multitudes in the open air after the singing has brought them together. He tells them that six years ago he was a drunken reprobate, but a little girl persuaded him to sign the pledge, and since then he has been a happy man. Mr. Long is further described as a man of no special advantages, save perhaps in the matter of sheer lung-power, and yet through his earnestness he interests large audiences, and serves the cause well. His method of "reaching the masses" is certainly worth considering, and a credit to the head and heart that conceived it.

A periodical devoted to music says a number of musical instrument makers have forbidden their workmen to drink beer while engaged in their work, for the reason that it impairs their skill. They might object to it on moral grounds, but do not. Their objection is purely a business one. Now, if drinking beer is thus injurious drinking whisky and other stronger drinks must be more so; and if it interfere with skill in making pianos, it must be no less hurtful to those engaged in other work. Very many men, however, think they cau only do good work when partially under the influence of it, and certain employers, unlike these of the musical instrument makers, believe they get more and better service when their workmen are partially drunk. It makes them "enthusiastic"! —United Presbyterian.

THE SHOEMAKER AND LITTLE WHITE SHOES.

The following true story has often been told from the platform, by Mrs. Abby Fisher Leavitt, oue of the first of the Crusaders of 1873–4, and since that time one of the ablest workers in the field:

"One morning during the Crusade a drunkard's wife came to my door. She carried in her arms a baby six weeks old. Her pale, pinched face was sad to see, and she told me this sorrowful story: 'My husband is drinking himself to death; he is lost to all human feeling; our rent is unpaid, and we are liable to be put out into the street; and there is no food in the house for me and the children. He has a good trade, and his earnings all go into the saloon on the corner near us; he is becoming more and more brutal and abusive. We seem to be on the verge of ruin. How can I, feeble as I am, with a babe in my arms, earn bread for myself and children?'

"Quick as thought the question came to me, and I asked it: 'Why not have that husband of yours converted?' But she answered hopelessly:

"'Oh, there's no hope for such a thing. He cares for nothing but strong drink.'

"'I'll come and see him this afternoon,' said I.

"He'll insult you,' she replied.

"'No matter,' said I; 'my Saviour was insulted, and the servant is not above his Lord.'

"That very afternoon I called at the little tenement house. The husband was at work at his trade in a back room, and his little girl was sent to tell him that a lady wished to see him. The little girl, however, soon returned with the message, 'My pa says he won't see any one.'

"But I sent him a message proving that I was in earnest. I said, 'Go back and tell your pa that a lady wishes to see him on very important business, and she must see him if she has to stay till after supper.'

"I knew very well that there was nothing in the house to eat. A moment after, a poor, bloated, besotted wreck of a man stood before me.

"'What do you want?' he demanded, as he shuffled into the room.

"'Please be seated and look at this paper,' I answered, pointing to a vacant chair at the other end of the table where I was sitting, and handing a printed pledge to him.

"He read it slowly, and then, throwing it down upon the table, broke out violently:

"'Do you think I'm a fool? I drink when I please, and let it alone when I please. I'm not going to sign away my personal liberty.'

"'Do you think you can stop drinking?'

"'Yes, I could if I wanted to.'

"'On the contrary, I think you're a slave to the rum shop down on the corner.'

"'No, I ain't any such thing.'

"'I think too, that you love the saloon-keeper's daughter better than you do your own little girl.'

"'No, I don't either.'

"'Well, let us see about that. When I passed the saloon-keeper's house I saw his little girl coming down the steps, and she had on white shoes, and a white dress, and a blue sash. Your money helped to buy them. I come here, and your little girl, more beautiful than she is, has on a faded, ragged dress, and her feet are bare.'

"'That's so, madam.'

"'And you love the saloon-keeper's wife better than you love your own wife.'

"'Never! no, never!'

"'When I passed the saloon-keeper's house, I saw his wife come out with the little girl, and she was dressed in silks and laces, and a carriage waited for her. Your money helped to buy the silks and laces, and the horses and the carriage. I come here, and I find your wife in a faded calico gown, doing her own work; if she goes anywhere she must walk.'

"'You speak the truth, madam.'

"'You love the saloon-keeper better than you love yourself. You say that you can keep from drinking if you choose; but you helped the saloon-keeper build a fine brick house, and you live in this poor, tumble-down old house yourself.'

"'I never saw it in that light before.' Then, holding out his hand, that shook like an aspen leaf, he continued, 'See that hand. I've got a piece of work to finish, and I must have a mug of beer to steady my nerves, or I cannot do it; but to-morrow, if you call, I'll sign the pledge.'

"'That's a temptation of the devil.' I did not ask you to sign the pledge. You are a slave, and you cannot help it. But I want to tell you this: There is One who can break your chains and set you free.'

"'I want to be free.'

"'Well, Christ can set you free, if you will submit to him, and let him break the chains of sin and appetite that bind you.'

"'It's been many a long year since I prayed.'

"'No matter; the sooner you begin the better for you.'

"He threw himself at once upon his knees, and while I prayed I heard him sobbing out the cry of his soul to God.

"His wife knelt beside me and followed me in earnest prayer. The words were simple, and broken with sobs, but somehow they went straight up from her crushed heart to God, and the poor man began to cry in earnest for mercy.

"'O God! break these chains that are burning into my soul! Pity me, and pity my wife and children, and break the chains that are dragging me down to hell. O God! be merciful to me a sinner.' And thus he cried to God, and he heard him and had compassion upon him, and broke every chain and lifted every burden, and he arose a free redeemed man.

"When he arose from his knees he said: 'Now I will sign the pledge and keep it.'

"And he did. A family altar was established, the comforts of life were soon secured—for he had a good trade—and two weeks after this scene his little girl came into my husband's Sunday-school with white shoes, and a white dress, and blue sash on, as a token that her father's money no longer went into the saloon-keeper's till.

"But what struck me more than all was that it took less than two hours of my time thus to be an ambassador of Christ in declaring the terms of heaven's great treaty whereby a soul was saved from death, a multitude of sins were covered, and a home restored to purity and peace.' —People's Advocate.

Arkansas with her Home Protection law, which puts the mothers' death signature to the saloon system, has ridden three-fourths of the State of that system. It has given to the traveling public a line of railroad one hundred and sixty-five miles long, aloug which not a drop of intoxicating liquor can be procured. Can Kansas or Maine do better than that?—Union-Signal.

God promised forgiveness to your repentance; but he has not promised a to-morrow to your procrastination.

is probably some substance of fact behind these rumors, but how complete the organization of the party is, or how numerous its membership, we do not know and have not cared to inquire. It is, of course, a foolish project, and mischievous so far as it has any influence, but we do not regard it as formidable.

A secret party is so repuguant to all American ideas, so inconsistent with the fundamental principles of political morality, that only under peculiar conditions can it have even a temporary success. Secrecy has a sort of fascination for some minds, shallow and narrow for the most part, and it is easy for persons whose minds are of that character to fancy that with a machinery of grips and pass words, a hierarchy of officials, with pretentious titles, and a fraternity bound together by oaths aud a common purpose, they can wield a tremendous influence, and hold other parties and politicians at their mercy. But these are fantastic illusions. They give for a time a delicious sense of self-importance, but it is a transitory delight. Before the leaders in this grotesque travesty of politics have begun to suspect that their importance is imaginary, their followers have discovered it, and can scarcely take their places in the secret meetings without laughter at the ridiculous aspects of the whole business. A little later not one of them will be willing to acknowledge that he had any share in it, and the men who have been solemnly warned that they must come in, or leave all hope of political advancement behind, will point with pride to the fact that they resisted these temptations, as giving them a strong claim upon the confidence and the votes of their fellow citizens.

The next day, Dec. 7th, the Spy published the following fearless letter upon the same topic:

OUR HOMEMADE SECRET PARTY.

Mr. Editor:—In your answer to an inquiring friend as to the probable existence in this city of a political organization knowu as the "Dark Lantern" or "Know Nothing" party, you ur questionably voiced the sentiments of most thoughtful persons, and of all who are conversant with political history or have memories reachiug back to the disgraceful times when another "Know Nothiug" party controlled this State for a period of three years.

It is truc, as you suggest, that a secret party is so repugnant to all American ideas, so inconsistent with the fuudamental principles of political morality, that it can only succeed under peculiar conditions; and it is also true, as you say, that our homemade secret party is foolish, wrong-headed and mischievous in its intent, but is it true that it is too foolish to be capable of serious mischief? History teaches that at times and under "peculiar conditions," if you please, great numbers of human minds, "shallow and narrow," it may be, become suddenly and unaccountably possessed with the idea that man's weal and God's glory depend upon the execution of certain measures which may have the basis of truth in them, but which in connection with other problems of the day, are relatively of little importance. Thus it sometimes happens that a bad cause, which at first appears like a little cloud only the size of a man's hand, will quickly assume gigantic proportions, and make the whole heavens black with clouds. Senator Hoar was right wheu he receutly asserted that God has so fashioned the human intellect that in time the majority of minds will come to believe what is right and true, but unfortunately in the present "shallow aud narrow" minds are ever prone to be led astray by sophistry and demagogism, and hence a lie will travel from Maine to Georgia while Truth is putting on her boots.

The first "Know Nothing" party came into power in this State with a suddenness that surprised even the acutest and most far-sceing politicians of that day, and for three years it held undisputed sway in our political affairs, during which time it passed more bad laws and did more to disgrace and humiliate the State than any other party has ever done in all our history. Its leader and governor is still living iu Boston, but he is regarded with such contempt by all respectable people that most people away from his immediate neighborhood believe him to be dead, and his name cannot be found in most of the encyclopedias. He does not know much, but after his unfortunate experience it is presumed that he knows cuough not to join another "Know Nothing" party.

I call attention to him and his party as a warning to those gentlemen in Worcester who are trying to inaugurate a movement in this city to capture the Republican party by stealth, aud to ruu it by secret conclave. I do not wish "to make a bugbear of this secret party," but to call the attention of the public to the fact that we have in our midst a secret political organization of many hundred members, who have frequent meetings and subscribe to a solemn oath. Last year they exercised great influence in the Republican caucuses for the nomination of municipal officers, and this year they took the entire control of every Republican caucus in the city. Everywhere they proceeded in "regular order," and refused to allow the slightest variation in the programme agreed upon in their secret meetings. They voted in nearly if not every caucus "to instruct the secretary to cast the vote of the caucus in favor of delegates" whose names appeared upon printed ballots prepared apparently by one set of men in a meeting or meetings to which they alone were admitted. And even the same form of motiou was kept up in the convention for the city, as there the secretary was instructed to cast the ballot of the couvention for the aldermanic candidates. And thus by their actions if not by their words—do they warn men that "they must come in, or leave all hope of political advancement behind." Can it be wondered at then that life long Republicans, who have too much self-respect to become part of "a machinery of grips and pass-words," and to submit their judgment and consciences to the decision of a secret assembly, are loath to take their chances of a nomination iu caucuses dominated and controlled by such influences, and prefer to appeal to the enlightened and independent judgment of their fellow citizens, who have not bowed the knee to Baal in the councils of our homemade secret party?

B. W. POTTER.

THE CHURCHES.

—A great revival in the First Methodist church of Jackson, Mich., Rev. John Graham, pastor, has resulted thus far in over five hundred conversions, and the good work is still progressing.

—The Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, D.D., has beeu installed pastor of Bethany Presbyterian church, Philadelphia. The sermon was preached by Rev. S. T. Lowrie, and fully two thousand persons were present on the occasion.

—The press dispatches say that American missionaries of the Unitel Presbyterian church are charged with causing excitement among Christians and Mohammedaus in Upper Egypt. The Copts, it is also said, have assumed a defiant attitude, and a popular outbreak is impending. It is more than improbable that the only missionaries who have succeeded in Egypt, and whose services, up to the rebellion of Arabi Bey last year, were commended on all sides, are now stirriug up civil strife. The truth when it is known will put the blame where it belongs and not on these men whose wisdom and integrity has stood many a test.

—On Sabbath the College church, Wheaton, took up its annual collection for the anti-lodge work and both morning and evening services were given up to a discussion of the subject before good audiences. Rev. A. J. Chittenden preached a very able sermon in the morning from the text, "Who is my neighbor?" In the eveniug the students' Society of Inquiry assisted with papers on the Labor Unions by Principal D. A. Straw and on the Grand Army of the Republic by Frank F. Ames, son of Rev. W. W. Ames of Menomonie, Wis.

—George C. Needham, evangelist, has beeu recently engaged in a series of revival services in Newport, Rhode Island. Bible readings were held in the day-time in the Y. M. C. A. hall, and iu the evening very large meetings accompanied by wonderful spiritual power were held in the Friends' meeting-house.

—A revival is now in progress at Friends' meetiug in Des Moines, Iowa, couducted by J. H. Douglass. The meetings are large and full of interest.

—There has becu a very marked religious awakening at Earlham College duriug the present term.

—Rev. J. T. Gallagher, lately of Elba, Genesee county, New York, has removed to Falls City, Fayette county, Pa., where he is now in the employ of the Geueral Baptist Association of the latter State. Correspondents will please note the change of address.

—There is a precious revival in the Baptist church at East Hardwick, Vt. Between 60 and 80 have been converted, among them many in middle life, and one over 75 years of age.

—The revival at the Worthen Strect Methodist church, Lowell, Mass., is a remarkable one. It began a year ago and continues to this day. Of the converts 146 have been received into fellowship, and about 160 are on probatiou. The Sabbath-school has increased, the attendance on the general prayer meetings is so large that they are held in the church.

—A revival spirit seems to be breaking out in many of the churches in the State of Maine. In the Methodist church at Cherryfield, 75 have asked for prayers and 50 have been hopefully converted. At Berwick (Methodist) 70 have been converted. At Richmond a revival is in progress iu all the churches—Methodist, Baptist aud Congregationalist—the work taking a stronger hold of the Congregational church. A deep work of grace is also being felt in the Methodist church at Augusta. A great revival is in progress in the Presbyterian church of Knoxville, Tenn. Over 150 souls have already sought the Saviour, and the interest is increasing.—Intelligencer.

—The Frieuds of Toronto, Canada, have had a very successful revival, resulting in the conversion of a uumber of persons, mostly young meu. The meetings lasted for nearly three weeks, first as union meetings, afterwards continued by the Friends. There were conversions almost every night, even up to the closing meetiug, and the church in that city is growing in interest. After the meetings closed in Toronto, Luke Woodward went to Norwich to assist Howard Nicholson, who was holding meetings in that place. The meetings there are still in progress with some definite results, and with increasing interest. James F. Barker is holding meetings near Whitby; and William S. Barker in the uorthern limits of Yonge St. Quarterly Meeting. At both these places a number of couversions are reported.—Christian Worker.

—In the revival meetings at Eau Claire, Wis., under the direction of Dr. L. W. Munhall, of Indiana, one hundred and thirty-five have made a confession of faith in Christ, and given their names to the church. The meetings are still continued with unabated interest.

—At the Centenary Methodist Episcopal church of Charleston, S. C., one hundred and forty-one probationers were recently received into full membership, in the presence of an immense congregatiou. About two hundred still remain on probation, most of whom expect soon to be received into full connection.

—A memorial church of Luther is to be erected in Leipzic. The first Lutheran church in the Tyrol has just been opened in Meran. The Diet of Spires in 1529 is also to be commemorated by the erection of a Lutheran church in that town. Collections for the building of Lutheran churches will be extensively made on November 10 and 11.

—The four great Bible Societies of Great Britaiu and America last year issued 4,989,284 copies of the Scriptures.

—The venerable George Muller, who has just completed his seventy-eighth year, started on the preceding day for an evangelistic tour in India.

—Dr. Otis Gibson of the San Francisco Chiuese Mission, has been unanimously requested by the Oregon Conference to organize a Chinese mission in Portland, where it is estimated 7,000 Chinese reside.

—A converted actress, Mrs. Neilson, of Norway, is attracting great attention in Sweden by reading sermons and speaking in Methodist chapels and public halls. She began by readiug Mr. Moody's sermons; and, being an excellent reader, she did not lack audiences. Lutheran ministers opened their churches to her until they ascertained that she was identified with the Methodists. Then they shut their churches against her.

THE

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist aud every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the speeial objeet of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topie, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and ineidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperanee, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

THE PUREST IS THE BEST.

In the selection of SUNDAY-SCHOOL PAPERS, the most important point to be considered is the moral tone of the subject matter. If this is of a questionable character, the papers should be shunned, no matter how large, how attractive, or how low the price. Such papers are

COSTLY AT ANY PRICE.

The country is being flooded with S. S. literature that is largely composed of what may be properly termed "RELIGIOUS FICTION," the tendency of which is to create a distaste for sound reading and foster an appetite for fiction of a more deleterious character.

The engravings of these papers are equally objectionable. In many cases a lady or girl dressed in the height of fashion is made the HEROINE OF A STORY, thus putting the highest sanction to extravagance and pride. With such instructors in our Sunday-schools we cannot expect the children to grow up with a love for sound literature and with correct ideas of Christian propriety. With a view of supplying S. S. papers, of a pure and elevating character, the publishers are issuing

FOUR MONTHLY PAPERS.

They are FREE FROM FICTION, and the cuts are chosen with great care. While they are thus carefully edited, they are not lacking in attractiveness. They are well printed on beautiful tinted paper. The children are delighted with them. The very low price at which this line of S. S. papers is issued, places them within the reach of even schools of limited means

WHAT EVERYBODY OUGHT TO KNOW.

Make new, stiff rope flexible by boiling it two hours in water.

Loosen screws and nuts by pouring on the thread a little kerosene.

Prevent the formation of a crust in teakettles by keeping in them an oyster shell.

Pare apples by pouring scalding water on them, then quickly slip off the skins.

Make modeling clay moist and plastic for a great length of time by kneading it with glycerine instead of water.

Scour knives with brick dust or powder by using, instead of a rag and water, a potato cut smooth at the end.

Prevent weeds growing on gravel walks by sprinkling them well with a solution of two pounds blue vitriol in six gallons of water.

Restore yellow flannels to white by soaking them in a solution of soap suds and ammonia water. Wash the flannels afterward in clear water.

Preserve carpets and prevent dust rising from between the boards of floor, by laying down under the carpets large sheets of paper.

Prepare indelibly marked wooden labels for garden use by writing with a soft lead pencil on the surface of the label moistened with linseed oil.

Prevent ivory knife handles from cracking while washing by soaking the blades in a pitcher of water, instead of laying them down in the pan.

Keep iron farm implements from rusting during the winter by rubbing them over with kerosene. Treat stoves the same way during the summer.

Clean brass with a solution made by dissolving one tablespoonful oxalic acid and two tablespoonfuls tripoli in a half pint of soft water. Apply with a woolen rag, and after a few minutes wipe dry and polish.

Clinkers may be loosened from fire bricks by throwing in the fire-box, when very hot, two or three quarts of oyster or clam shells, or a less quantity of salt, allowing the fire to go out, and then cleave off the clinkers.

Loosen ground glass stoppers by wrapping around the neck of the bottle a thick rag wet with hot water. Remove the stopper before the heat reaches and expands it. If sticky, drop a little camphene between the neck and stopper.

To make wood indestructible from rot or fire, immerse it in a saturated solution of borax, heated to the boiling point. Let the wood remain in the solution 12 hours; take out, dry, immerse again in a weaker solution three hours, and dry.

Make lead pencil writing indelible by laying the written sheet face upwards in a shallow dish and cover with skimmed milk; dry carefully. Pencil writing may be made partially indelible by moistening it with saliva or even by breathing slowly upon it.

The use of tobacco for over 5,000 years, according to one author, was confined to Central America. In the year that Columbus discovered America, while lying off Cuba, he sent two men ashore to reconnoitre. On their return they reported that they saw "the naked savages twist large leaves together, light one end in the fire, and smoke like devils."

To make cloth waterproof, dissolve eight pounds of oleic acid in six quarts of alcohol; add gradually twenty pounds sulphate of alumina, leave twenty-four hours to settle; carefully pour off the liquid and save the remaining deposit: filter this through flannel and press it into a cake. Dissolve one pound of this in fifteen to twenty gallons of water, strain, saturate the fabric thoroughly, remove, and let dry. The fabric is waterproof, without having its ventilating qualities destroyed.

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE.

Assists Mental Labor.

Prof. ADOLPH OTT, New York, says of the Acid Phosphate: "I have been enabled to devote myself to hard mental labor, from shortly after breakfast till a late hour in the evening without experiencing the slightest relaxation, and I would not now at any rate dispense with it.

DR. JOHN BULL'S

Smith's Tonic Syrup

FEVER and AGUE

Or CHILLS and FEVER.

AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamp on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN J. SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, of Louisville, Ky. Examine well the label on each bottle. If my private stamp is not on each bottle do not purchase, or you will be deceived.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary, the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. NOYES, 149 Power's Block, Rochester, N. Y.

An Awful Responsibility.

EVERYBODY has something to say about consumption. We all deplore its terrible ravages, but only a few of us seem to have enough common sense to take the proper means of preventing it. It is as simple as "two and two are four," that Hale's Honey of Horehound and Tar, taken as a remedy for coughs, colds, difficult breathing, hoarseness, or any of the symptoms which pave the way for that terrible destroyer, will effect a radical and rapid cure of the ailment, and avert all danger. Whoever, under these circumstances, neglects to resort to the true specific, assumes a fearful responsibility. Of druggists.

HAND BOOK OF Freemasonry,
BY

E. Ronayne,

Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 339 Chicago.

Gives the correct or "Standard" work and ritual of Masonry; the proper position of each officer in the Lodge room, order of opening and closing the Lodge, dress of candidate, ceremony of initiation, the manner of giving the signs, grips, etc., are fully illustriated and explained. In short, it is

A Complete and Accurate Lodge Manual.

The high standing of Mr. Ronayne in the fraternity, his popularity and success as a teacher and lecturer in the Lodge, together with the testimony of high Masonic authority, leaves no doubt of the accuracy of this work. It is rapidly becoming a standard work in the hands of ACTING LODGE OFFICIALS, and those who desire to post themselves on the workings of the order. The price is so low that it is within the reach of all. Sent postpaid securely wrapped on receipt of price 184 pages, Paper covers, 35 cents. Elegant cloth with beveled edges and gilt stamp, $1.00. The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

NIGHTS IN A BAR-ROOM

T. S. Arthur's great temperance book, complete and illustrated. By mail, 5c each; 50c per doz. By express, $3.50 per 100.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC THE GREAT SOURCE OF CRIME.

Leaves from the diary of an old lawyer.—By Hon. A. B. Richmond, author of "Court and Prison," etc. A book of intense interest, rivaling the famous "Diary of a Physician," and, in its truthful, terrible pictures of the power and crime of intemperance, excelling the well-known "Ten Nights in a Bar-room." The temperance issue of the present time is Shall prohibition be partial or entire? Shall the branches of the death-bearing tree be pruned and trimmed, or shall the tree itself be cut down and its stump be torn up by the roots? The answer of "Leaves from the Diary" is, "Cut down the tree, tear up the roots, leave not a shoot or shred behind." It is certainly a very strong and eloquent volume. Complete edition on fine, heavy paper, with colored lithograph of Sewall's stomach plates. By mail, 30c each, $3 per doz. By express, $20 per 100. Abridged edition, by mail, 15c; $1.25 per doz. By express, $9 per 100.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC AND THE SOBER CITIZEN.

An able and telling work, by Rev. J. B. Sherman which brings out the effects of the liquor traffic in a new light. The following are some of the commendations of the first edition

"The author drives the nails of conviction through and clinches them."—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

"Speakers and workers in the temperance field will find valuable aid in this pamphlet. It is crowded with convincing facts."—Zion's Herald

New revised and enlarged edition. By mail, 10c each, $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

DRINKS FROM DRUGS.

A startling exposure of the liquor traffic, by El. Johnson. A book that cannot fail to arouse the American people to the gigantic swindle now being perpetrated. The writer was offered $10,000 by a leading brewer to keep still. Liquor not only doctored, but made entirely from drugs. Extracts from a whole library of secret books, giving receipts for making and doctoring; advertisements of essences, facsimiles of labels, engravings, etc. etc. Claret, port, sherry, champagne, whisky, brandy, gin, rum, etc., all out of one barrel, and made at less than 25 cents a quart. Wine that never saw grape juice; cider that never saw apples; beer factories in place of breweries, fine cream ale without barley or brewing; whisky from arsenic; millions of gallons of liquor that pays no revenue tax. The farmer's corn and barley "all in your eye." A wholesale liquor store in a ten-foot square cellar; more French wine sold in New York City than is produced in the whole of France. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By Express, $6 per 100.

W. C. T. U. ORGANIZATION AND WORK.

A book of general information on how to organize and run successfully a Woman's Christian Temperance Union. This book should be widely distributed among W. C. T. U. presidents, pastor's wives and other representative women. By mail, 10c. each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

BAND OF HOPE SONG BOOK.

Band of Hope Songs.—Fifty-seven choice pieces for juvenile temperance gatherings, Bands of Hope, etc. Old, familiar tunes, also choice new words and music. Words far in advance of anything else issued. By mail, 8c each; 75c per doz. By express, $4 per 100.

DANIEL'S BAND.

A temperance concert exercise, with parts suitable for all ages; entirely new. Songs, recitations, dialogues, etc., of a thoroughly aggressive character; sure to carry weight with the rendering of it. By mail, 5c each; 50c per dozen. By express, $2 per 100.

TEMPERANCE ANTHEM BOOK.

Temperance Anthems.—A new idea; nothing else of the kind in existence. Will insure good music by the choir at temperance meetings. Forty-eight pages of choice anthems by ablest writers. By mail, 15c each; $1 50 per doz. By express, $10 per 100.

Family, Oxford and Gift Bibles at Half Price.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—Eight hundred and twenty-four bills and joint resolutions were introduced in the House last week Monday, or nearly an average of seven to each member. Among the bills introduced was one by Finerty, of Chicago, providing for the construction of four gunboats and three additional steel cruisers for the United States Navy. Finerty is an O'Donnell avenger, and wants to fight England.

—Speaker Carlisle will announce the standing committees next Friday, and it is expected the holiday recess will begin with adjournment that day.

—The National Republican Committee has elected Senator D. M. Sabin, of Minnesota, chairman, vice Marshall Jewell, deceased, selected Chicago and June 3 as the date for holding the next National Republican Convention.

—Owing to difference of opinion with his colleagues touching editorial treatment of public questions, Carl Schurz has severed his connection with the New York Evening Post.

—It is stated that Mr. Rogers, treasurer of Lewis county, New York, became demented when he found that his accounts appeared to be $4,000 short, when, in reality, the county owed him $17.

—Eight hundred and fifty trains arrive and depart from Chicago daily. Add to these the fleets of sailing vessels and the lines of steamers, and some idea of the commeree of Chicago is obtained.

—During the late gale in Chesapeake Bay the Baltimore schooner Mary Anna foundered, and the crew of nine men perished. Four were swept off the deck of the craft, and five remained in the rigging and were frozen to death.

—Four boys sons of wealthy residents of the Fourth Ward of Milwaukee, have been arrested for setting the recent incendiary fires. Forming a "Buffalo Bill organization," they built a "pirates den" in which they kept dime novels, pistols, and lassos, and occasionally raided the pantries of wealthy people, whose mysterious loss of jellies and pies led to the lads' arrest.

—Hiram Sibley, the great seedsman and farmer, is about building an immense block of warehouses and stores in this city, occupying ground on the north bank of the river on Clark street. The structure will be 200 by 240 feet. The Clark street front will be seven stories, and the warehouse in the rear nine stories high.

—Vigilantes in the Niobrara valley (D. T.) recently lynched five horse and cattle thieves. Four others, now in jail, if not punished by the law, will share the same fate.

—The locomotive engineers of the Canadian Pacific railway are on a strike for higher wages, and the workshops have been closed. The traveling public are greatly inconvenienced, and the mails have been dispatched by sleigh. Trouble is expected at Winnipeg when non-union engineers arrive from the East.

—A terrible storm raged in the British Islands Wednesday, causing the wreck of many vessels, destroying numerous structures, killing and drowning scores of persons, and flooding low-lying districts. The Dutch steamer Ank foundered in the storm, and the crew of twenty-one persons perished. While being towed into Greenock harbor during the storm the ship Albertine broke loose from the tug, was driven out to sea, and has not been heard of since.

—The coast of Holland was strewn with casks of powder and dynamite from wrecked vessels. Forty thousand kilogrammes of powder and 500 kilogrammes of dynamite were picked up by customs officers.

—A hurricane in the Province of Alicante uprooted 400 olive trees. At Denia an immense sea demolished the quays, inundated the town, and wrecked fourteen vessels.

—It is stated that Ferry has informed President Grevy that Great Britain has resolved to intervene between France and China only after an agreement on the subject with Germany and America.

The germs of disease are neutralized by Samaritan Nervine. Try it $1.50.

A correspondent, Mr. S. L. Morgan, Walken, Mo., says: "Samaritan Nervine cured my boy of fits." You can get at Druggists.

NOTICE.

"Freemasonry Illustrated," first seven degrees, PAPER COVER, is out of print, hence do not send for it. But the same, CLOTH BINDING, price $1.00, can be had at this office as usual.

A PRESENT.

Have you thought of making your friend a New Year's present of the Christian Cynosure? It will be sent 14 months, from Nov. 1, 1883, to Jan. 1, 1885, for only $2.00, if ordered before Nov. 15. Can you spend that amount of money in a more acceptable or profitable way than to make sixty visitations to your friend through the agency of your paper? WILL YOU TRY IT?

NOTICE.

Persons write occasionally, saying, "I sent a remittance so and so, but the tag on my paper it not changed." Such inquiries are proper, and the explanation is this: when a subscription is received it is entered at once on the book and the letter filed for future reference if needed, but the printed mailing list is not changed until a sufficient number are received to require the printing of a new list. If but few subscriptions are received, the change may be delayed for a month or more, but when the list fills up rapidly it requires frequent revision. If the date on your paper is not changed within four weeks after you remit it is the safest way to drop a card to this office.

The Need of the Nation

Can only be supplied by an acknowledgement of Christ's authority and an acceptance of His Divine Law as the

BASIS OF NATIONAL LIFE.

To secure this, and maintain all existing Christian features of the American government, is the object of the National Reform Association, an organization undenominational in character, with a membership of many thousands, including leading ministers, educators, authors and jurists all over our nation.

THE CHRISTIAN STATESMAN,

A large, elegantly printed sixteen-page journal, advocates the principles of this Association, and discusses all public questions in the light of the Christian religion. The Maintenance of our Sabbath Laws, and of the Christian Law of Marriage and Divorce, the use of the Bible in the Public Schools, the Prohibition of the Liquor Traffic, the Mormon Question, the Rights of the Indian and the Chinaman, receive constant attention in its columns. It gives thorough expositions of the International Bible Lessons, and their bearing on national questions is not overlooked. Price, $2.00 per year. ☞ Sample copies free. Address,

KEEP IT MOVING!

THE TWO MONTHS-FOR-25-CENTS LIST.

The readers of the CYNOSURE have it in their power to easily make up a CYNOSURE list to TWENTY-FIVE THOUSAND before January 1st. See "How" on another page.

NEW YEAR'S FOR YOUR PASTOR.

Try the Cynosure one year.

NEW YEAR'S FOR YOUR REPENTING MASONIC FRIEND.

The Cynosure may prove a blessing for which he will never cease to thank you.

A NEW AND VALUABLE ARRANGEMENT

provided for the Cynosure readers during the year 1884, is a special exposition of the Bible lesson for Sabbath schools, by

THE AUTHOR OF "HOLDEN WITH CORDS."

This talented writer has consented to contribute during the year a weekly application of the international lessons, and bring the Scripture truth to bear upon our reform principles. Parents and Sabbath school teachers will appreciate this valuable assistance in their work of instruction. If the tide of lodgery is stopped the streams that feed it must be turned into other channels. This is a grand work to be done in home and Sabbath-school instruction—teach the children to be Christ-like, open-hearted, undeceptive, and they will never swear to vain secrets in the lodge. The Cynosure lesson exposition with God's blessing will be an invaluable assistance in thousands of homes during the coming year. Let every reader by all means in their power extend its influence and circulation.

DON'T forget to read our clubbing list carefully, page 7; and the offer of the CYNOSURE with the Anti-Infidel Library for $2.50; or with the American Agriculturist, Dictionary and engraving for $3.20. See last page.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR filled with heaven's richest blessings we pray for all our readers, but especially for those living remote, to whom this number will come seasonably, we wish all the joy and hope and peace that can make the opening of the year memorable.

John Milton said: "Reformers look small in the eyes of the world, they are so far in advance, but large in the eyes of God, they are so much nearer him: for all real reform is Godward."

The Rev. A. M. Milligan, D.D., of Pittsburgh, who fought side by side with Wm. Lloyd Garrison for the abolition of slavery, that "sum of all villainy," says that five years before the successful issue of the anti-slavery conflict there was less reason to hope for such a blessing than there is to-day for the freeing of this nation from the worse evil of a practical rejection of God's authority in our national life.—Statesman.

New York printers are repenting their over-much confidence in their secret union. Tired of its exactions the Tribune and Evening Post of that city have discharged their "Union" men and engaged others who had not two masters expecting service. But a worse feature of the case is that the new men on the Tribune are so exposed to the assaults of the lodgeites that a large police force is needed and the printers are lodged and fed in the building.

There yet needs to be some missionary work at the North in favor of the principle of the late Civil Rights act. The Baptist ministers of this city have not forgotten their indignant protest against the churlishness of a Madison street caterer who would not allow the presence of a colored guest, though nobody objects to a room full of colored waiters. The other evening a colored company gave an entertainment in Vicksburg, Michigan, and after it was over were refused admittance at all three of the hotels of the place and were obliged to take a freight train to Kalamazoo to find shelter for the night. It might help educate such inhospitable landlords if their names were given to the world in connection with their crime against human nature and the God that made man to differ in the color of their skin.

THE NATIONAL REPUBLICAN nominating convention is fixed for June 3, in Chicago. The Democratic National committee meets in Washington, Feb. 22, next, to fix the place and time of their National nominating convention. The American party Central Committee has not yet reported. That convention will probably be in Chicago. There are several conventions to intervene. One at Philadelphia last week, one at Washington soon after; and it is to be hoped a grand New England convention at Northampton, which is endorsed and approved by Rev. Dr. Tarbox of Boston, and Hon. Chas. Almy, New Bedford, Mass. The latter gentleman has been requested to preside. He was the Prohibition candidate for governor and received a fair vote in spite of the Butler boom.

AN IMPORTANT TESTIMONY to Dr. Rankin was lately given by Huntly, the pastor of the Metropolitan Metholist Episcopal church in Washington who had rallied a small crowd by a two week's meeting. He said to them, "Affiliate with some church. It will be better for you. Join the Baptists; join the Presbyterians; but don't join the Congregationalists, for they won't take care of you." The only Congregationalist church is Rankin,s who is a sincere reformer, as far as God has given him understanding, courage and strength, and he has, perhaps, the largest Protestant congregation in Washington. He will not bow in the idolatries of the lodge, stands square on the Fourteenth Amendment, and Satan and clerical jugglers dread his church, as most exposed to the doctrines of reform and a pure worship. Notice that this Methodist preacher has no word of warning against Universalist, Unitarian, and other like churches, only the Congregational.

In times of general sinning and apostacy like the present, many good, yet weak men, are apt to imagine, because they resist the corruption of the times, that they have, and they only, the true theory of holiness, and that they can sanctify the world by teaching it. Inskip was one of these men of good intentions, and defective understanding. He really thought he could "spread holiness over these lands" as Wesley did, by teaching sentimental and experimental holiness amid the Masonry and other abominations of the age which have fastened upon the churches, and that without rebuking them. His system failed, as the good man's body has, by paralysis.

Old Isaac Watts who sleeps in Bunhill Fields, among the accumulated saintship of ages, taught from David the only true theory and doctrine of sanctification possible—

"Now I forbid my carnal hope
Each fond desire recall;
I give my mortal interest up,
And MAKE MY GOD MY ALL."

PART IRON AND PART CLAY.—What trust can safely be put in the lodge-wing of Prohibition? The Masons who lead that wing are sworn to aid their brethren in the other parties, and that means to betray Prohibition in favor of Masonic brewers and distillers. In Kansas the lodge betrayed and defeated St. John, after nominating him by an overwhelming vote in the Republican State Convention. He was betrayed and defeated by professed Prohibitionists!

The professed Prohibition Gov. Sherman of Iowa, betrayed Prohibition in that State, and remitted the fines of the saloonists!

Last November the New York Democrats had a good man and Prohibitionist to head their ticket as candidate for Secretary of State. Lodge and liquor defeated him, though every other man on their ticket was elected!

How can open, fair-minded Christian Prohibitionists trust their lodge-wing which does not trust them; but shuts its secret doors in their faces, even when they professedly meet for temperance! "How can two walk together except they be agreed?"

SOJOURNER TRUTH.

BY REV. C. C. FOOTE.

For some forty years a woman has been threading her way up and down the nation, the like of whom the world has never seen before and is likely never to see again. That woman was Sojourner Truth, who has just closed her unique life of near a hundred years, at Battle Creek, Mich. It was my good fortune to have been acquainted with her for over thirty years. This acquaintance commenced in the city of Philadelphia, where she was holding a series of meetings night after night with crowds that thronged to listen to her lectures. She seemed to be an inexhaustible fountain that would edify or please an intelligent audience. The amount, the variety and character of her personal experience was probably never equalled in this or any other country.

Sojourner was a child of slave parentage. Both her parents died in an open shanty of starvation and cold. Her own children, five in number, were born while she was yet a slave. Her slave life was well nigh one unsuspended scene of cruelty. Her freedom came by act of emancipation in the State of New York for all over forty years old, and those under forty ten years later. After her emancipation she awakened to spiritual consciousness and it was as if volcanic fires had burst forth from their rock-bound restraint. There was nothing in the universe so real or so present to her consciousness as God. At first he was a consuming terror, then infinitely attractive in Jesus. Here is a specimen of one of her early prayers when seeking the rescue of one of her children from bondage, "O God, you know how much I am distressed, for I have told you again and again. Now God, help me get my son. If you were in trouble as I am and I could help you as you can me, think I wouldn't do it? Yes, God, you know I would do it. O God, you know I have no money, but you can make the people do for me and you must. I will never give you peace till you do, God."

Passing some ten years the last of which she spent in the city of New York she "was called by the Spirit to travel east and lecture," i. e., proclaim to others her own experience and knowledge of Jesus. Here is a briet statement of one who became acquainted with her during her first Gospel crusade:

"I send you this living messenger as I belleve one that God loves. Ethiopia is stretching forth her hands to God. You can see by this sister that God does by his Spirit alone teach his own children things to come. She will tell you some new things. Let her tell her story without interruption and you will see she has got the lever of truth that God helps her to pry where but few can. She cannot read or write but the law is in her heart."

At an early stage in her religious history this strangest of women formulated a theological system of her own by the teaching of the Spirit as she believed. When she learned of the world of wonders contained in the Bible as read to her by others, she was filled with the profoundest amazement and delight. But she wished no comments from others. "Read it again," she would say, "and God can tell me himself what he means." Dr. Lyman Beecher is reported to have said to a company of ministers to whom she had spoken, that she knew more theology than any of them.

The original name of Sojourner was Isabella But it came to her, she said, on leaving her home in New York that she must have a new name—"And it came to me that the name was Sojourner." But being asked "Sojourner what?" she exclaimed, "O God, give me a name with a handle to it!" "And it came to me in that moment like a voice," she said, "just as true as God is true—Sojourner Truth—and I leaped for joy—Sojourner Truth!"

By exercising her powers she soon became a fluent and powerful speaker. Her commanding figure, tall and straight, her skin black as night, her sparkling eyes, her powerful and sonorous voice, her fervor of spirit and thrilling stories accompanied by her wonderful singing powers, won for her a reputation that created a wide-spread demand for her presence. There has probably no person lived in this age that could control and subdue a mob so effectually as she. A song would charm a croud of mobocrats from their work of mischief to listen, then by her persuasive speech and store of anecdotes she would exorcise their spirit of evil, and then with motherly authority and another song, she would say, "Now children, go home and be quiet," and they usually made haste to obey. Opposers would sometimes raise objection in her meetings, but they never ventured to do it but once. Her answers were perfectly annihilating. At one time a pro-slavery doctor called in question her sex and proposed a committee of investigation, and quicker than can be written she turned upon him and said, "Who shall the committee be, men or women?" The audience saw the dilemma, and overwhelmed the poor man with jeers and laughter.

The enemies of reform probably never met a more terrible overthrow than they encountered by her at a woman's rights convention at Akron, Ohio. The cause at that early day was very unpopular. Nearly all the clergy and leading persons of the town were present in opposition. The little band of reformers were sorely pressed. One claimed superior intellect for men; another, that Christ was not a woman, but a man; another, that women are the weaker vessel and needed the constant aid of the stronger sex. Sojourner sat quietly in a retired corner with her head bowed, listening to the opposition. But her time had come, and slowly rising she came to the front and stood erect, with eye piercing the upper air like one in a dream. She began, "Well chilern, what is all dis here talkin about? Dat man ober dar say dat woman needs to be helped into carriages, and to have de best place ebry whar. No body eber helped me into carriages or ober mud-puddles or gives me any best place"—and, raising herself to her full height and her voice to a pitch like rolling thunder, she asked—"and arn't I a woman? Look at me! Look at my arm! [and she bared her right arm to the shoulder showing her tremendous muscular power.] I have plowed and planted and gathered into barns and no man could head me—and arn't I a woman? I have seen my chilren mos all sold off into slavery and when I cried out with a mother's grief none but Jesus heard—and arn't I a woman? Den dey talks bout intellect. What's dat to do with woman's rights or nigger's rights? If my cup won't hold but a pint and your'n holds a quart would'nt ye be mean not to let me have my little half measure full?" And she pointed her significant finger and sent a keen glance at the minister who made the argument. The cheering was loud and long.

"Den dat little man in black dar, he say woman can't have as much rights as man cause Christ wan't a moman. Where did your Christ come from?" Rolling thunders could not have stilled that crowd as did those deep and wonderful tones as she stood there with outstretched arms and eyes of fire. Raising her voice still louder she repeated, "Where did your Christ come from? From God and woman. Man had nothing to do with him."

The above is but the beginning of that wonderful speech. Almost every sentence was cheered with roars of applause. The victory was complete.

There were enough of these encounters in her life to fill a volume. Sojourner hearing that the government were enlisting colored men into the service at Detroit, she gathered up a quantity of supplies at Battle Creek and came to the city. Procuring a carriage I went with her to the camp. After an introduction the officer in charge ordered a parade and Sojourner mounting a box poured out the fullness of her great soul in a powerful speech. Pointing to their uniform she told them that God had chosen them to set the white people free as well as the colored. Soon after several companies were ordered into a near field for a drill, followed by a large crowd of spectators who were ordered to one side of the ground. After a few evolutions the order was given to charge! The crowd was gone in moment, but there stood Sojourner, unmoved as a granite statue, and the soldiers passing parted to the right and left and made the welkin ring with shouts of applause. When asked if she was not afraid, she said, "I know'd they wouldn't hurt me."

During the few days she was with us her joy in view of the signs of the times was in constant overflow. She would walk the room by the hour rehearsing to her laughing and weeping listeners the thrilling events of her eventful life. During most of the first three years of the war she lectured to stir up the people to help it forward. In 1864 she went to Washington (speaking in many places on the way) to look after the freed people. A history of these labors would require a volume. From President Lincoln, with whom she had a delightful visit, she obtained a commission for her new field of labor. Thus offi cially equipped she passed to the freedmens' village in Virginia where were thousands of her people recently freed from a life of bondage, destitute of everything but ignorance, vice and poverty. For over a year her hands and head and heart were full of teaching, preaching, nursing, watching, praying, counseling, comforting, and aiding in all possible ways the flock of her charge.

The utter poverty of these long-abused people, filled her heart with sorrowful apprehensions for their future. She therefore set out on a lecturing tour through the Eastern and Northern States to stir up the people to petition Congress to set apart unoccupied lands in the West for homesteads for those who would occupy them. By her earnest appeals many prominent journals and philanthropists were enlisted in the enterprise. But though characterized by wisdom, mercy and justice the end was never attained. A mighty revolution is to be wrought out before the Congress of the United States will become what it should be—a father to the poor.

A world of thrilling incidents during these journeys must be passed over. Though the burden of her addresses were the wants of the freedmen, she nevertheless administered sharp rebukes whenever she found any abuse or folly in society. Here are her views of dress reform: "I'm awful hard on dress, you know. Women, you forget that you are the mothers of creation. You rig yourselves up in panniers and Grecian bend backs and flummeries; yes, and mothers and grand-mothers wear high-heeled shoes and humps on their heads, and put them on their babies, and puff them out so that they keel over when the wind blows. O, mothers, I'm ashamed of ye. With goose wings on your heads as if you were going to fly, and dressed in such ridiculous fashion! What will such lives as you live do for humanity?

The last dozen or more years of her life were filled with travel and lectures. The infirmities of her great age pressed lightly upon her. In her last sickness her intellect was undeaded, and her spiritual vision undimned. And he who had so long been the guiding star of her pilgrimage illumined her pathway through the valley and shadow of death.

Many years ago Bishop Haven said of her, "There is no more deserving lady in the land than Sojourner Truth," Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe said, "I never knew a person who possessed so much of that subtle controlling personal power called presence as she." Wendell Phillips says that he has known a few words from her to electrify an audience and affect them as he never saw an audience affected by any other speaker.

Detroit.

Exaggerated speech makes one careless of the truth. The habit of using words without regard to their rightful meaning, often leads one to distort facts, to misrepresent conversations, and to magnify statements in which the literal truth is important to be told. You can never trust the testimony of any one who in common conversation is indifferent to the import and regardless of the power of words.—Peabody.

WEEK-DAY SERMON.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

"As brother Peck used to say, "It is hard trimming between Christ and the world."

I have forgotten the talk which brought out the above sentence. I only know that it struck me with a fine sense of quaintness as well as of truth, like a saying of one of the old English Non-conformists—those sturdy souls that calmly put loyal favor on one side, and the divine joy of renouncing all things for Christ on the other; and then made their choice, deliberately with their eyes open,—the choice that Moses made when he left the pomp and grandeur of the proudest court in the world behind him, to feed sheep forty years in the silence and solitude of the desert. If he had been like many Christians of the present day he would probably have reasoned that he could do most good by remaining at the court; and by the proper measure of graceful conformity to its customs and pleasures might even convert Pharoah! But thank God, he never thought of such a wavering, temporizing policy, or the race would have mourned another "lost leader," fallen from his place among the morning stars into that "blackness of darkness,"—the limbo of a grand opportunity gone by forever.

"Who was brother Peck?" I naturally inquired.

"Well, he wasn't a minister, he was only a class-leader, and a blacksmith by trade; but he could give us as good a sermon as any preacher I ever heard. I shall always remember a remark he made one evening when Mr. F and I walked over to see him. Said he, "If I could choose the life that would make me perfectly happy, I would go forth taking no earthly possession with me only a change of clothes tied up in a handkerchief; and travel about preaching Christ to perishing sinners."

"He never had his wish," added Mrs. F. "He died that same week very suddenly."

Truly the ways of Providence are not our ways. It gave me a pang to think of that life-work finished before noontide, that voice hushed forever that could have spoken so eloquently for Jesus. Years ago his forge fires went out, but who shall say that this consecrated blacksmith lived in vain though to mortal eyes he wrought no great work in the earth? The words the humblest speak for God, though their very names may have faded from human memory, are as eternal as if engraved on imperishable brass. They are like the Alpine evening song travelers tell of. One mountaineer first lifts the keynote, then another voice takes it up, and so it is carried on and repeated from cliff to cliff. Who knows or cares for the solitary singer that first started the strain?

"It is hard trimming between Christ and the world." Verily brother Peck, of all the true words you spoke in your day and generation none were truer than these. There is a vast deal of pleasure to be got out of a pilgrim's life, of real, right down hearty enjoyment,—but there must be no looking back toward Egypt; even a wish for its dainties will spoil angels' food. If we could only realize this fact the church would be full of happy Christians. To be sure it would be death on church fairs and sociables, but it would be life to many a soul, thirsting for salvation, and hungry for holiness.

MUST MASONS LIE?

BY REV. ISAAC HYATT.

Does a Masonic oath necessitate lying? We answer, if adhered to, it does.

We acknowledge this is a serious charge to bring against an oath receiving the approval of wise and good men. Certainly unless it can be sustained, it ought not to be made. The proof of the accusation is at hand. It is in the oath itself.

Dear reader, lay aside your personal interests; do not allow your judgment to be biased by the respect you may have for your Masonic or Anti-masonic friends; take the vail of preconceived opinion from your eyes and read the oath:

"I, A B, of my own free will and accord, in the presence of Almighty God and this worshipful lodge of Free and Accepted Masons, dedicated to God, and held forth to the holy order of St. John, do hereby and hereon most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear that I will always hail, ever conceal and never reveal any part or parts, art or arts, point or points of the secret arts of ancient Freemasonry, which I have received, am about to receive, or may hereafter be instructed in, to any person or persons in the known world, except it be to a true and lawful brother Mason, or within the body of a just and lawfully constituted lodge of such; and not unto him, nor unto them whom I shall hear so to be, but unto him and them only whom I shall find so to be after strict trial and due examination, or lawful information."

We will not read further lest you might be shocked at the inhuman penalty that is to follow its violation.

Understandest thou what thou readest? It does not appear very ambiguous. It says as plainly and as guardedly as anything can be said, that the secret arts and mysteries of ancient Freemasonry shall never be revealed only to Masons or in a Masonic lodge. And it says as plainly and as guardedly, that they shall forever be concealed from all except duly tried and tested Masons. There is a wide difference between a promise never to reveal a thing, and one always to conceal it. The former seldom, if ever, necessitates lying, the later frequently does.

Suppose you come to a Mason with a Masonic oath correctly revealed and ask him if it is true. It is not enough for him to refuse to tell you. If he keeps his oath in some way he must try to make you believe it is incorrect. Hence, if the oath ought to be kept, and he admits by word, look, or any act it is correctly revealed, he certainly lies. For the best standard authorities in morals teach that where even silence, knowingly, under existing circumstances may be construed as affirming or denying, it may have all the elements of a lie. And if he does not endeavor to make it appear that it is false, he violates his oath and is a liar. So he cannot stand still, go forward, nor turn to the right or the left without telling a lie.

Must Freemasons lie? Most assuredly they need not. No man is under obligation under any circumstances to falsify the truth. Hence, for this reason, if for no other, no man is under obligation to keep a Masonic oath, but under the highest obligation to renounce it with penitent confession to God and man, that he may receive pardon for his sin in taking an oath at variance both with human and divine law.

RELIGIOUS CLAIMS OF FREEMASONRY.

EXTRACTS FROM THE CYCLOPEDIA OF FREEMASONRY, BY OLIVER AND MACOY, WITH NOTES BY REV. J. W. RAYNOR.

NOTE.—This Order is proved to be a religious one, inasmuch as its halls and temples are claimed to be consecrated, or set apart for sacred and holy purposes.

Oliver and McCoy's Cyclopedia, p. 536, Art. Temple:—"An edifice erected for religious purposes. As the grand symbols of Freemasonry are a temple and its ornaments, and to construct temples was the business of the original Masons, some remarks upon these structures cannot but be instructive," p. 538. "Each of the three temples holds an important place in the symbolism and instructions of Freemasonry."

Art. Oblong:—"The tabernacle with its holy emblems, was a type of a Masonic lodge. It was an oblong square, and with its courts and appendages it represented the whole habitable globe. Such is also the extent of our lodges. The tabernacle was supported by pillars, and the lodge is also sustained by those of W. S. and B. [Wisdom, Strength and Beauty]. They were equally situated due East and West. The sacred roll of God's revealed will and law was deposited in the Ark of the Covenant; the same holy record is placed in a conspicuous part of our lodges."

NOTE.—The Holy Record so conspicuous in Masonic lodges, is the Bible, the Koran, the Vedas of the Hindus, or the so-called sacred writings of the country where the particular lodge is held.

"The Altar of Incense was a double cube, and so is our pedestal and stone of Foundation."

NOTE.—In English lodges the sacred record or books of the law lies open on the Worthy Master's pedestal, as they have no altar as in American lodges.

"The covering of the Tabernacle was composed of three colors, as a representation of the celestial hemisphere; such is also the covering of a Mason's lodge. The floor of the Tabernacle was so holy that the priests were forbidden to tread upon it without taking off their shoes;—the floor of the lodge is holy ground.

Holy Ground, p. 131.—"The lodge is situated on holy ground. The first lodge was consecrated on account of three grand offerings thereon made, which met divine approbation. First, the ready compliance of Abraham to the will of God, in not refusing to offer up his son Isaac as a burnt offering, when it pleased the Almighty to substitute a more agreeable victim in his stead; second, the many pious prayers and ejaculations of King David which actually appeased the wrath of God, and stayed a pestilence which then raged among the people, owing to his inadvertently having had them numbered; and, thirdly, the many thanksgivings, oblations, burnt-sacrifices and costly offerings which Solomon, King of Israel made at the completion of the Temple of Jerusalem to God's service. These three offerings, did then, have since, and I trust ever will render the Ground Work of a Mason's lodge holy."

Art. Holy Lodge, p. 132:—This lodge was opened at the foot of Mt. Horeb, in the Wilderness of Sinai, about two years after the exode of the Israelites from Egypt, on the spot where Moses was first commanded to go down into Egypt, and where he was directed to put off his shoes from his feet because the ground was holy. Here the Almighty delivered to him the Decalogue with the forms of the Tabernacle and the Ark, and here he dedicated those peculiar forms of civil and religious polity, which, by separating his people from all other nations, he consecrated Israel a chosen vessel for his service. Over this lodge presided Moses, the great and inspired lawgiver; Ahohab, the curious carver and embroider; and Bezaleel, the famous architect.

NOTE.—Why have the great multitude of Bible students failed to recognize Moses as a primitive Worshipful Master, and Ahohab and Bezaleel as Ancient Wardens?

Art. Sacred Lodge, p. 239:—"Over the Sacred Lodge presided Solomon, the greatest and wisest of men; Hiram, the great and learned King of Tyre, and Hiram Abiff, the widow's son of the tribe of Naphtali. This lodge was held in the bowels of the sacred Mount Moriah, under the part whereon was erected the Sanctum Sanctorum, or Holy of Holies. On this mount it was where Abraham confirmed his faith by his readiness to offer up his only son Isaac. Here it was where David offered that acceptable sacrifice on the threshing-floor of Araunah, by which the anger of the Lord was appeased, and the plague stayed from his people. Here it was where the Lord delivered to David, in a dream, the plan of the glorious Temple, afterwards erected by our Grand Master, King Solomon; and lastly, here it was where he declared he would establish his sacred name and word, which should never pass away; and for these reasons this was justly styled the Sacred Lodge.

Art. Royal Lodge, p. 238:—"The Royal Lodge was held in the city of Jerusalem on the return of the Babylonish captives in the first year of the reign of Cyrus; over it presided Zerubbabel, the prince of the Jews, Haggai the prophet, and Joshua the High Priest. Now it was that the kingly power was again more visibly restored and continued till the total destruction of the city and Temple by the Romans under the command of Titus, when Herod, not of their own royal line, nor even a Jew, was appointed king, and hereby was vindicated that prophecy of Jacob's in Egypt, delivered more than one thousand years before, 'That the scepter should not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh come; and unto him shall the gathering of the people be.'"

Consecration (p. 320), "is the act of solemnly dedicating a person or thing to the service of God. It was one of the most widely spread religious ceremonies of the ancient world. The ceremonies of consecrating a lodge-room are imposing and necessary, and should be performed before the purposes of Freemasonry can be consistently exercised."

TRUTH AGAINST MAJORITIES.

Fellowship between truth and unbelief must, sooner or later, be fatal to the former. "I would thou wert either cold or hot," has a deep significance for us. Truth is truth, and error is error. There the case begins and ends. The blending of light and darkness can at the best only produce twilight, not noon. We may tamper with doubt, we may trifle with certainty, and we may succumb to public opinion, but what will the end be? Has the one great Oracle spoken? Has it spoken accurately and intelligibly? If it has, our only honest position is acceptance of its utterances. Every revealed truth has a distinct personal claim to be believed, however, offensive to the taste or spirit of the age. Truth never demands a vote. It refuses to go to the poll, or to acknowledge majorities. It presents its evidence, and claims submission. To attempt to gather truth out of a multitude of errors, by setting them to neutralize each other, is to revive the vain alchemy of the Middle Ages to turn iron into gold, or to imitate the folly of an old student of prophecy, who gathered some scores of conflicting prophetic dates together, and struck the mean among them in order to reach the true year! We are apt to forget that error is sin; that truth does not reverse itself; that inspiration and non-inspiration are two opposite poles, admitting of no medium; that fidelity ought not to cloak itself under the name of candid inquiry; and that candid inquiry should beware of being landed in unbelief, perhaps before it is aware.

There are some who are cowardly enough to trifle with or nibble at truth, but not bold enough to fling it away. It would be well for us to remember that not merely accepted error, but undervalued truth, has often made havoc of a church and shipwreck of a soul. Much of the teaching of the present day is not in the direction of certainty, and men feel that to be tossed to and fro with curious speculations will make but a poor life for them. Meanwhile Revelation remains to us, and, when human thinkers have spent themselves, it will reassert its authority and power. The cross still stands and with it Jehovah's eternal purpose of grace—grace finding its way to the sinner through the righteous channel opened by the death of the divine substitute.—Horatus Bonner. D. D.

THE WOMEN FOUNDERS OF NEW ENGLAND.

BY JOHN HOOKER.

[The following poem, read at the 250th anniversary celebration of the Center Church of Hartford, Ct., was written on the Hillside while the author was detained from attending the celebration by illness. Mr. Hooker is a descendant of the Rev. Thomas Hooker, founder of this church—"the most eloquent preacher, the wisest counsellor, the most discerning and far-sighted statesman, the most beloved saint, of all our New England fathers." The poem is a noble tribute to those "true hearts" of the long ago.—ED.]

Ye grand men of our early day,
Who here for freedom made a way,
With faith and prayer and quoten Word,
Yet coat of mail and girded sword;
Who laid in strength the founded State.
And o'er it sat to legislate;
And oft in magistracy stood
Before th' admiring multitude;
Who felt th' inspiring sense of power
And thrill of the victorious hour;
And saw afar that grateful fame
Would cherish every hero's name;
--The schoolboy at his lesson reads
Th' inspiring record of your deeds;
The public eye on canvas sees
Your conflicts fierce and victories;
The monumental shaft is reared
To keep your names for aye revered.

But there were hearts of purest gold
Whose tale of courage ne'er was told;
True heroes, who no armor wore,
Yet shared the perils that ye bore;
Braving, with courage none the less.
The savage and the wilderness;
Clothed with no power in church or state,
No word in worship or debate;
With faith-lit brow and helping hand,
Asking but by your side to stand;
Who had no hope a later day
Its tribute of renown would pay;
Who made their sad self-sacrifice
Before no world's admiring eyes;
Of men's remembrance thinking not,
Content to toil and be forgot.

Ah, when the heroes of that time
Are numbered on God's book sublime,
High on the roll of that true fame
Many a gentle woman's name,
Which earth had cared not to record,
Shall stand writ Valiant for the Lord.

—Laws of Life.

THE G. A. R.

The editor of the Free Methodist, being appealed to for his views upon the Grand Army of the Republic as a secret society which members of Free Methodist churches might join without sin, replies at length. This is a part of the argument:

"It is also opposed to the true genius of American institutions, creating distinctions among men, other than mere positional distinctions, and the distinctions based upon personal merit. In the very outset it discredits the honor of a true man—an American—a Christian—by making its pledge upon the honor of a soldier. Thus at the very start there is a faction established that, according to the standard assumed, divides Americans into soldiers and non-soldiers, and presumes the soldier's honor something more than that of Americans, or Christians, as a mere American's honor, or the honor of a Christian man pledged, would not secure initiation into the Grand Army, even though the party seeking initiation were an old soldier. It further, like all other of these orders, confuses the distinctions between real merit and assumed merit, giving the latter all it claims, and making no provision for the reward of true merit. It pledges its immunities to ex-soldiers who are its members, and that simply upon the basis of their fellowship with the order. If a man had distinguished himself upon the field, for humanity as well as bravery, for Christian character or unusual patriotic devotion, and is not a member of this shadow of the real army, discriminations are made against him; and if a member, there is no provision made to reward his special merit. The basis is wrong, hence the working of the order is wrong. Why should a soldier's widow be cared for in preference to a thousand other widows, and that irrespective of character or real necessity?

"When men entered the army they did so understandingly. They received their bounty and their pay. Had they received nothing more, there was no ground of complaint; but the country has nobly provided for those crippled, and for the widows of the dead, and is willing to do so, and there is no necessity nor propriety for an order to spring up and assume to be the wardens of the soldier or his widow. If the fun-loving fellows of the late army want a 'bivouac' once and a while, let them provide for it, but not perpetuate a ghost of an army to supplant the holier and higher institutions God has given us, or to thrust itself between the American people and their wards."

Prayer should be the key of the day, and the lock of the night.—Berkely.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

JONATHAN BLANCHARD,

OF ILLINOIS.

For Vice President,

JOHN A. CONANT,

OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultiv[illegible]intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

THE THING OF A DAY IN ITS DAY.

This is a phrase which occurs twice in the Scriptures, and in each case has a different meaning, and is in close connection with other thoughts; but when it stands alone we may discuss under its head all the live questions of the day.

We live in an age when men think, and express their opinions freely. This is the age of reason, of evolution, of atheism. There was a time when the fool said only in his heart, "There is no God;" now, he hesitates not to proclaim it upon the housetop; and many are the poor deluded mortals who base their belief upon his reasonings. Infidels are possessed of the same qualities they claim for their Protoplasm and Bioplasm. They are progressive. The argument which almost persuaded Agrippa to be a Christian, has no effect upon a Tyndall, a Darwin, or an Ingersoll. The men of to-day needed to cope with these agnostics, are men who are acquainted with the fallacies of Darwinian reasoning. More than ever before does it behoove the Christian on all points to be ready to give a reason of the hope that is in him. "Evil men and seducers, shall wax worse and worse; deceiving and being deceived," and unless Christians make an equally rapid progress in the opposite direction, the world will, eventually, become almost a unit for Satan. Although we would gladly think otherwise, we fear this may be the case. Mark the doubt and uncertainty of the Saviour's words, "When the Son of man cometh shall he find faith on the earth?" Another question of the day is, the subject of politics. Many good men of to-day, have abandoned political life entirely, because say they, and very truly, it is become so corrupt we cannot tolerate it. Is this in harmony with our motto. "The thing of a day in its day? Would it not be far better for them to lend their influence with a party which should include in its platform all the great reforms of the day, a Christian politics, voting whose ticket, a man would vote for God, and his Christ? Your very honesty compels you to say that it would. Why then not vote the American ticket? No one will or can deny that it embodies the leading reforms, and is thoroughly Christian. It is the ticket of to-day: it has sprung up like Jonah's gourd and grown almost as rapidly.

To-day demands for the United States of America, a Christian politics. Our government is becoming less democratic every day. The power is being gradually usurped and placed under the control of the few; monopoly and secrecy clamor for a centralization of power. These things ought not so to be. Politics should be made a study, not by low politicians and demagogues only, but by all. Let ministers make the speeches before election. Let them speak for a party which recognizes God as its head. There would be an immediate change, it could not be otherwise. Politics are corrupt because politicians are corrupt. Men follow their leaders. Let politicians be Christian men, and we shall have pure politics. "Every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit." "Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewn down and cast into the fire." A. B. CURTIS.

REFORM NEWS.

THE PHILADELPHIA CONVENTION.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Our Philadelphia meeting has come and gone, and was, on the whole, a good and profitable convention. On the preceding Sabbath Pres. Blanchard preached in the forenoon in the First United Presbyterian church, Rev. J. B. Dales, D.D., pastor, and in the evening in the Free Methodist church, and I spoke in the Third Reformed Presbyterian church on the relations of secret societies to Christianity and good government. The congregation was attentive and in the main sympathetic. Among them was a gentleman who had been an Orangeman and Worshipful Master, and was thoroughly familiar with all the ritual of Masonry to and including the Royal Arch degree. He is a member of the Third Reformed Presbyterian church and in earnest sympathy with our reform. A good collection was taken for the convention. The pastor, Rev. Montgomery, warmly commended the objects of the convention. I was also glad to grasp the hands of Gen. J. W. Phelps and Bro. J. P. Stoddard before the convention met.

On coming together in the fine hall of the Y. M. C. A.—one of the finest in the city—convention was called to order by the president of the Southeast Pennsylvania Association, Rev. J. M. Bishop, of Chambersburg, and Rev. Woodruff Post, of New York, led in prayer. Committees were then chosen on finance, resolutions, nominations, enrollment and the Washington work. An address was then given by Rev. T. P. Stevenson, pastor of the First Reformed Presbyterian church, and editor of the Christian Statesman, after which Rev. J. P. Stoddard spoke for over an hour with his accustomed ability, and was followed by Prof. E. D. Bailey in a brief but ringing speech. A collection was taken and convention adjourned to 9:30 A. M.

Wednesday morning was very stormy, and the whole day and evening was unpleasant and so slippery as to make walking difficult, but we had a fair meeting in the upper hall and heard reports of committees.

The committee on nominations reported for president of the Southeast Pennsylvania Christian Association: Rev. T. P. Stevenson, of Philadelphia.

Vice-presidents: Rev. J. M. Bishop, of Chambersburg; Peter Ritner, of Cumberland county; Rev. W. W. Barr, D.D., of Philadelphia; Rev. Jas. Prouty, of Vineland, N. J.

Corresponding secretary: J. W. Pritchard, Philadelphia.

Recording secretary: J. S. Yaukey, of Fayetteville.

Treasurer: Rev. P. Nicklas, of Chambersburg.

The report was adopted.

The committee on finance reported and was continued. It subsequently appeared that the expenses of the convention were $134.65, and the receipts $134.63.

The committee on resolutions reported the following which were after brief discussion adopted:

WHEREAS, There was convened in this city from the eleventh to the seventeenth day of September, 1830, a most important gathering of citizens, representing eleven States by 113 delegates, over which the Hon. Francis Granger, of New York, presided, and of which Hon. Joseph Ritner, of Pennsylvania, was first vice-president; and

WHEREAS, The occasion of that convention was the great prevalence and power of a certain secret order, its injurious influence on public morals and good government, and especially the fact that its members had murdered an unoffending citizen, and the civil authorities were powerless to punish his murderers; and

WHEREAS, This same order is far more prevalent and powerful to-day, and the whole framework of society is honey-combed with similar institutions; therefore

Resolved, That we renew the declaration presented to that convention by Hon. William H. Seward that the organization and principles of the society of Freemasons are inconsistent with the genius of our republican institutions, and ought to be abated in the same manner as all other great moral and political evils are abated.

Resolved, That all secret organizations are links of one and the same chain; that the Masonic lodge is the present source from which all similar modern organizations have emanated, and that that lodge is now in active operation in every city and considerable village of the country, swaying our parties and churches, filling our offices, secular and divine, with its partisans, shaping our political doctrines, and teaching a spurious and corrupting morality, subversive both of the Christian religion and of free institutions.

Resolved, That in the so-called Grand Army of the Republic, we recognize an insidious, dangerous and useless form of secret organization, which is better fitted for keeping alive and glorifying the memories of war than for advancing those interests of peace for which all just war is waged.

Resolved, That one of the greatest elements of strength in the Mormon system by which it has hitherto resisted the moral sense of fifty millions of people, and the marital laws and customs of all Christendom, is in its oath-bound secrecy, and that we respectfully and earnestly petition our National Congress to provide by law that extra-judicial and secret oaths shall be prohibited in the National Territories, and the District of Columbia.

Resolved, That as workers in temperance reform, laboring for the suppression of the evils of intemperance, we regard the influence of those secret orders that bind alike in one oath-bound brotherhood the temperate citizen and the habitual drunkard, the officer of the law and the dramseller, as an insurmountable obstacle to the successful prosecution of the temperance work.

Resolved, That as a basis for a righteous legislation, we earnestly desire the Christian reformation of our government, and a recognition of Divine law in the National Constitution as the supreme standard of all human legislation.

Gen. J. W. Phelps reported some additional resolutions which were referred and with slight amendment adopted as follows:

Resolved, That the perpetual warfare that has been carried on by the government against a small number of its Indian subjects, who are ignorant, poor and invaded by wrong and oppression from every quarter, is as inhuman and impolitic as it has been unnecessary and enormously expensive, and in the contemplation of this warfare we are compelled to doubt whether it was not waged rather for the benefit of jobs and high tariffs than in the interest of republican government.

Resolved, That if our republican government is to be perpetuated it can be done only by voters who recognize no men as American citizens, qualified for holding office, whose affiliations show that their first allegiance is due to that foreign government the Masonic lodge.

Resolved, That the Masonic lodge has had a ruinous control in the management of our affairs of late years, especially during the last quarter of a century; that one of the ill consequences of its rule was the extending to former slave-power leaders the right to hold office which they had forfeited, and at the same time failing to extend to their deluded followers and victims ample facilities for that education which is essential to the state of freemen; and that in consequence a violation of justice and the true policy of the government has been done which fully justifies the loss of confidence of the American people in the party now in power.

The afternoon session was fuller and very interesting. The committee on the Washington work reported as follows:

The committee on the Washington work would respectfully report as follows:

We heartily approve of a building in Washington, D. C., believing that it cannot fail to be productive of great good to the reform. We indorse the organization of the Washington Central Executive Committee and we urge that committee to take the lead in measures for the organization of similar committees throughout the country. We approve the steps which have been taken toward the organization of a joint stock company for the publication of a reform paper in Washington. We believe the fixing of the capital stock at $25,000, in shares of $25 each, with the privilege of increasing the capital hereafter, is both reasonable and wise. We recommend that a charter be obtained without further delay and that the appeal for subscriptions to the stock be pressed vigorously. We deem it important that the publication of the paper should be commenced as soon as practicable.

Remarks were made by E. D. Bailey, J. P. Stoddard and Pres. J. Blanchard, and report was adopted. The convention was then addressed by Bro. Bailey on the benevolence of Odd-fellowship and Masonry as compared with that of the churches.

The evening meeting was in the large hall. The committee on enrollment reported 121 members of the convention representing three States and Washington, D. C. Some time was spent in prayer and addresses were then made by Pres. J. Blanchard and Gen. J. W. Phelps. All our meetings were most pleasant and harmonious and we felt that God was with us.

The city papers quite generally reported our proceedings, and letters of sympathy were sent by friends who could not be present. Yours in Christ,

H. H. HINMAN.

THE HOLLAND CONVENTION.

The Holland Convention met according to appointment at the First Reformed church in Holland city, on Wednesday, Dec. 19, at 10 o'clock A. M. Each session was characterized by zeal on the part of both speakers and hearers. The entire service, with the exception of what remarks were made by the Agent of Michigan Christian Association, was conducted in the Holland language. Dominie Zwemer of Graafschap, Ottawa Co., was president of the meeting, and opened the convention with a speech on the "History of Freemasonry," occupying the time of the morning session.

In the afternoon another large congregation gathered at two o'clock. Meeting was opened as in the morning, by singing and prayer, which was followed by a speech of an hour's length on "The Place of Freemasonry in Prophecy," by Bro. James Brandt of Forest Grove. This speech was followed by another from Dominie Nykerk, on "The Danger to Our Nation." Next came Dominie Douker with a speech, the subject of which I did not get. This concluded the afternoon session.

There were in these day sessions from five to seven hundred people each session. In the evening a large congregation gathered and as first speaker, "Dominie" Day was introduced. He spoke in the English language for about three quarters of an hour, on "The Effect of Secret Societies in the Government." The Agent was followed by Dominie Hulst of Grand Rapids, on the subject of the "Religious Teaching of Freemasonry Compared with the Teaching of the Bible." He was followed by Dominie Bos, the pastor in charge of the Holland church, who spoke more on the danger to the young people. This closed the convention.

The programme was made out for two days, but for some reason the leaders deemed it advisable to close, cutting off an important part of the programme. All the speeches were listened to with profound attention, and although I could understand very little of what was said, I learned from those who did that some good points were made, and some advance made in opposing these dark systems of secrecy. We may hope for cheering reports from the Hollanders of Michigan in the days to come.

The church in which the convention was held, like the Fourth Reformed church of Grand Rapids, has been divided on Freemasonry, and the matter is now in the Supreme Court awaiting their decision as to which part of the church shall hold the property. May the matter be stirred more and more, until men shall be ashamed to lend even the slightest influence in favor of secrecy.

DECEMBER IN MICHIGAN.

[From the report of the Michigan agent, Rev. H. A. Day, in the Michigan, American the following interesting details of progress in that State are taken.]

Met Bro. Kingsnorth at Battle Creek, who took me, in company with Bro. G. W. Harris, a veteran Anti-mason, to his place. Met a cordial welcome at this home where I remained over Sabbath, and preached in the M. E. church, Rev. Mr. Hathaway pastor in charge. Evidently it was expected that I would preach at the Freemasons, but the congregation was disappointed in this, as the Lord did not lead that way. I preached with comparative freedom in the afternoon, and in the evening gave my first lecture on the subject of Christian Politics. I found that this church, supposed to be a house of prayer, and dedicated to the worship of God, is used by the grange for all its meetings. The idea is revolting. A secret society leading its blindfolded candidates through the disgusting mummery of the grange in the house of God! Under these circumstances I was not surprised to learn that there had not been a revival in this community for years.

My remarks were listened to with respectful attention, all of which seemed to be endorsed, except the reference to secretism in this country. The effect of this was here as elsewhere. The substantial aid furnished by father Kingsnorth was all we got from this locality, save a few subscriptions to the paper. Bro. Kingsnorth gave me ten dollars for our treasury.

Having delivered my second lecture on Monday evening, to a fair audience, the following morning found me on my way to Battle Creek, where I took train for Parma, and found plenty of work for a short time in the mailing of the American, and arranging for further work. While doing this work I delivered one lecture at the Bennett school house to a good audience, who heartily endorsed our principles. Here I took three subscriptions to the paper and distributed tracts.

Having completed the work at home, on Tuesday, Dec. 11, I started for Grand Rapids, where I met father Ross, who has been for over two months under the pressure of a protracted meeting. I immediately fell into line and preached three evenings in succession, with the presence of the Holy Spirit to lead. Spent a large part of the daytime in consultation with Dr. Veenboer and preparation for the Holland convention.

From this place on Friday, Dec. 14, I went to Lockwood, Kent county, where I was announced to speak on that and the following evening. Met a good audience at the Fairchild school-house who seemed heartily to appreciate what I had to offer on the line of thorough reform the first evening. On the second evening there was a larger company out, and the lecture met an enthusiastic response. Some of the time the stamping of feet prevented my talk, especially when I touched the question of secret societies. This people are ready with their means to oppose these systems of darkness. Here I sold five shares of stock and took several subscriptions to the paper. On Sabbath following my last lecture I preached to a good audience, and had the pleasure of seeing two rise for prayers, and one unite with the church. It is evident that Bro. Potter, pastor of this charge, is doing a good work here. I was much pleased with this people, and really think I shall visit this locality again, as it is the expressed wish of the people that I should do so. The advocacy of these principles in localities where there are churches opposed to secret societies will do much to strengthen them both financially and spiritually.

From this place I returned to Grand Rapids, stopped for the night with Bro. Hubbard, attending meeting in the evening at the Wesleyan church. Here I found opportunity to put in a few words against the powers of darkness, entreating Christians to take a firm stand against the wrong and in favor of the right. While in the city called on Rev. Hulst, of the Fourth Reformed church, and learned from him that on the 8th of Sept., 1881, his church withdrew from the Dutch Reformed General Synod because the Synod protected Masonry among the members. One hundred and five of the male members favored this secession against sixteen opposed. Rev. C. Van Der Veen of Grand Haven and N. H. Dosker of Second Reformed church, Grand Rapids, were present to favor the minority, having in their hands an injunction from the circuit court to stop their proceedings. But these men were not allowed to speak. Whenever they attempted it the indignation of the majority was expressed by hisses and general uproar. Finally the majority passed a resolution forbidding any but members of that church to speak. The matter, however, was carried to court, where Judge Montgomery decided in favor of the majority, giving them the property. Whereupon the minority carried the case to the Supreme Court, whose decision these sturdy reformers are now patiently waiting.

On Tuesday afternoon I left Grand Rapids for the seat of the Holland Convention. Arrived at Holland city I found Bro. T. Keppel, to whom I had a letter of introduction from Dr. Veenboer. Found this brother heart and hand in the work, and also found that ample arrangements had been made for a successful meeting.

REFORM WORK IN NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Monday evening, Nov. 12, I lectured on Odd-fellowship in Barrington to an attentive and appreciative audience. Deacon Moses Pierce secured the house and made all the arrangements. Thursday evening, Nov. 15, I lectured on Freemasonry in the Freewill Baptist church at Strafford Blue Hill, to a polite and intelligent audience, including several Freemasons. I appealed to them to confirm the points of my lecture, but of course they preserved the jewel of a "silent tongue." The Spirit of the Lord seemed to carry home the word to the hearts of those that heard, and I was specially blessed in speaking. Friend Solomon D. Berry (would that I might call him brother), secured the house and notified the people, as well as kindly entertained me for the night. I spent the Sabbath, Nov. 18, at South Barnstead, and it was one of the best days of my life. The Spirit of the Lord rested upon the people, and after the sermon many testified with power. Several souls were specially blessed and helped. The evening prayer meeting was also well attended and a profitable season. Thursday evening, Nov. 22, I preached in the Friends' meeting-house at South Pittsfield to a large and attentive congregation. The Lord's hand appeared in this appointment, as it immediately preceded a revival series of meetings by Sister Elizabeth T. Larkin. The Spirit of the Lord seemed to rest upon the people. Bro. Francis Peasley arranged for the meeting and provided me with a home. Lord's day, Nov. 25, I spent at Northwood Narrows, preaching to a good congregation with comfort to my own soul, and, I trust, profit to others. In the evening I spoke to a crowded audience on the relation of secret societies to the Christian church. The Lord was present to help, and the stalwart singing of the brethren pitched the right tune for the service. It took one fraternity man thirteen hours to cool off he got so warmed up by the truth. The sale of fraternity secrets and titles will not be brisk for the next ten years at Northwood Narrows. Communities that wish instruction on the subject of secret societies need no longer fear the smashing of furniture and costly mirrors. Such scenes and threats we trust are forever past in New Hampshire. The riot at Ephesus did not save paganism. During my journey I visited and prayed with many aged and sick people, addressed four public schools, distributed more than one hundred religious tracts, secured one hundred and fifty subscribers for the CHRISTIAN WITNESS and other valuable papers. It was also my happy privilege to converse and pray with more than one hundred sixty families, many of them remote from churches and unvisited by any Christian minister from one year's end to another. I should be glad to mention by name those excellent Christian people whose generous hospitality and tender care made my journey so safe and pleasant, but want of space forbids. Friends who desire preaching, lecturing, or other reform work, can notify me at once.

CORRESPONDENCE.

AN INTERESTING CASE.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The Chicago Times of Nov. 1 has the following item, entitled, "What killed the Sons of Malta:"

"In connection with the death of Gen. Steadman, who instituted the order of the Sons of Malta in Lafayette, the Courier gives an incident which it claims terminated the career of that order in the country. George Harding, an employe of the wholesale grocery establishment of Reynolds, Earl and Hatcher, a brave and brawny Scotchman, desired to become a member of the order, and the order was only too glad to 'take him in.' A night was set apart for his initiation, and as he was a particularly powerful man, the gathering of the clans was unusually large. The initiation proceeded amid uproarious fun to the elevated railway, and a plunge into the seething waters of the lake. A wet blanket was in the hands of a dozen strong men, in which the aspirant was tossed about till they became exhausted. Harding was an intensely earnest man, and took the initiation to be a serious affair. Being told by the Grand Conductor that from the elevated railroad he should be plunged into a lake, he had contracted his muscles and nerved himself for the battle with the waves. When he struck the blanket the shock was too great for his nerves. He was taken to his home a paralytic. He lived a year, suffered intensely, and died in great agony. The order paid out over $2,000 in his behalf. All that medical skill could do was done, but to no purpose. He was a noble man, and bore his sufferings like a hero or a martyr. He never once complained or spoke harshly of those who caused it all. His sufferings and death were the death-knell to the Sons of Malta not only in Lafayette, but throughout America."

This naturally reminds us of poor Mortimer Leggett, killed by the Cornell University secret fraternity boys a few years ago. And just to think that so many good people will still plead that the churches give standing room for Freemasons and company in their fellowship! "Tell it not in Gath!" But inasmuch as it is already "published in the streets of Askelon," let the Lord's witnessing people protest aloud.

ANOTHER STORY FOR ROB MORRIS.

FAIRFIELD Co., Ohio, Dec. 12, 1883.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—As an instance of how the Masonic order protect its members in crime in defiance o law and justice I desire to call the attention of the readers of the Cynosure to a case that is now brought prominently before the people of this vicinity. A petition is being circulated here for the pardon of Herman Peter, a gun-smith of Lancaster, who less than a year ago was convicted and sent to the Ohio Penitentiary for the murder of Phillip Betz, a tavern keeper of the same place, Betz was passing quietly along the street when Peter stepped to the door of his shop and shot him without any, or at most very slight provocation. No one doubted for a moment that the slayer would be indicted and convicted of murder in the first degree, but contrary to expectation the grand jury indicted him for manslaughter only, and he was sentenced to the penitentiary for life.

Peter is a Mason, as is also the judge who instructed the jury and presided at the trial; and it is common rumor that the judge took undue pains to instruct the jury so as not to find an indictment of murder in the first degree. As to whether any of those who sat upon the grand or petit juries were Masons the writer is not informed, but it is more than probable, as the craft has a strong following in this county and is a recognized factor in public affairs about the county-seat.

That the Masons are at the bottom of the movement for Peter's release there is no doubt, as they are the principal signers and circulators of the petition. There are a few Masons, however who pretend to be violently opposed to having the convict pardoned, but this is clearly a lodge trick to deceive well-meaning persons. The popular sentiment is strongly against Peter, who is a man of sullen, morose and revengful temperament and unless the ancient fraternity of which he is an honored member can prevail upon our Masonic governor to grant him a pardon on the plea of insanity the community will probably not be endangered by his presence again. The above are facts which can be vouched for if necessary.

And yet Masons will tell us that Masonry has no influence over courts and public officers, but is only a benevolent and pre-eminently moral institution.

COLUMBIAN.

AN OPEN LETTER

TO REV. W. H. PRUETT, PASTOR BAPTIST CHURCH, WESTON, OREGON.—NO. V.

DEAR BROTHER:—Once more I take up my pen to hold converse with you for a few moments. I am glad to learn from your letter to me through the mail that you are a man of thorough religious convictions, and that you love the church of your choice—having chosen, as you conscientiously believe, in accordance with God's will. I like that. You do not believe, neither do I, that among God's commands there are any non-essentials. You believe that the Christ means something when he says, "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you." In this you stand by the "Old Theology." In other words, you are true to God and to your sanctified convictions. This gives me reason to think you are of the stuff that true reformers and martyrs are made of; and this emboldens me to continue writing these letters. I have had a somewhat extended acquaintance with men—especially church men, in pulpit and in pew, and I never knew one who held his obligations to God who could not be relied on as a reformer when great principles were at stake and a severe battle was pending.

In our church work you have doubtless seen a would-be convert, born, as it were, with hair and teeth fully developed, with a zeal casting that of pastor and deacon into the shade; like a young robin when first leaving the shell, larger than when fully feathered; and you have witnessed a very pitiful result. I have; and I have been long enough in this reform to have met with men who have entered upon the work with a vim which augured danger to the seried hosts of secrecy; but alas! Masonry does not collapse easily—rotten eggs are unsavory, and the mob spirit occasionally breaks loose, and where are these noisy recruits to be found after a trial or two? Hunt them up and call on them for action or means to help others act, and they will, if they roar at all, "roar you as gently as a sucking dove." Our cause is not strong enough as yet to bear many such warriors. When danger looms up before them, or sacrifice, they speedily unload themselves and wait until victory perches on our banners, when they will be ready to jump on the triumphal car laden with the spoils and cry lustily like the fly on chariot wheel, "What a dust we raise."

The upshot of all this is, men who are true to God will be true to every good word and work. Such are men who carry on their shoulders level heads, and underneath their jackets hearts in which God has his home, guiding and impelling all right feeling and action. Such men are wanted yet in our ranks. We have them, but there is room for more; and there is work for valiant men and women, too.

We, therefore, gladly hail your voice, coming to us from the "Rockys" and the Pacific slope. Trusting that the cause can rely on you for the war, we say to you, "Don't be deceived." It may be hinted to you that wisdom would dictate that Masonry alone should be attacked, while the smaller secret societies should be left till the old lioness is killed off. The fact is, the writer has an uncomfortable recollection of giving such advice once while in his "green and callow state." If he could put a blush on paper he would do it. You must "take the will for the deed." The fact is, they are all of a piece. They are all whelps of the old one. I have somewhere read of the invasion of a serpents' den by some rude men and boys during a winter time. They were astonished to find coiled up together rattle-snakes, black-snakes copper-heads, striped-snakes, and lots of others, and they murdered them all. They were all snakes. You will see my moral. You doubtless remember the boy who had been pounded by an old gander, and who was caught one day in the goslin pen wringing the necks of the little downy pets, and who, when reminded of their beauty and innocence, responded grimly as he threw at his mother's feet the last dead goslin, "Ah! but they'd grow to be ganders!" That boy was a philosopher. Emulate his example. Go for the old gander in earnest, and have a charge for every goslin you meet on the way. They have the blood, and they will develop into ganders. These little so-called harmless societies are recruiting stations for Masonry, and the "Old Handmaid" is spawning them thick and fast all over the land. Give them no quarters, my brother. Only make yourself familiar with their nature so that when you attack them you can "speak from the book."

In my next I will have something to say about organization and modes of work. May God have you in his holy keeping and make you a power in your State.

Fraternally yours, J. L. BARLOW.

IT WON'T DO.

In the ambition of the lodge to become both the religion and the law of the country, a great effort has been made to abolish hanging; for if the law could hang men, why then the law must have an intimidating power over people greater than that of Freemasonry. The lodge, while administering the most awful oaths, which would bind ignorant and perverse men to commit murder, pretends to be very tender about taking human life; and is, therefore, entirely opposed to capital penalties. No one has a right to take human life, says the lodge, while taking human life itself. We can understand why the Fenians who took the lives of Messrs. Cavendish and Burke should be opposed to hanging.

But the people of Maine, who while being lodge-ridden abolished hanging, have finally retraced their steps, and re-invested the law with that terror to evil doers. Now if the State will go one step farther and abolish that nest of Thugs, the Masonic lodge, it need not fear being impelled to take a backward step. AMERICAN.

LESSON I.—January 6, 1884.—The Conference at Jerusalem. Acts 15:1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT.—We believe that through the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ we shall be saved.. Acts 15:11.

EXPLANATORY.

Here we have the description of one of the most exciting and important controversies in the history of Christianity. Two questions only in the history of the theological thought of these eighteen centuries approach it in vital importance: the question of the Trinity, which shook the church to its very foundation in the fourth century, and was settled at the Council of Nice in 325, and the question of justification by faith, which was the central doctrinal principle of the Protestant Reformation, and was boldly proclaimed by Luther, say from the posting of his ninety-five theses on the church door of Wittenberg in 1517. The supreme question which agitated the Apostolic church was the relation of the ritual of Moses to the Christian scheme, and the right of the Gentiles to participation in it.—Revision Commentary.

These Jewish Christians wanted the Gentiles to be saved, but they differed as to the mode. They wanted them to be saved by becoming Jews, by accepting their rites and ceremonies Let the Gentiles become the people of God by joining the nation which for ages had been the people of God.—Pel.

"The danger of yielding to the Judaizing Christians." It was a subversion of the very truths of the Gospel, and the salvation of men (v. 24). To be saved is to be redeemed from the guilt of sin by forgiveness, to be brought into the family of God by receiving his nature in the new birth, to be saved from the sinful nature and life. No rite or ceremony can do this, but only faith and love toward Jesus. "Reliance on religious rites and ceremonies always leads the soul away from reliance on Christ." So that to say that one could not be saved without becoming a Jew, was a deadly error, subverting the whole scheme of the Gospel.

It laid a heavy, unnecessary burden on the Gentiles, a yoke which neither the Jews nor their fathers were able to bear (v. 10). It destroyed the glorious liberty of the sons of God, which allowed the Gospel spirit to work out into forms and methods natural to the person who was filled with that spirit.—Pel.

"And the apostles and elders came together." The council was probably of a much more representative character than has been usually supposed. The church of Antioch, in the persons of Paul and Barnabas, represented the thoughts and feelings of far distant Gentile churches. The church of Jerusalem, again, represented the thoughts and feelings, not merely of the Palestine Jews, but of the Jews scattered over the whole known world. The Hebrew Christians of Jerusalem and the Holy Land were only a portion of that community of believers which made up the Jerusalem church. From the statement of Acts 6, we learn that each of the great foreign Jewish colonies possessed a synagogue at Jerusalem. Among the "elders" assembled that day with the apostles, we can well imagine representatives of each peculiar rabinnic school. There were some, doubtless, of that rigid and exclusive Pharisee sect which declared glass vessels and the very soil of Gentile lands unclean. Such an assembly only could have put out authoritatively decrees at once so practical and conciliatory, and at the same time acceptable to all except those bigoted and fanatical Jews who wished to exclude every Gentile soul from all religious privileges in this life, and from all share of blessedness in the life to come.—Schaff.

"The result of the conference." Note that these prohibitions required real self-denial on the part of the Gentile Christians, so that each party gave up something for the other. The demand to abstain from blood and the pollutions of idols involved many sacrifices, and what would seem privations. The convert had to refuse invitations to birthday and marriage and funeral feasts; or, if present, to refuse to eat at them. He would have to refrain from entering a temple, and to dislodge busts or statues of the gods from his house and gardens.—Plumptre. The last prohibition of the four is made on account of the intrinsic evil and danger of that which was forbidden. For the others, which were not in themselves sinful, there were two reasons. First and chiefly, out of proper regard for the educated prejudices of the Jews, who detested and were scandalized by these idol sacrifices and methods of preparing them. Secondly, the restrictions were greatly helpful to the Gentiles also. They aided in disentangling them from the old connections of heathenism, and in breaking the force of lifelong idolatrous customs.—Schaff.

SPECIAL NOTES BY E. E. FLAGG.

Christ the Only Way of Salvation.

1. Men are always prone to add to or take from God's commands, and addition to his Word in one way always means substraction from it in some other.

2. When religion is made to consist almost entirely of outside ceremonies, the things which God requires before all else—repentance, faith and holiness are but little thought of.

3. Masonic teachers in our day are like these teachers of circumcision in the early church. They teach traditions and ceremonies instead of pointing men to Christ alone for salvation.

4. Sickles' Monitor says of the Master Mason's degree, "We now find man complete in morality and intelligence with the stay of religion added....Nor can we think of anything further that the soul of man requires."

5. The teachings of Odd-fellowship are similar. Grosh, its highest authority, calls initiation into its secrets the same thing as regeneration.

6. Such teaching kills all spiritual life, for if a man thinks he is good enough already he will not try to be any better.

7. The yoke of Masonry like the yoke of circumcision is a heavy one. Its oaths and obligations fetter the mind and conscience, and make slaves of its members.

8. The only way to freedom for such is to come out from the lodge and take Christ's yoke instead. Many good and brave men like Elders Stearns, Bernard, and Pres. Finney have done this in the past; many are doing it now, and more will do it in the future as light on the question spreads from the circulation of anti-secret tracts and papers.

9. To wear the yoke of a secret order, or to try to make others wear it is tempting God; for it is putting an obstacle in the way of his plan of salvation, and must make him justly angry with those who do it.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

What was Paul's opinion of the secret societies of his day? Eph. 5:11, 12.

Who alone can give freedom to the slaves of the lodge? Gal. 5:1.

What was the punishment of those who tempted God in ancient times? Num. 14:22, 23; 1 Cor. 10:9.

BAND OF HOPE BIBLE LESSON.

FIRST DAY OF THE WEEK.

1. The first day of the week cometh Mary Magdalene early, while it was yet dark, unto the sepulchre, and seeth the stone taken away from the sepulcbre. John 20:1.

7. And upon the first day of the weak, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow; and continued his speech until midnight. Acts 20:7.

2. Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come. 1 Cor. 16:2.

10. I was in the Spirit on the Lord's Day, and heard behind me a great voice as of a trumpet. Rev. 1:10.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The Sabbath was made for man. Mk. 2:27.

CENTRAL TRUTH.—The Lord's day is the channel for heaven's richest blessings.

1. The change of the Sabbath to the first day of the week was right, because the Fourth Commandment does not tell us to keep holy Saturday or Monday, but the seventh day, i. e., the seventh portion of our time.

2. It was so natural for the early Christians to celebrate the day of their Lord's resurrection that the change seems to have been made by tacit consent without the formality of any public deliberations.

3. Eusebins, who lived about three centuries after Christ, tells us in his history of the early church, "that from the beginning the Christians assembled on the first day of the week, to read the Scriptures, to preach, and celebrate the Lord's Supper."

4. Neglect of public worship always leads to disregard of the Sabbath. This is one reason why attending church is such an important duty.

5. God's way of giving is the best. Many boys and girls would find it hard to give a whole dollar at the end of the year, but if they should lay by two cents a week it would amount to as much, and be scarcely felt. A mechanic asked to give eighteen dollars to missions would be very likely to say that he was not able to give so much, but if he laid aside five cents of his earnings every day he could do it very easily.

6. The reason why smokers do not realize the amount they spend on tobacco is because they only lay out a small sum daily. Many a smoker would reform if obliged to pay his yearly bill for cigars all at once.

7. There is a special fitness in giving to the Lord on the Lord's day. If the ancient Jew brought a thank-offering much more should the Christian.

8. To be in the Spirit on the Lord's day is to be in a frame of mind suitable to it. If our thoughts, our reading, and the talk we indulge in are all about worldly things we are not in the Spirit.

9. When we are in the Spirit on the Lord's day we always hear a voice to encourage and strengthen us for the week's duties. It may come from the Sunday-school lesson, the sermon we hear, the books we read, or from the quiet meditations of our own hearts.

PRACTICAL TRUTHS.

The first day of the week is the brightest and gladdest of the seven.

Giving is always a part of true worship.

To give weekly, and to give as we are prospered, is the secret of a large and wisc charity.

We must be in the Spirit on the Lord's day.

LESSON TALK.

Justin Martyr, one of the most noted of early Christian writers, has preserved for us a beautiful picture of the Lord's day as observed by the primitive church. "All Christians in the city or country," he tells us. "meet together on the first day of the week, because that is the day of our Lord's resurrection, and then we read the writings of the apostles and prophets; this being done the president makes an oration to the assembly to exhort them to imitate and to practice the things that they have heard; then we all join in prayer, and after that we celebrate the sacrament. Then they who are able and willing give what they think proper, and what is collected is laid up in the hands of the president who distribute it to widows and orphans, and other necessitous Christians as their wants require."

Jesus' example has taught us that there is no day more fitting than the Sabbath on which to do good. To lay aside a few pcnuics, or even one a week, may require some self-denial from the boys and girls who have little spending money. But if we remember how Jesus left his Father's throne, and became poor for our sakes, we shall want to make some sacrifice to prove our gratitude. The Lord's day is not a day for idleness, but for activity in all good work. It is a day on which we are to especially remember the holy cause of temperance, and all great reforms; and try to do all we can for the poor victims of sin and vice.

LESSON HYMN.

What's holy time? what's holy time?
There is no time too pure
To win the erring back from crime,
The wavering to secure;
To whisper to the doubting soul
"The tempting draught beware!
Touch not, touch not the sprakling bowl,
Touch not, for death is there?"

To raise the fallen from the dust,
Where he hath suffered long;
To bid him hope with joyful trust,
Take courage and be strong;
To pledge to him our heart and hand,
That firmly by his side,
Shoulder to shoulder we will stand,
As brethren true and tried.

The light of home again to shed
O'er many a dreary hearth;
To raise once more the tones long fled—
The tones of joy and mirth;
For this the Sabbath hours were given,
For this was it designed,
That we therein might worship Heaven
By toiling for mankind.

—Clarke's Reform Song Book.

QUARTERLY REVIEW.

1. Every one that keepeth the Sabbath from polluting it, and taketh hold of my covenant; even them will I bring to my holy mountain, and make them joyful in my house of prayer.
2. Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation.
3. And the king was sorry.
4. By grace ye are saved.
5. Hereby know we the Spirit of God. Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God.
6. If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day. and call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable; and shalt honor him, not doing thine own ways nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words,
7. Then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord, and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.
8. And let us not be weary in well-doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not.
9. If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body.
10. For every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure.
11. Do good and lend, hoping for nothing again.
12. I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day.
13. And behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me to give every man according as his work shall be.

QUESTIONS.

What has been taught in these lessons about Sabbath keeping? the duty of watching against temptation? the sin of rash and foolish oaths? the duty of separation from all filthy habits like tobacco? the way in which to test false teachers? the rewards of Sabbath keeping? the duty of fighting against the works of the flesh? of governing the tongue? of trying to be like God? the difference between true and false charity? of being in the Spirit on the Lord's day? of being sober and watchful? of the great reward promised us if we are faithful?

OUR REWARD.

REV. 22: 10–17.

Q. How can the judgment be always said to be at hand? (v. 10).

A. The judgment is always nigh in the sense that we never know when it will come, and it is nigh also in the sense that this life, which is all that separates us from it, is very short.

Q. What is meant by "he that is unjust,"etc? (v. 11).

A. Those that keep on sinning under the light of the Gospel cannot hope for another chance to repent. They must remain what they are forever, for character whether good or bad, always tends to a fixed permanence.

Q. What is the Christian's reward? (v. 12).

A. If we obey God we shall have a home with Jesus when we die; and no matter what trials and crosses we may have to bear, the sense of his love will make us so happy that even before we die we shall have heaven in our souls.

Q. Why does Jesus say, "I am Alpha and Omega? (v. 13).

A. As Alpha and Omega are the first and last letters of the Greek alphabet, it is a figurative way of expressing his eternal existence. When such a being makes a promise we feel sure that it can and will be kept.

Q. What rights do they have who "do his commandments?" (v. 14).

A. They have the rights of obedient children in their Father's house.

Q. What classes must stay outside? (v. 15).

A. Those who poison and defile their bodies with rum and tobacco, and all who practice and love false worships.

Q. What do these and similar titles prove regarding Christ? (v. 16).

A. These titles prove that Christ is the rightful King of the world, and that all nations must finally recognize him as such.

Q. What is the difference between the invitations of the Gospel and the secret lodge? (v. 17).

A. The Gospel invites all without distinction of sex, race or color. It invites freely, without money or price. The lodge offers its privileges only to a few, and that in consideration of a sum of money paid in advance.

Q. What is John's description of the glories of heaven? Rev. 22: 1–5.

Will you try to win this great reward?

LESSON HYMN.

"Shall we gather at the river,
Where bright angel feet have trod?"

A TERRIBLE PROPHECY.

THE RED SUNSETS, CYCLONES AND EARTHQUAKES FORETELLING COMING DISASTER—HOW TO MEET IT.

The recent mysterious appearances following sunset and preceding sunrise have attracted wide attention from students of the skies and the people generally. During the days of recent weeks the sun seems to have been obscured by a thin veil of a dull leaden hue which, as the sun receded toward the horizon, became more luminous, then yellow, then orange, then red; and, as night settled down upon the earth, a dull purple. At first it was thought these appearances were ordinary sunset reflections of light, but now it is pretty certain that they are the misty substance of the tail of some unseen comet, in which the earth is enveloped, or a surrounding stratum of world dust or very small meteors. Professor Brooks, of the Red House Observatory, Phelps, N. Y., has turned his telescope upon these objects and discovered what he thinks are myriads of telescopic meteors. If it is unorganized world dust, or decomposed vapors, as the Democrat and Chronicle of Rochester, N. Y. remarks: "How is this matter to be disposed of? Will it settle and form a deposit upon the earth, or remain a partial opaque shell about the earth to cut off a portion of the sun's light upon it?"

Whatever the mystery is, there is no denying that some very strange forces are at work in the upper airs. The terrible tornadoes and cyclones which have swept our own country, and the fearful volcanoes and earthquakes which have destroyed so many cities and thousands of people—the tidal waves which mysteriously rise and fall on coasts hitherto unvexed by them—the tremendous activity which is evident in the sun by the constant revelation of enormous spots upon its surface—all indicate unusual energy in the heavenly bodies.

These circumstances recall Professor Grimmer's prophecies that from 1881 to 1887 the passage of the five great planets—Mars, Neptune, Jupiter, Uranus and Saturn—around the sun would produce strange and wonderful phenomena. He says: "The waters of the earth will become more or less poisonous. The air will be foul with noisome odors. Ancient races will disappear from the earth." He attempts to prove his prophecy by the fact that in 1720, when Mars and Saturn made their passage around the sun coincidently, great destruction and mortality visited all parts of the globe. He also found the same results in previous perihelion passages of the planets, and argues that these circumstances always produce epidemics and destructive diseases which will baffle the skill of the most eminent physicians; that the poor will die by thousands, the weak and intemperate falling first, those whose blood has been impoverished by excess of work or dissipation next, and only those who are in comparative vigor shall escape to enjoy the era of renewed activity and prosperity which will follow the period of destruction.

Inasmuch as the entire world seems subject to the sway of the heavenly bodies, no part of the earth, he thinks, can escape scourging. He even predicts that America will lose over ten millions of people; that farmers will be stricken with fear and cease to till the soil; that famine will make human misery more wretched. That hundreds will flee to overcrowded cities for aid in vain. That sudden changes in ocean currents, temperature and surroundings will entirely transform the face of nature and climate of countries; that the air will be so foul with malaria and other noxious gases that those who survive will be troubled with disorders of the digestive organs. That many who escape other ills will bl at with dropsy and suddenly pass away, while others will grow thin and drag out a miserable existence in indescribable agony for weeks. Neuralgic pains in different parts of the body will torment them. They will easily tire, and become despondent. A faint, hot feeling will be succeeded by chilly sensations while hallucinations and dread of impending ill will paralyze all effort. The birds in the air, the beasts of the field and even the fish of the sea will become diseased, poisoning the air, and poisoning the waters of the globe."

We are told on the other hand that those who shall pass through this period of trial will have larger enjoyment of life and health. The earth will yield more abundantly than ever before. The animal kingdom will be more prolific, and life prolonged very materially. This prolongation of life will be owing to the healthy electric and magnetic influences that will pervade the atmosphere. It would perhaps seem that the present redness of the sun, and the presence of a belt or veil of cosmic matter, justified in a measure, the prediction of Professor Grimmer, but disturbing as his prediction may be, we are told for our comfort that the strong and pure-blooded need have little to fear in these calamities. that those who are delicate or indisposed should adopt means to keep the system well supported and the blood pure, and that the most philosophical and effective method of accomplishing this is to keep the kidneys and liver in good condition. From the testimonials of such men as Dr Dio Lewis and Professor R. A. Gunn, M. D., Dean of the United States Medical college, New York, and thousands of influential non-professional people, it seems almost certain that for this purpose there is no preparation known to science equal to Warner's Safe Cure, better known as Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. This medicine has acquired the finest reputation of any preparation that was ever put upon the market. It is a radical blood purifier, which soothes and heals all inflamed organs, strengthens the nervous system, washes out all evidences of decay, regulates digestion, prevents malassimilation of food in a philosophical and rational manner, fortifies the system against climatic changes and malarial influences and the destructive agencies which seem to be so abundant in these "evil days."

It is not our purpose to dispute the correctness of Professor Grimmer's prophecies. As we have said, the marked disturbances of the past few years would seem to give a semblance of verification of his theory. It is certain as above stated, that we are passing through what may be regarded as a crucial period and it is the part of wise men not to ignore, but to learn to fortify themselves against the possibility of being overcome by these evils. It is a duty which every man owes to himself and his fellows, to mitigate as much as possible the suffering of humanity, and in no way better can he accomplish this purpose than to see to it that he himself is fortified by the best known preparation in the strongest possible manner, and that he exert the influence of his own example upon his fellows to the end that they, too, may share with him immunity from the destructive influences which seek his ruin.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 27, 1883.

DECEMBER PASSES.

Many subscribers will yet see on the little account pasted on their paper that their subscription expires during December. By promptly attending to the renewal they will contribute greatly to the success of their paper and the cause for which it stands. Every December renewal received during the month gets a good interest, that is, the Cynosure free from the expiration of their subscription till Jan. 1st. Then they have the paper for the whole year 1884 beside.

If each one will add to his effort for a good cause the name of a new subscriber, enclosing $4.00 for both, the two subscriptions will be good till Jan. 1, 1885, and the sender may have also his choice of the following valuable pamphlets:

1. The Batavia Convention pamphlet, with the great speeches on that occasion, illustrations of the Morgan Monument, etc.; or

2. Egypt in History and Prophecy; or, Pharaoh proclaiming God, by the celebrated Robert Patterson, from Hasting's Anti-infidel Library; or

3. The Anti-masonic Scrap Book, a new and enlarged edition now in press, containing all the tracts published by the N. C. A.; or

4. The Island of Madagascar; the excellent history written by Gen. J. W. Phelps and noticed in a late Cynosure.

5. Copies of any of the pamphlets sold by the N. C. A., to the amount of 25 cents.

A CLUB OF FIVE

trial subscribers (two months for 25 cents) will just now be a valuable accession to the Cynosure list. To every friend who will get one up and enclose the $1.25 and addresses plainly written we will send either of the documents mentioned above.

FOR A CLUB OF TEN the sender may choose any two from the above list.

Get the Cynosure circulated in your town. The lodge does not thrive where it is read.

EDITORIAL LETTERS.

A QUESTION AND THE ANSWER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 15, 1883.

A Sabbath-school institute closed last night at Dr. Rankin's church, with crowd below and in the galleries. It was opened by notables and the conductor is a leading spirit in the great Chatauqua assembly. He called for questions and I put in the basket this question:

"Are not the oaths, prayers, and spurious worship of the secret lodge system in Europe and the United States, which are invented by men and which omit the name of Christ, morally identical with those false religions, the infiltration of which under Solomon's reign caused his apostacy, the ruin of the Hebrew Commonwealth and the rejection of the Son of God?"

A thrill and hysteric giggle darted like electricity through the great crowd.

"Hold, hold," said the conductor, "this question may not be as ridiculous as you think. Perhaps the future student of history may trace our present mysteries back through the Greek to those old pagan mysteries in the days of Solomon. Yet I have no conscientious scruples about secret societies, for men may be good men, even saints, who belong to them. But a friend of mine who belonged to one of them told me that candidates sometimes didn't see and sometimes did see in the lodge; and he said the first object he saw was the principal liquor-seller of the town who came up, grasped his hand, and said, 'Brother I am happy to meet you here upon a level;' and as my friend was a temperance man, he was not proud of his associate."

PROSPECTING.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Dec. 17, 1883.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I came out here Saturday to "prospect" for Mr. Hinman's convention which opens to-morrow. I find he has labored abundantly, wisely and well. I yesterday preached for Dr. Dales, Second United Presbyterian church, and heard the Dr. give a warm notice to attend our convention. The congregation is large, wealthy and intelligent. Last night I preached for the Free Methodist brother Ekins, late of Brooklyn, N. Y. He has been here but a few weeks; but if a clear, calm, and eminently Christian intelligence can recall the flock, which is somewhat scattered, Bro. Ekins will with God's blessing, achieve it.

I propose to-day to call on the editor of the Philadelphia Press (once Forney's paper and political oracle), Mr. Smith is an admirer of Mr. Blaine, and the admiration seems to be mutual. So the Press seems to cling to Mr. Blaine's idea of making liquor the chief pillar of the State by repealing the State and county taxes, and putting the liquor tax in the place. But Elder Alexander of Dr. Dales' church, whose mind is representative of that class of men here, said yesterday that "Mr. Blaine's idea of supporting our States and counties, by the proceeds of the sale of liquor, will be repulsive to all sincere temperance people."

As the editor of the Press is an agreeable gentleman, and especially as he came to his present post from Thurlow Weed's old Albany Journal, we hope he will favor our convention. Gen. Phelps is out at West Chester and taking a warm and earnest interest in our convention, of which more anon. B.

"HOLD THE FORT."

Bishop Wright (we say not ex-Bishop, for he was never so much bishop of the United Brethren church as now), in an article under the above heading, pleads fervently with his anti-secret brethren not to quit their church, but to "hold their fort." He speaks thus:

"We have an anti-secrecy church. It is anti-secrecy in its origin, constitution and laws. It is anti-secry in its literature. The majority of its conference are anti-secrecy. It has built up a publishing house, a missionary society, a Sabbath school association and a number of educational institutions of not a little power. All these, rightly directed, may be made to wield a mighty influence against darkness and guile in the form of organized secrecy."

The writer goes on to give an accurate drawing of "the friends of the lodge and their apologists (and their apologists are always their friends)," and his picture of them would be complete, if from Rev. 16: 13 he had drawn them as governed by false teaching spirits, from three sources, viz., Satan direct; the false-prophetism of all ages; and from "the Beast" or living force, which is false religion, generic, and when he had shown them to be like that knave and hypocrite who "doffed his Republicanism and donned Democracy" every time he went from Michigan to Florida. He should have shown them to be:

1. Unclean spirits, either secretly "defiled with woman," or not "unspotted from the world," but who had "defiled their garments," by the worships or corruptions of Satan, "the god of this world."

2. They are like frogs ,at home in the water or on land, in the world or in the church, "doffing" their principles to suit their surroundings! Are such creatures, indeed, in churches?

3. And finally, these men are filled and inspired by "the spirit of devils," from the three sources above, which "deceive the kings" of the realm of mind, and "the whole world," to muster them to the battle-day of God, which is to fight out the question whether Christ or Satan shall reign and have the worship of our race.

But Bishop Wright is still in twilight He is for holding the (Brethren) fort while he sees and says that traitors are in command of it. Still he is in general "right," without the "W." Luther did not leave the corrupt Roman church till he was put out. Schism is sin and the spirit of schism is sin. Let us bless God and pray for Bishop Wright.

—The two conventions of last week, at Philadelphia and Holland, Mich., we are happy to be able to report so early. Both are important meetings: the first being almost a beginning of convention work in the second city of the nation, and the second being the first Anti-masonic convention conducted in a foreign tongue. Let Germans and Swedes follow the good example set by the Hollanders of Michigan.

—Our Brother Foote has given us a pen portrait of Sojourner Truth in this number which no reader will forget. The Cynosure may safely promise more like it during the coming year. Look over the list of contributors on the last page and be convinced that our readers may have great expectations of good things.

—The Philadelphia convention which so happily and successfully closed last Wednesday is well reported this week. A word from the General Agent must be added to Bro. Hinman's report. He says:

"Bro. Hinman took the initive of this meeting and carried it with a steady hand to its successful close. There is in him a happy union of faith and works which in this, as in other undertakings, was rewarded by substantial victory. Bro. Bailey's address in the afternoon was abundant in facts forcibly put, and his presence in the convention exceedingly helpful. Too much cannot be said in commendation of Drs. Stevenson, Collins and other brethren who strengthened and encouraged our work by their presence, their piety, their zeal and practical good sense. May the Lord reward them."

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

LEWISTON, N. Y., Dec. 12.—From Ransomville I came to this town at 8 P. M. yesterday. O. P. Scoville gave me a cordial welcome. The eight years intervening since our last meeting have written their lines upon his genial face, and two who then sat with us at the hospitable board and knelt at the family altar have trodden the valley and wait the coming of Father and mother on the celestial mountains. Others whom I missed among the faithful have passed with a good hope to the land of perpetual sunshine. The town grows old, but yet retains some of its "ancient landmarks." The "Frontier House" looks, I am told, very much as it did when a relay of horses was obtained, and Fox mounted the closely guarded carriage in the back yard and drove the ill-fated Morgan to Youngstown and to certain death. The stone building on the hill where a Royal Arch Chapter decreed the death of their victim, stands with shattered windows, a deserted, desolate, silent, monumental pile, telling its tale of blood and uttering a voice of warning to all who know the history of treason and murder written within the now gloomy walls of that "upper chamber."

Josiah Tryon is here, but in mind has passed to the dubiousness of the latter days of a good man. Mother Shephard, nearly 90 years old, remembers Col. King and the prominent actors of his time with great clearness. I regret my inability to remain longer and converse more with one whose knowledge is so important a link between the present and the anti-secrecy movements of fifty-seven years ago. From her I learned of Mr. John Burns, in good health and mental vigor, who was born and has lived here since 1813. Other engagements compel me to forego the privilege of seeking out and grasping the hand of one whose words must be like a voice from the grave of a buried past, calling for retribution on the "order" that still lives to blight every character that feels its vicious touch.

Our train is climbing a steep and winding way along the bank of the Niagara River, and as I look back upon the old historic town and recall fragments of its history that have fought their way through Masonic slander, treachery, prevarication and organized opposition, I feel a deep and quiet satisfaction in the full assurance that an impartial record has been kept which, though now obscured, will appear without a single omission when the seal is broken and "the books are opened before the throne of God and of the Lamb."

TONAWANDA.—Our train, like the swift "course of time," stays not for the dreamy fancies of living souls it bears away, but dashes by the realities with only time to catch a glimpse and print the shadow on memory's tablet, and shoots forward with a scream into the mysterious, and to us, unknown future. How precious in such an hour to feel the gentle touch of his hand who "leadeth me," even through raging currents of unknown Niagaras lie in great rocky reefs of disappointments and sorrows across my stream of life, and to know that the port of peace is sure.

And now here we are at 12 M. in the city of Buffalo, winding around piles of lumber, running close under the eves of great warehouses, crawling over viaducts, spanning the Erie canal crowded with boats, and cautiously "feeling" our way to the great Central depot and the heart of this busy, wicked, commercial emporium of western New York.

I must wait here five hours for a train to Dale where I hope to meet my dear boy Willie and the good friends at Bro. Capwell's, whose kindness I shall never be able to repay. Waiting is not pleasant, but I am striving to make it profitable. Somehow, despite the throng about me running to and fro, I seem to be alone, and yet not alone. I have been living in other days when "home" was not a myth, and the voices of loved ones were something more than echoes from a swift receding past, and as the past returns mid a halo of light, I see in those hours of sunshine but a dim reflection of that world of light, the eternal home of the saints, and I hear it said of the dwellers there, "These are they who have come up through great tribulation and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." While the father's heart clings to the dear children, the hand of faith grasps the scepter and the crown where a face familiar in other days, when we gathered at the altar of prayer, will not be strange or unknown to those who are spared a little longer ere the prepared "mansions" are gained. J. P. STODDARD.

—Bro. M. N. Butler, Missouri State lecturer, is announced to speak at Salem church near Albany, Dec 26 and 27.

THE ONE OPPOSITION RELIGION.

[Address by the Editor of the Cynosure at the Philadelphia Convention, Y. M. C. A. Hall, Philadelphia, Pa., Dec. 19, 1883.]

The globe which we inhabit, and which a railroad train, if its track were continuous, would encircle in a few brief weeks, is but "a particle, a speck, a mite" in the Universe of God. This little planet is clothed as by a poisoned shirt of Nessus, with misery and crime. In the city of Chicago, where seas and prairies meet and pour down their abundance, the daily press tells us, there are to-day, fifty thousand laborers without employment; and saloons govern the city; which, the same press tells us, average a murder a week!

As to this one fundamental fact, the universality of misery, there is no difference of opinion and no dispute. "The Westminster Divines," whose work was endorsed and authorized by a Parliament of Great Britain, say: "The fall brought mankind into a state of sin and misery." And infidels and atheists endorse the "misery;" denying only the "sin." Louis Blanc, the French statesman, infidel, and socialist, and one of the ablest of them all, in his chief work, "The Organization of Labor," page 265, 1848; utters these remarkable words:

"Misery restsains the intelligence of man in darkness. Miscry counsels always the sacrifice of personal dignity, and almost always demands it. Misery placcs him whose character is independent in a position of dependence, so as to conceal a new torment in a virtuc; and to change into gall, what there is of nobility in his blood. If Misery crcates long-sufferiug, it cngenders also crime. It makes slaves, it makes the greater part of thieves, assassins, and prostitutes."

Thus saint and sinner, infidel and Christian agree in the misery which enraps our globe as a shroud. Statisticans tell us, that millions on millions of laborers in British India never know what it is to eat a full meal's vituals from one year's end to another. As to the misery, all are agreed. The split is upon the remedy for it. * * *

Now Christ's remedy for "All the ills that flesh is heir to;" the sin and the misery of this earth; is simple, palpable and direct. He proposes, and from Adam down has proposed, that men should be "born again" and become like him. To aid them to this new heart or birth, he proposes to put his Holy Spirit in them, which he sent in a shower of tongues; and thus, in the words of a Hebrew prophet, "put his laws into their hearts" and "write them in men's minds."

This remedy is certainly effectual, if it is practicable. For if men loved God with all their hearts, and their neighbors as they love themselves, there would be a speedy and perpetual end to pauperism, loaferism, liquor, gambling, prostitution, fraud, ambition and war; which our judges, courts, and commonsense and observation tell us and show us are the prolific causes and sources of the misery of mankind. For the figures show us that multitudes drink more money than they eat; and chew and smoke more moncy than they wcar; that one war-ship costs more than our President and his Cabinet; and, in the city of London, reports show that where ten needle women have insufficient food, a hundred other women, in the words of the Irish orator, Curran, "starve upon the sin of a promiscuous prostitution."

Now, whatever may be believed or disbelieved by sceptics or scientists concerning Christ's proposed remedy for human misery, it must be confessed to be a magnificently sublime conception; a way by which finite, sinful men may reach and rest in an infinite and holy God. And as to its efficacy, the proof is visible and tangible. The penitentiary, the poor house, the insane-asylum and the gallows all hold up their hands and testify, When men quit their sins, we lose our victims! When sin stops, misery stops. And it is thus clear as mathematics, that when Christ's remedy is universally embraced,

"Then pains and groans and griefs and fears,
And death itself shall die."

But there is another remedy proposed for human woe. Let us consider that.

Mackey's Lexicon of Freemasonry, page 16, says: "The Mason who conforms to the principles and precepts of the order is free from sin;" and, on a subsequent page he says the Master Mason "is entitled to the reward of the just made perfect."

This is positive and explicit. Sinless salvation is to come, not by faith in Christ and the renewing of the Holy Ghost; but by conforming to the precepts of a Masonic lodge; salvation by ceremonies, in short. This is to remedy and remove human misery.

Now if a man is to be saved, and society regenerated by conforming to an order, open or secret, but especially secret, the priest who governs that order governs him. Hence the perfect despotism of the lodge. "The power of the lodge-master is absolute." No appeal can be taken from his decision!

But this is not all, nor the worst. Salvation by ceremonies emancipates from the moral law, and licenses crime. If the man obeys his order, he is safe, do what else he may. When O'Donnell shot Carey, he said to his victim's wife, "I did not do it. I was sent to do it." He had sworn in secret to obey, and if he had refused, his own life was forfeit.

We learn from our Philadelphia Ledger, of yesterday, that Peter Wade was to be hung the day before, Dec. 16, in Dublin, for the murder of Mr. Quinnet. "The prisoner said he belonged to a secret society whose orders he obeyed." Of course he felt no guilt. In Masonic language, "he conformed to the precepts of his order, and was "free from sin." (Mac. Lex. p. 16.) The same Ledger of yesterday gives the names of ten men in Glasgow, members of a secret society, now on trial in Edinburgh for conspiring to blow up with dynamite public buildings in that city, to overthrow the Queen's authority in Ireland, by coercing legislation by terror. These, too, conformed to the precepts of their order; and according to Masonic law, are "free from sin." And this same principle "freed from sin" the murderers of William Morgan; the murdcrers of William Miller of Belfast; those who slew the author of Jachin and Boaz; John Forgie of Ontario; and David Brownlee of Warren county, Illinois. All, in the words of Mackey "confirmed to the precepts their order." This explains how the sixty men, who, as Thurlow Weed shows, conspired for the murder of Morgan, could be good men. And they were good men, if they had any good men in western New York at that time; men of otherwise blameless, upright lives. But they had sworn and must keep their oaths, and preserve their order. Morgan had broken his oath, and somebody must inflict its penalty. I, last week, conversed, in Washington with an intelligent, well-to-do and apparently temperate and Christian Irishman, who was with O'Connell; and he, now an old man and a man of property, blamed O'Connell for not leading them to kill every landlord in Ireland. "Do you think it would have been right?" I asked. "Yes, sir;" he replied in good English accents. If he had murdered every English landlord he would have "conformed to the precepts of his order," and kept his oath. So did the assassins of Cavendish and Burke. So did those who murdered the Czar; and those who have repeatedly attempted the life of the good Emperor William, and perhaps of Queen Victoria. And the spirit that rules the lodge will help murder one day, and help hang the murderers the next.

Now there are multitudes of Masons, Socialists, Communists, and even Nihilists, who are better than their system, and who would not commit crime. But that does not change or alter their secret system. There are others who will commit crimes, as facts daily show us.

But I wish to show that the secret lodge system in Europe and America are one and the same; and I take my authority, largely, from a book just out, by Prof. Ely, of the John Hopkin's University, Baltimore, and lecturer in Cornell University, Ithaca, New York. Please mark, I do not say that the Irish land leagues, socialism, communism and nihilism are literally one and the same with Freemasonry. They are endlessly diversified; "Distinct as the billows, yet one like the sea." They are one in every essential moral particular. I take these particulars from Prof. Ely's book:

They all claim to be salvations without Christ. They will give men "liberty, equality, and fraternity." They will emancipate laborers from the tyranny of capitalists and employers. They will make men meet on a level, and live on the square. Saint Simon's followers say "His words will renew the face of the earth." (Prof. Ely, p. 59.) These are Christ's ideas stolen out of the Bible for Satan's uses. Then,

2. Then all alike swear subjection to unknown superiors. A Mason swears to "obey" every other Master Mason on earth, who may give him a sign. Baboeuf's followers "did not ever know the seven chiefs" whom they had sworn to obey. (Ely, p. 32.) Baboeuf and Cabet were the chief communists. (p. 31.) Our secret Trades-Unionists, like the Irish Leaguers, and Invincibles are bound to obey the order of unknown superiors. So are the Masons sworn to obey signs "given, handed or sent" by unknown persons. They only know that the order is Masonic.

3. They all alike have secret initiations, oaths or obligations. This defies Christ, and contemns his example. John 18: 20.

4. Finally: they are all alike, opposition religions, and substitutes for the atonement of Christ. Saint Simon makes this explicit declaration: "It has been thought that every religious system ought to (be made to) disappear, because men have succeeded in proving the weakness and insufficiency of Catholicism. People are decided in this. Religion cannot disappear from the world; it can only be changed." He then undertook to give the world a substitute; or opposition religion. So do they all.

The ancients fabled of a sea-god, Proteus, who, when caught, changed into a multitude of forms; a lion, leopard, serpent, and even into a tree, flame, or fountain; but if held fast this juggling deity would come back into his own form and answer. Such is Masonry, and the rest. It is a religion, no religion, a charity, savings bank, an insurance company, and a social club. "Tis everything by turns, and nothing long," till seized and firmly held, it turns into its true nature, a Christless, heathen, opposition religion, a flickering, shadowy "image of the beast" (Rev. 13: 14–17) not made by religious people, but by men at large, (as the lodges are) who "dwell on the earth."

The point submitted is that these are all one false, opposition, Christless religion, and THE opposition religion of the last days.

The National Reform Association fights this false religion bravely, as Grant fought the rebellion, wherever it shows its front. It stands against this huge hydra, for the Sabbath, for the Bible in schools, for chaplains, for Thanksgivings and all national recognitions of the Christian religion. But our N. C. A. is moving on Montgomery, the seat of this secret rebellion against God and goodness. We insist on uncovering these dark-lantern devil worships which are decciving and destroying the nations. They corrupt the ballot-box by votes of men who owe another allegiance than that to the United States; and practice religious worships which exclude or insult Jesus Christ: and they are destroying the court-house and legislaturc by superceding, in them, the oath of God by the secret oaths of devils.

What wonder that they dynamite! Their god was a "liar and murderer from the beginning." This false "god" and "prince of this world" and ruler of its darkncss appears throughout the whole Bible, clearly and distinctly as the rival and antagonist of Christ. He crawls as a serpent, he ravens as a lion, or a wolf; he is the deceiver of the world, the king of its evils, and the god of its idolatries. And if any one is weak or wicked enough to ask why an infinite, great and good God should suffer such a creature to exist, I will answer him when he will explain satisfactorily why the same benign being suffered Jefferson Davis to inaugurate a slavery rebellion, and bury a half million of young husbands, and those who were to be husbands, in the soil of the United States.

Let us rejoice and give glory to God that religious falsehoods must fail, and Christ reign; and the "old serpent" which is the devil and Satan," with the "beast" and the "false prophet" shall be put where they will vex men no more, till the thousand ycars arc accomplished; and lamb and lion, laborer and capitalist, lie down in peace together, and mankind shout jubilee in a world enlightened, purified, ransomed and redeemed.

HOW TO DO IT.

A TWENTY-FIVE THOUSAND LIST BEFORE JANUARY 1ST.

And all so easily done that you may laugh that it was not thought of before. There are at ordinary computation over 20,000 readers of the Cynosure. Now let each one of these friends get us a two-months subscriber for 25cts., and the work is DONE. For with the present list, that will make 25,000 and more. Give your servants in the office this list, and then it is their business to make, if possible, this magnificent list A PERMANENT ONE.

PUSH IT!

—Bro. C. F. A. Gantzchow, formerly of Hartsville, Indiana, has for several years been traveling between the Pacific and Atlantic States. He has located at Spokane Falls, Washington Territory, and called on us last week on his way thither. He is as much engaged as ever for the success of the reform and its organ, and urges that the success of the Cynosure would be promoted if an endowment fund was raised to maintain its editorial chair. He offers to give $500 to such an endowment if $20,000 is raised. We advise to put this money into active service and let the interest that comes from a strong list of subscribers support the paper. Bro. G. fears that a new political paper would crowd us here in Chicago, and that the opposition to lodgery cannot support two national organs; hence he advises that politics have a large department in this paper. That would be less expensive, but if national political issues are to bc urged their importance at least demands another paper, well sustained.

THE CHRISTMAS-TREE BUSINESS.—The Christmas-tree business is the show business. It is a revised edition of Barnum. Barnum shows because he loves to, and loves to make money; but Sunday schools show because they love to, and also love to plcase the children, and retain their attendance. As a mere matter of show, and love to show, Barnum and the Christmas-tree are on the same level—both of "the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life." So far as the other objects are concerned the levels are not far apart; for Barnum loves to make money for good purposes, and very likely for base; and the Sunday schools love to retain their scholars for the good purpose of doing them good, and also for the bad purpose of beating other schools. Leave the show business to the devil; it clearly belongs to him. —Christian Harvester.

WILL CHRISTIANS LIE?—All are ready to say no, they cannot willingly and willfully tell lies and remain Christians; and yet it is a fact that some ministers and leading men connected with some of the churches in Goshen, and who admit that they are and have been Freemasons, yet deny ever having heard in the Masonic lodge such words as "Boaz," "Jachin," "Shibboleth," "Tubal Cain," or "Mah-hah-bone." Now if those men never have received those Masonic words in the lodge room, they never have been made Masons. If they are Masons then they are shameless falsifiers, and have no business in the church as Christians.—Rescue.

THE HOME.

THE GOLDEN SIDE.

There is many a rest in the road of life,
If we only would stop to take it;
And many a tone from the better land,
If the querulous heart would make it!
To the sunny soul that is full of hope,
And whose beautiful trust ne'er faileth,
The grass is green and the flowers are bright,
Though the wintry storm prevaileth.

Better to hope, though the clouds hang low,
And to keep the eyes still lifted;
For the sweet blue sky will soon peep through,
When the ominous clouds are rifted;
There was never a night without a day,
Or an evening without a morning,
And the darkest hour, as the proverb goes,
Is the hour before the dawning.

There is many a gem in the path of life,
Which we pass in our idle pleasure,
That is richer far than the jewelled crown
Or the miser's hoarded treasure;
It may be the love of a little child,
Or a mother's prayer to heaven,
Or only a beggar's glowing thanks
For a cup of water given.

Better to weave in the web of life
A bright and golden filling,
And to do God's will with a ready heart,
With hands that are swift and willing,
Then to snap the minute delicate threads
Of our curious lives asunder,
And then blame Heaven for the tangled ends,
And sit and grieve and wonder.

CHURCH FROLICS.

It is a very unpleasant task to rebuke misbehavior in professed Christians, but the purity of the church and the salvation of men absolutely demand it. At a recent Methodish oyster supper at Bayville, L. I., the pastor of the church was knocked down and Capt. John Sackett knocked John Smith senseless. At a Freewill Baptist donation party in the house of worship, swiftly following a protracted revival meeting, the entertainment was turned into a hurlyburly, the pastor feebly protesting. A Congregational sociable held in the church, ends in sports too boisterous and rude for a respectable bar-room. Shall such scandalous desecration of the house of God go on during the winter? The pastor first of all is bound to put an instantaneous and complete stop to all such wickedness. If the pastor is an unconverted man, or too weak to do his duty in ruling well, then the deacons or other church officials should take the matter resolutely in hand. If pastor and officials are corrupt or weak then the membership should protest so stoutly as to save the church from becoming a by-word and hissing among the ungodly. Some timid reader will suggest that it would make trouble in the church for the pastor to interfere with the amusements of the brethren. No doubt it would, but trouble is not so bad as sin and death. Phineas made trouble among the princes of Israel; Moses made trouble when he came down from the mount and found Aaron and the brethren at play worshiping the image of a stupid calf; our Lord made trouble when he found the Jews turning the temple of God into a huckster's shop. Luther made trouble throughout the whole Christian world when he protested against the practice of the church in selling the privilege of committing sin. Whitefield disturbed the church by declaring that ministers of the Gospel should be converted men. Elder Elijah Lovejoy troubled the whole American church and lost his life by declaring human slavery to be a sin. Let us not then be too much afraid of troubling the church by casting out devils. Vomiting poison shocks the whole system but otherwise certain death would ensue. Timid Christians, fear not them that kill the body and after that have no more that they can do, but rather fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell.

THE BAG OF PEARLS.

An Arab once lost his way in a desert. His provisions were soon exhausted. For two days and two nights he had not a morsel to eat. He began to fear that he should die of hunger. He looked eagerly, but in vain, along the level sand for some caravan of travelers from whom he might beg some bread.

At last he came to a place where there was a little water in a well, and around the well's mouth the marks of an encampment. Some people had lately pitched their tents there, and had gathered them up and gone away again. The starving Arab looked around in the hope of finding some food that the travelers might have left behind. After searching awhile, he came upon a little bag, tied at the mouth, and full of something that felt hard and round. He opened the bag with great joy, thinking it contained either dates or nuts, and expecting that with them he should be able to satisfy his hunger. But as soon as he saw what it contained, he threw it on the ground, and cried out in despair. "It is only pearls." He lay down in the desert to die.

Pearls are very precious. If the man had been at home, this bag full of pearls would have made his fortune. He would have received a large sum of money for them, and would have been a rich man. But pearls could not feed him when he was hungry. Although you had your house full of pearls, if you have not bread you will die. The Arab knew the value of the pearls that he found; but he would have given them all at that moment for one morsel of bread—would have given them, but could not, for there was no bread within his reach. So, although he was very rich, he was left to die of want.

Pearls and gold cannot preserve the life of the body, far less can they satisfy the soul. Bread is more precious to a hungry man than pearls; and the bread of life is more precious still. Christ has expressly said, "I am the bread of life." How foolish it is to spend ourselves in gathering things that cannot feed us if we are hungry, and cannot save us from our sin? "Seek first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness," and keep other things in a lower place. The chief thing for each of us is to Christ the life of our souls forever; and then we may gladly accept whatever good things in this life God may be pleased to give us. "What is a man profited, if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?"

He who is rich when he comes to die, but is still without Christ for his soul, is like the Arab in the desert, with his bag full of pearls, but perishing for want of bread.—Rev. Wm. Arnot.

HOMELY ILLUSTRATION OF FAITH.

Sam Jones was talking to a man of weak faith the other day. The doubter asked if Mr. Jones could not give him a demonstration of religion. "None," was the reply. "You must get inside the fold, and the demonstration will come of itself. Humble yourself, have faith, and you shall know the truth."

"In other words, I must believe, accept it before it is proved, and believe it without proof."

"Now, hold on right here. Out West they have a place for watering cattle. The cattle have to mount a platform to reach the troughs. As they step on a platform their weight presses a lever, and this throws the water into the troughs. They have to get on the platform through faith, and this act provides the water and leads them to it. You are like a smart steer that slips around to the barn-yard and peeps in the trough, without getting on the platform. He finds the trough dry, of course, for it needs his weight on the platform to force the water up. He turns away disgusted, and tells everybody there is no water in the trough. Another steer, not quite so smart, but with more faith, steps on the platform. The water springs into the trough, and he marches up and drinks. That's the way with religion. You've got to get on to the platform. You can't even examine it intelligently until you are on to the platform. If you slide around the back way, you'll find the trough dry. But step on the platform, and the water and the faith come together without any trouble—certain and sure and abundant."—Detroit Free Press.

IF YE FAINT NOT.

In one of the towns of England there is a beautiful little chapel, and a very touching story is told in connection with it. It was built by one who had long been an infidel. He had a praying wife, but he would not listen to her; would not allow their minister even to take dinner with them; would not look at the Bible; would not allow religion even to be talked of. She make up her mind, seeing she could not influence him by her voice, that every day at twelve o'clock she would pray to God for his salvation. She said nothing to him, but every day at that hour she told the Lord about her husband. At the end of twelve months there was no change in him. But she did not give up. Six months more went past. Her faith began to waver, and she said, "Will I have to give him up at last? Perhaps when I am dead he will answer my prayers." When she had got to that point it seemed just as if God had got her where he wanted her. The man came home to dinner one day. His wife was in the dining-room waiting for him, but he did not come in. She waited for him some time, and finally looked for him all through the house. At last she thought of looking into the little room where she had prayed so often. There he was, praying with agony at the same bedside where she had prayed for so many months, asking forgiveneness of his sins. And this is a lesson for you, wives, who have infidel husbands. The Lord saw that woman's faith, and answered her prayers.—Christian Statesman.

THE WHEEL HORSE.

There is a wheel-horse in every family; some one who takes the lead on all occasions. It may be the oldest daughter, possibly the father, but generally it is the mother. Extra company, sickness, etc., give her a heavy increase of the burden she is already carrying. Even summer vacations bring less rest and recreation to her than to others of the family. The city house must be put in order to leave, and the clothing for herself and children which a country sojourn demands seems never to be finished; and the excursions and picnics which delight the hearts of the young people, are not wholly a delight to the "provider."

Woman's work is never done. She would never have it done. Ministering to father and mother, cherishing her husband—no true woman wants to see her work done. But, because it is never done, she needs resting times.

Every night the heavy truck is turned up; the wheel-horse is put in the stable, and the labor and care are dismissed until the morrow. The thills of the household van cannot be turned up at night, and the tired house-mother cannot go into a quiet stall for repose. She goes to sleep to-night feeling the pressure of to-morrow. She must have an eye over all until every one is in bed, and must keep an eye ready to open at a moment's notice, to answer the needs of children, and both eyes open bright and early to see the machine well started for the new day —Sel.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

A LITTLE PHILOSOPHER.

The days are short, and the nights are long,
And the wind is nipping cold;
The tasks are hard, and the sums are wrong,
And the teachers often scold.
But Johnny McCree,
O what cares he
As he whistles along the way?
"It will come right
By to-morrow night,"
Says Johnny McCree to-day.

The plums are few, and the cake is plain,
The shoes are out at the toe;
For money, they look in the purse in vain—
It was all spent long ago.
But Johnny McCree,
O what cares he
As he whistles along the street?
Would you have the blues
For a pair of shoes
While you have a pair of feet?

The snow is deep, there are paths to break,
But the little arm is strong,
The work is play, if you'll only take
Your work with a bit of song.
And Johnny McCree,
O what cares he
As he whistles along the road?
He will do the best,
And will leave the rest
To the care of his Father, God.

The mother's face, it is often sad—
She scarce knows what to do;
But at Johnny's kiss, she is bright and glad—
She loves him, and wouldn't you?
For Johnny McCree,
O what cares he
As he whistles along the way!
The trouble will go,
And "I told you so,"
Our brave little John will say.

FIVE KINDS OF PENNIES.

A boy who had a pocketful of coppers dropped one into the missionary box, laughing as he did so. He had no thought in his heart about Jesus or the heathen. Was his penny not as light as tin?

Another boy put in a penny and looked around to see if anybody was praising him. His was the brass penny not the gift of a lowly heart, but of a proud spirit.

A third boy gave a penny, saying to himself "I suppose I must, because all others do." That was an iron penny. It was the gift of a cold, selfish heart.

As a fourth boy dropped his penny into the box he shed a tear, and his heart said, "Poor heathen! I am sorry they are so poor, so ignorant and so miserable. That was a silver penny; the gift of a heart full of pity.

But there was one scholar gave his saying "For thy sake, Lord Jesus. Oh, that the heathen may hear of thee, the Saviour of mankind!" That was a golden penny, because it was the gift of faith and love.—Christian Advocate.

LEAVES NOT THE LIFE.

"Grandpa, what can you be doing?" inquired Gerald, coming toward grandpa with a face full of amused astonishment; "what can you be doing?"

"I am making a gooseberry bush for you," replied grandpa, composedly. "I noticed you liked the ripe gooseberries when you were at Pemberton Lodge last night, and I think you would like a bush of your own."

"But grandpa," began Gerald, looking very hard at grandpa, and thinking very hard in trying to decide if he was joking, or had quite gone crazy—"grandpa, gooseberry bushes grow; they are not made."

"It pleases me to make this one. All the rest may come as they please," replied grandpa, pinning a leaf here and there to a tall, dry brier which he had previously planted firmly in a large pot. "How do you like your gooseberry bush?"

Gerald did not wish to hurt grandpa's feelings, but what could he say? He looked at the pretended bush, and at grandpa's face, and was perplexed, for grandpa appeared heartily in earnest in the work of trying to make the bush?

"It cannot have berries on it," he replied evasively.

"It cannot, pray tell me why?" inquired grandpa, seeming to be astonished as he drew off a little way to admire his bush, and to glance at Gerald.

"Because, grandpa, it has no life."

Grandpa folded his arms across his breast; he gave a little push up to the glasses astride of his nose; he looked so inquiringly at Gerald that Gerald felt obliged to add: "Dead bushes do not bear berries."

"How do you know it is dead? You say hard things of a fresh, green bush. See the leaves. Why, boy, your grandpa knows that a dead bush does not bear berries, but look, don't you think he has given it life?"

"It will not stay fresh and green, grandpa; you only put on its leaves; you did not put any life in it," said Gerald gravely, more and more perplexed about grandpa's uncomfortable notion about the bush.

"Will not the green leaves bring it life?" said grandpa. "What is the life of the bush if such beautiful green leaves are not its life?"

"Grandpa, dear, you are only hoaxing me; I believe you know it is the sap. The sap makes the leaves grow, and shows that the bush is alive, but the leaves do not make the sap."

Grandpa laid down the leaf and pin; he did no more toward making a bush. He drew Gerald close to him and laid his hand upon his head, and gave a long pleased look in his face, as he asked: "And you think all those beautiful fresh leaves do not give life to this bush?"

"No, grandpa; they never can."

"And suppose they had grown on the bush, what then?"

"Oh, then we would know that the bush was alive."

"Why, if the leaves are not the life of the bush how would you know any better about it if it had leaves of its own?"

Gerald considered.

"I think, grandpa, that the leaves only show that the bush is alive, not make it alive."

"Can a bush without leaves be alive?"

"Yes, sir. If I cut off all the leaves of my bushes in the garden they would still be alive."

"Can a bush grow without sap?"

"No, sir; the sap makes it grow."

"But if the bush has sap—that is life—how about the leaves?"

"It will put out leaves, of course, grandpa, if it has life."

"Now, Gerald," said grandpa, very earnestly, "this world may be compared to a garden. Every boy and girl, and man and woman, in it may be called one of God's plants. What is the difference between God's living plants and the dead ones?"

"What a funny notion, grandpa; I do not believe I know what you mean."

"What is the difference between a real Christian and a make-believe Christian?"

"Real Christians are good, and the make-believes only seem to be good; is that it, grandpa?"

"That is right so far as it goes, but the difference between God's living plants and the dead ones is that the living ones grow and bear leaves and fruit, while the dead ones have the leaves pinned on."

"Grandpa, what a funny, funny notion."

"The leaves and fruit of God's plants are their works; and, boy, many plants, not really living plants of God, have leaves and fruit of a certain kind, but they are dead leaves. Can you tell me why?"

Gerald thought a minute. The lesson he had been taught flashed upon his mind with a new light.

"Grandpa," he said, "do you mean that living plants must have God's Spirit, and that works without God's Spirit are dead?"

Grandpa smiled. "You are right, boy; even dead plants often have leaves and fruit which do not grow from the living power of God's Holy Spirit, which come from outside influences, and are like good, green leaves pinned upon a dry, dead stem. The leaves and fruit, you see, are not the life; the Spirit of God in the heart is the real life, just as the sap in the plant is its life."

"Grandpa, why did you ever try to make a gooseberry bush?" inquired Gerald, looking at the result of grandpa's effort.

"I tried to make it, boy, because I wanted you to remember for the rest of your life that leaves are not the life—that works never made a Christian—but that good works, the leaves of God's plants, must grow by the influence of his Holy Spirit, or they are like dead leaves pinned on; for good works are not the life, they are only the consequences of life. What kind of a plant do you wish to be—a plant with a few leaves pinned on, or a living plant, sending out green leaves and sweet fruit, because God's Spirit has made you a living plant?"

Gerald whispered his answer in grandpa's ear, and grandpa smoothed back his hair and smiled, and taking his hand walked out to the bright sunshine and fresh air, leaving the dead bush with its false leaves, while he enjoyed the beauty and fragrance of the living plants holding up such sweet contented faces in the living garden toward the brightness overhead.—*N. KINDNESS TO ANIMALS.

A teacher of a large public school in England has, during many years, been carefully teaching the children in his school kindness to animals—to feed the birds and pat the horses, and enjoy making all God's harmless creatures happy; and he now tells us that out of about seven thousand children that have gone out from his school, not one has ever been charged with a criminal offence in any court.

A celebrated French teacher (M. DeSailly) has been teaching the children in his school, ever since 1851, kindness to animals. He says it has had the best influence on their lives and characters. He has found them "not only more kind to animals, but more gentle and affectionate toward each other," and he hopes that principles of kindness to animals will soon be taught in every school. In more than five thousand French schools regular lessons are now given on this subject; hundreds, perhaps thousands, of societies of children have been formed in the schools of England, France and other countries, to protect animals from cruelty. Out of about two thousand criminals in American prisons inquired of on the subject, it was found that only twelve had any pet animal during their childhood.

About six hundred prizes are now given every year to scholars in English schools who write the best compositions on kindness to animals. They have been presented to these scholars by the daughters of the Queen and other distinguished persons, in the presence of large audiences, numbering at one time nearly ten thousand people. And I was glad to read, the other day, what two brave English boys did to prevent cruelty to a cat which three wicked boys, or hoodlums, had stolen, and having tied a string to her neck, were, for fun, throwing her into a broad ditch of water and then dragging her out. These two brave boys were smaller than the hoodlums, and they offered to give all the money they both had—about a shilling—if they would let the cat go, but the hoodlums only laughed at them and refused. Finding there was no other way to save the cat, they both suddenly rushed on the big hoodlum and pitched him into the ditch where he had been throwing the cat; then they rushed with such force at the one who was holding the cat that he dropped her; then they rushed at the third one, and he ran away; and then they picked up the cat and ran away themselves before the hoodlums could get ready to follow. It was a brave battle fought against great odds for the prevention of cruelty to animals, and I think the boys who did it deserve to be made knights of the "Legion of Honor" as much as any man who ever fought on the battle-field.

I read another good story the other day, about a distinguished clergyman of Massachusetts, known throughout the nation as a great and good man. It is about one of the experiences of his childhood, and I will tell it in his own words. He says, "I saw, one day, a little spotted turtle sunning itself in the shallow water, and I lifted the stick in my hand to kill it, for though I had never killed any creature, I had seen other boys kill birds, squirrels, and the like, and I had a disposition to follow their wicked example; but all at once something checked my little arm, and a voice within me said, clear and loud, 'It is wrong,' and so I held my uplifted stick until the turtle vanished from my sight. Then I went home and told my mother, and asked her what it was that told me it was wrong. She wiped a tear from her eye, and took me in her arms, and said, 'Some call it conscience, but I call it the voice of God in the human soul. If you listen to it and obey it, then it will speak clearer, and always guide you right. But if you do not listen to it, or disobey it, then it will fade out, little by little, and leave you in the dark without a guide. Your life, my child, depends upon heeding that little voice.'"

The celebrated Dr. Channing writes in one of his books, "I would not crush the meanest (harmless) insect that crawls upon the ground. It has the same right to life that I have. It received it from the same Father, and I will not harm the works of God by wanton cruelty."

In my parlor I have a beautiful picture—a hunter with bow and arrow about to shoot a mountain deer that stands unconscious of his danger; but suddenly, behind the deer, appears in the mist the dim but gigantic form of the Spirit of the Mountains, with uplifted hands. The terrified hunter drops his bow and spares the life he could not restore. Remember, children, whenever you may be tempted to take without cause the innocent life of any creature, that there is present everywhere, that great and pure Spirit upon whose mercy you depend, and who knows every wrong you may inflict on the humblest of his creatures. Protect the weak, relieve the suffering, make the world happier that you have lived in it, and you will be happier yourselves in this life, and better prepared for life immortal.

TEMPERANCE.

The National Woman's Christian Temperance Union has issued a call for the States to celebrate on Dec. 23rd, the tenth anniversary of the woman's crusade.

If a man becomes intemperate at twenty years of age he will only live fifteen and a half years, instead of forty-four years. If a man becomes intemperate at thirty years of age he will only live thirteen and a half years, instead of thirty-six.—Dr. B. W. Richardson.

Temperance puts coal on the fire, meal in the barrel, flour in the tub, money in the purse, credit in the country, contentment in the house, clothes on the children, vigor in the body, intelligence in the brain, and spirits in the whole constitution.—Benjamin Franklin.

The temperance movement in the South is quite active and widespread. The prohibitionists in South Carolina, North Carolina, Georgia and other States are making war against the liquor sellers under the local option law, and are successful beyond the most sanguine expectations. The colored people are almost solid in favor of temperance.

Among those exposed to cholera in the East, it was repeatedly observed that those who had been accustomed to the use of liquor, even in a moderate degree, were the first to be attacked, and the surest to die. Of the many in this country who have committed suicide during the summer, a surprisingly large number have been found to be men and women of drinking habits.

The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Georgia, in his article in a late North American Review, entitled "Shooting at Sight," says: "The day of the grog shop and of that which it produces—the inflamed passion and the deadly weapon—is rapidly passing away. The local option retail law generally pervades the State of Georgia; county after county prohibits the traffic, reduces expenses and diminishes crime. The prosecuting officers of the State are paid according to the number of criminals tried, and they inform the writer that in those counties where this traffic is prohibited the office of solicitor general is worthless. Soon, let us hope, the generous Southern sun will shine upon an entire population sober, prosperous, peaceful and happy. May that population be swollen into a vast multitude by a tide of emigration which shall enrich every valley and cover every hilltop with good, sober, industrious men."

A magazine writer has recently given a description of the class in Paris known as 'plaster-wipers." Throughout Western Europe new houses are very unhealthful, requiring about two years with fires all winter, and open windows all summer, to render them fit for human habitation. So people who care for their health avoid new houses, and they are usually occupied by the class of adventurers referred to, who flock wherever they see a new building going up, and take possession, with no furniture save the objects which the law exempts from levy. They occupy their quarters without inquiry, and without paying rent, for they have done when finally sent away, all that was expected of them. They have wiped the plaster dry, and given the house an inhabited look, and within a twelve-month have probably been the means of decoying to it respectable tenants.

But what is the cost to them? The author says, "They are lucky if they have only the rheumatism, and have only lost teeth and hair. Diseases of the throat and chest decimate them. But they can pay rent with life easier than with money, for they can lay down life, they cannot lay down coin.

This is one of the saddest pictures of human life ever drawn with the colors of reality. But there is a destroyer who takes money, robs the wife and children of bread and shelter, leaves men cold and hungry and ragged, and at the last "biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder," destroying "both soul and body in hell." The exhortation is, "Fear him!"—Union Signal.

THE STRONGEST DRINK.

Water is the strongest drink. It drives mills; it's the drink of lions and horses, and Samson never drank anything else. Let young men be teetotalers if only for economy's sake. The beer money will soon build a house. If what goes into a mash tub went into the kneading-trough, families would be better fed and better taught. If what is spent in waste were only saved against a rainy day, workhouses would never be built. The man who spends his money with the public and thinks the landlord's bow and "How do ye do my good fellows," mean true respect, is a perfect simpleton. We don't light fires for the herring's comfort, but to roast him. Men do not keep pot-houses for laborers'-good; if they do, they certainly miss their aim. Why, then, should people drink "for the good of the house?" If I spend money for the good of any house, let it be my own and not the landlord's. It is a bad well into which you must put water; and the beer-house is a bad friend, because it takes your all and leaves you nothing but headaches. He who calls those his friends who let him sit and drink by the hour is ignorant—very ignorant. Why, red lions and tigers and eagles and vultures are all creatures of prey, and why do so many put themselves within the power of their jaws and talons? Such as drink and live riotously, and wonder why their faces are so blotchy and their pockets so bare, would leave off wondering, if they had two grains of wisdom. They might as well ask an elm tree for pears as look to loose habits for health and wealth. Those who go to the public house for happiness climb a tree to find fish.—Spurgeon.

RECENT LITERATURE.

LUCILE VERNON, or the Church at Lansington. By W. T. Meloy. Published by the author, and for sale by the National Christian Association. pp. 208. Price, 75 cents.

The name of the esteemed pastor of the United Presbyterian church of Chicago, and chairman of the N. C. A. Board of Directors will be recognized as the author of this volume. It is in literary rank a religious novel; but such a classification is very far from giving a just idea of the work. It is rather a charming story of real life as seen from the outlook of a successful pastor's study; and its simple reality, like the famous "Sunnyside" of years ago, gives it a healthy charm and interest that no mere work of the imagination could effect. The characters are real, and so are the events, and also in considerable part the speeches on public occasions.

The style marks also a wide difference between this and ordinary stories. Instead of the attenuated and flowing lines of the professional novelist, we mark the terse and vigorous sentenees which occasionally drop into an argument, or take up a strain of quiet moralizing, or of genuine eloquence, and betray the business of the author. The quiek and faithful analysis of the joys and difficulties of ministerial life, too, would not readily occur to one who lacks its real experience. To begin the book is to read it to the end. Like the stories of Gough or Moody, the tears and smiles that it continually provokes have that genuine quality that does the heart good. You can hardly say why but you know that you are reading no fietion, but an honest story of real men and women. The author, we are happy to announce, contemplates a new edition and an additional chapter or two, which shall show how a eonscientiouspastor and his people meet the practical and sometimes severe questions that the lodge is continually forcing upon them. The book is for sale at the N. C. A. office, and it is not too latc to get one for a New Ycar's gift.

THE GATES WIDE OPEN; or Scenes in Another World. By George Wood. Boston: Lee & Shepard. pp. 354. Price $1.50.

When the author some twenty-five years ago sent out 'Modern Pilgrims," his effort in attempting a modern caricature of Bunyan's immortal work was given a very popular reception. The present book was written not long after; but, sincc Miss Phelps has assumed to peep beyond the portals of eternity and give us glimpses of a future home set round with Mohammedan furnishings, the name has been changed as if to challenge the lady explorer. The author's stylc is simple and attractive, and, as thc story is altogether laid in the mansions of the spirits redeemed by Christ, its tone is humble and pious; while advantage is taken, after the manner of Dante, to rebuke somc ccelesiastical and social evils yet in full strength in the church militant, and to interweave some interesting history of the martyrs for Jesus. With this for one view of the book, it is no less entertaining as a caricature. The hints that Milton, Watts, Whately, Pollock, Babbage and others have given us of another life have served, as it were, for texts, and those grave authors would be amused and perhaps provoked to read how their uncertain and poetic lines have been improved upon. After all, such a writing, while it may entertain for a moment with novelty and speculation, is far short of the inspired Word in enlivening the faney and strengthing the hope of a godly man respecting the place the Saviour has prepared for those who love him. The book is sold in Chicago by H. P. Chapin.

The Union Signal, our brave and true temperance cotemporary, which leads the femalc host of temperance like the "helmet of Navarre," eelebrates with the Woman's Christian Tempcrance Unions all over the land the Decennial anniversary of the Ohio Crusade. A cover, beautifully and tastefully ornamented, contains within the history, philosophy, poetry and theology of that great and never-to-be-forgotten movement. Very properly, Dr. Dio Lewis, who started the Crusade, contributes the first prose article, and is followed by Emily Huntington Miller, Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, Frances E. Willard, Sarah K. Bolton and others, and a fac simile letter from John G. Whittier. The temperancc workers may well be proud of such a number as this.

THE CHURCHES.

—Elder H. Hull closed on the 9th inst., a protracted meeting at West Union, Iowa, which had been blessed with glorious results. Some forty conversions were a cause of great rejoicing. Among the converts were old men, hard drinkers, bitter opposers of the Gospel, and one Odd-fellow. Meetings were begun at Elgin, Iowa, on the Saturday following with good hope that similar blessings would be given.

—A great revival is in progress in the Presbyterian church of Knoxville, Tenn. Over 150 souls have already sought the Saviour.

—There is a great revival in the Baptist church at East Hardwick, Vt. Between 60 and 80 have been converted, among them many in middle life, and one over seventy-five years of age.

—The American Home Missionary Society receives $25,000, the American Board $10,000, the American Missionary Association $5,000, the Church building Socicty $5,000, by the will of Mr. S. N. Edgell, a member of Pilgrim Church, St. Louis, Mo.

—As reportcd to the recent convention, the total membership of thc Chureh of the Disciples, or Christian Church in this country is 650,000. They have 5,000 churches and 3,700 preachers. The greatest strength of the dcnomination is in Ohio, Indiana, and other parts of the West.

—The Moody aud Sankey services are proceeding with unabatcd interest and power. There were some fears lest the meetings at Wadsworth, it being on the outskirts of London, would not draw a large audience. Those fears have been entirely dispelled—the building is crowded at preaching services, and the other meetings have an attendance of over 3,000.

—The daily press of London is devoting considerable attention to Messrs. Moody and Sankey. The Pall Mall, Gazette, which has distinguished itself ih this particular thinks that whatever notice they have received is less than they deserve as "men who have probably left a dceper impress of their individuality upon one great seetion of Englishmen and Englishwomen, than any other persons who could be named."

—The latest word from London says that Moody and Sankey have concluded their fortnight's mission at Stepney. The interest excited by thc mission is remarkable, as it reached a lower class of the population than heretofore. The meetings were crowded and thousands were converted. The meetings will be resumed after the holidays at Clapham, whither the Iron Mission Hall will be removed. Moody goes to the south of France to spend the interval before the opening of the Clapham mission, with his family.

—Rev. D. L. Brayton, writing from Rangoon, says: On the last day of August the last galley-proof of the Pwo Karen Bible was received from the printer, thus completing the entire Bible in that language. It is proposed to place a copy in every Christian family. One Karen, who some three years ago paid for six copies in advance said, "I shall want two eopies for myself and family, and the other four may go to those who cannot pay." Other Karens have given different sums, so that, with the appropriations of the Executive Committee, sufficient funds are provided for the contemplated distribution.

THE REFORM CHURCHES OF MISSISSIPPI.

COLUMBUS, Miss., Dec. 12, 1883.

The annual meeting of the convention of the Associated Churches of Christ was held at Military Chapel, Lowndes county, Miss., Dec. 5, 1883. After a seasou spent in worship the Rev. E. Tapley, in accordance with the vote of the convention, made the opening address. A lively and spirited discussion of the evil tendencies of organized secretism followed, which was participated in by a number of earnest speakers.

In the addresses of the day the great wrongs connected with and continually done through secret orders were forcibly and clearly shown and the duty and power to work suecessfully for their overthrow. Some of the ideas advanced were: That we should begin our reform work practically at home; that we should patronize only, as far as possible, those millers and dealers who do not belong to secret institutions; that we should attend those churches and support those ministers who stand squarely in favor of the abolition of secret orders; that the Bible is the great rule of action, and it condemns all lodgery as much as if it had said, Thou shalt not belong to the Masonic order, the Ku-Klux Klan, or any other secret society. It says, "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness." The exhortation was given that we must not grow impatient or become discouraged because they are not immediately done away with, but must have long patience, as it is God's own work, and he is moving mightily, and in this also we must "walk by faith and not by sight." The falling off in surrounding Masonic lodges, the earnest and outspoken condemnation of the Immaculates and secret benevolent orders in Columbus, as "humbugs" and "swindles," by their own members was spoken of as omens of good.

Great encouragement was drawn from the blessing which the Lord has given to the efforts made here and elsewhere, and the thankful feeling of the convention seemed to be, "What hath God wrought?" A collection was taken up to defray the expense of sending out a colored anti-secret lecturer, which resulted in a small sum in the treasury.

An executive committee was appointed to employ a lecturer when a sufficient fund be collected. The entire meeting was pleasant and harmonious, and some, at least, returned home fecling that it was a season well spent.

KENTUCKY FREE MISSIONS.

[Thc church and school at Cabin Creek, Ky., with which the readers of the Cynosure have become acquainted through the letters of John G. Fee, H. H. Hinman and J. F. Browne, comes again to our notice through a letter of Miss Lura Mains to the Christian Witness.]

The school as well as the church is on the faith system. That is, do your duty, seeking first thc kingdom for yourselves and others, and leave the results with God. So we have no planning about financial matters. Although a tuition is set by thc trustees nothing is said about it to the pupils, and poor and all are invitcd to come and money is not considered. We have no salary, no collections, no donation parties, and no missionary fund, or laid by money to help us. So we trust God for all we get to eat and wear. He has thus far supplied our wants. Oh that ministers would realize that they are hired out to God, and not to the people, and that all they have to do is the work God gives them not plan for money matters. Our Master is rich, and benevolent, and knows how much we earn, and we need not worry how God is getting his money to pay us. If any one was hired out to a rich farmer he would do the work assigned him not plan to make the money to be paid to him. If ministers would take the Bible for their guide, and preach the Gospel, and trust the promise, "that they that preach the Gospel shall live of the Gospel," much more good would be done. A revival of religion would not be hindered by socials, and converts led back into the world by donations, and the poor kept from church by pew renting, and others by the hat being passed, and they embarrassed because having nothing to give. But if time spent in getting up entertainments to get money from those in the world was spent in seeking to save them from sin, many more would be saved. And when a man is thoroughly saved his money is consecrated to God, and he will use it for the support of the Gospel as God directs. And if appetites and personal appearances were consecrated to God there would be rejoicing in soul saving, and no complaining, if not the best clothes or nicest food were enjoyed. No person is consecrated enough to work successfully in the cause unless he is willing to live on bread and water, and be happy over it, if that is all the Lord provides, and he knows he is working for him.

Our school is increasing in numbers and interest. I preach twice on Sundays and once during the week; hold two week night prayer meetings, and sometimes an inquiry meeting, and some weeks go out to other places and hold one or two evening meetings.

The dear Lord is owning the work, and almost daily sinners are asking what they must do to be saved.

We have students' prayer meetings about thirty minutes at noon, and a number have found the Saviour.

Although the people are slow in getting a real experience here quite a number have obtained such. Those that have been church members for ycars without any knowledge that they were the children of God, have surrendered all, obtained the witness of the Spirit that they were the children of Jesus, and find that he saves them to the "uttermost." Yes, from tobacco, gay clothing and all other foolishness. As one little girl who had given up a good deal of jewelry, and found Jesus, said in one of the prayer meetings that she had rather have Jesus than all the jewelry and fine clothes; she felt that she was Jesus' little girl.

All who understand about the "life hid with Christ in God," pray for me.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—A new through line from Chicago to New York, via the Grand Trunk and West Shore Roads will be inaugurated Jan. 1, 1884.

—Ten thousand persons witnessed the opening, Thursday of the new cantilever bridge across Niagara River. The bridge was tested by sustaining the weight of twenty locomotives and twenty-four cars loaded with gravel without apparent deflections.

—The colleries in Northumberland County, Pennsylvania, have been closed for a week, rendering 12,000 persons idle. Thirteen inches of snow fell in the region Wednesday.

—At six o'clock Monday evening fire broke out in the laundry of the Plankinton House, at Milwaukee, causing some alarm and excitement. The guests were easily reassured, but the female help, who were gathered upon an upper floor, grew frightened when dense smoke began to ascend, and rushed for the fire-escapes, down which forty of them were taken without accident. Six firemen were overcome by smoke and gas, but were soon resuscitated.

—A Grand Trunk express train Monday demolished a stage coach near Cataraquie, Ont., killing three women and wounding the driver.

—A dispatch from Duluth Dec. 17, says that the schooner Mary Ann Hulbert has been lost. She went down during the gale of last Wednesday night with twenty men on board all of whom are lost. Their names are not known. Most of them are railroad laborers. She was being towed by the tug Kincardine, and during the storm sprung a leak and began to fill. Having a green crew who did not know how to manage her, she began drifting with the wind and turning the tug from its course, when the tug to save itself, cut the tow line, and set the schooner adrift. She went down soon afterward.

—Two boilers in D. P. Reighard's oil refinery in a Pittsburg suburb exploded Tuesday morning, wrecking the boiler house and injuring six persons, three fatally.

—At Paris, Ill., Tuesday evening, Sanford Norris and other boys, induced four other lads, including two brothers of Norris to steal some apples, the former having planned the theft as a practical joke, and agreeing to fire a gun while the boys were in the orchard. The gun was discharged, per agreement, but its contents killed one of the lads, and wounded the others, one fatally.

—Kerrigan, the informer, whose evidence resulted in the hanging of six persons, was shot Thursday at Congo, Ireland.

—John Moylan, just returned from America, who had taken possession of a vacant farm at Clonbar, near Galloway, Ireland, was shot dead by an unknown man Wednesday in the presence of his wife.

—On the 14th of December a French force of 7,000 men, Admiral Corbet commanding, captured the principal outposts of Sontay, two outworks, and at last reports had surrounded the citadel. The French lost 200 men and fifteen officers.

—The Spanish mail steamer St. Augustine burned in the Bay of Biscay last Sunday. Eighty-two persons got off in boats. One boat and its passengers are missing, and nothing is known regarding the fate of the people remaining on the steamer.

—The London police are closely watching the houses of the leading Irish Nationalists. It is reported that the Lord Mayor has received anouymous letters threatening to blow up London bridge and Newgate. The detectives, who were withdrawn from the prison after O'Donnell was hanged, have been returned there. Extra police on and about the bridges watch the arches and examine all craft passing and scrutinize all persons crossing. In consequence of threats to avenge O'Donnell, armed policemen guard Hawarden Castle, the residence of Gladstone.

—The Turkish town Abadia, was damaged by a hurricane. Six ships and fifteen coasting craft were wrecked, their crews being drowned.

—The German Crown Prince visited Pope Leo Tuesday, and had a private conference with his Holiness lasting an hour, and appeared to be deeply moved when leaving the Vatican Palace.

—In Servia twenty Radicals, including their leader in the Skuptchina, have been sentenced to death. There will be no Radical party in the next Legislature.

BUSINESS.

NOTICE.

After February 1 we shall be able to fill all orders for Freemasonry Illustrated PAPER COVER and cloth cover, seven degrees and three degrees as soon as received.

We have now a good stock of everything except seven degree paper cover.

CYNOSURE SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Received for the week ending Dec. 22, from the following parties:

'FREEMASONRY AT A GLANCE."

An exposition of the first three degrees of Freemasonry in every village for little or no money! How can it be done? By sending to W. I. Phillips, Treasurer N. C. A., for a 32-page pamphlet, containing 40 illustrations with explanations, with the legal attestation of the past master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago, as to the correctness of said exposition. We will send, postpaid, from now to first of January, thirty (30) of these pamphlets for one dollar; sixty-five (65) for two dollars, and 165 for five dollars.

Edmund Ronayne says: "One of these pamphlets put in each family will do as much good as a public exposition would do." The way to get them without money is to send new subscriptions for the Cynosure at $2.00 each, receiving for three such subscriptions 36 of the pamphlets exposing the first three degrees of Freemasonry.

Many have written: "Send a lecturer to our place, we need one very much." This is often impossible, but the above plan is much better than no lecture; does not need a church or hall, which often cannot be had; and costs but a fraction of what a lecturer usually costs. Will you see to it that you have one of these lecturers, silent as sunlight and as powerful, in your town. If you cannot afford the dollar or five dollars yourself, you can soon collect from friends for this purpose the needed funds.

N. B. Not less than thirty sent on the above terms, and only open to January 1, 1884. Single copies 6 cents.

FREE TRACT FUND.

You will notice that the tract fund has received a few donations, for which we are thankful who have to answer the calls for tracts, and see that the printing of them is paid for.

Bro. W. W. Ames in sending the donation of Capt. Wilson, writes:—"Enclosed find two dollars for the tract fund, and which I hope will be greatly increased."

Ugly blotches and stubborn old sores are cured by Samaritan Nervine. $1.50.

Mrs. P. Rucker, of Davis Mills, Va., says: "Dr. Richmond's Samaritan Nervine cured my daughter's fits." Call for it at your Druggists.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary, the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. NOYES, 149 Power's Block, Rochester, N. Y.

An Awful Responsibility.

EVERYBODY has something to say about consumption. We all deplore its terrible ravages, but only a few of us seem to have enough common sense to take the proper means of preventing it. It is as simple as "two and two are four," that Hale's Honey of Horehound and Tar, taken as a remedy for coughs, colds, difficult breathing, hoarseness, or any of the symptoms which pave the way for that terrible destroyer, will effect a radical and rapid cure of the ailment, and avert all danger. Whoever, under these circumstances, neglects to resort to the true specific, assumes a fearful responsibility. Of druggists.

Opinion of Dr. Wm. H. Stokes, Physician, Mt. Hope Retreat, Baltimore: "I have great pleasure in adding my testimony to the virtues of Colden's Liquid Beef Tonic as the very best preparation used for depression, weakness, and indigestion, and I therefore confidently recommend it to the medical profession." The Master's Carpet.

BY

F. Ronayne.

Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 639 Chicago.

Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the Lodge, thus showing the principles on which the order is founded. By a careful perusal of this work, a more thorough knowledge of the principles of the order can be obtained than by attending the Lodge for years. Every Mason, every person contemplating becoming a member, and even those who are indifferent on the subject, should procure and carefully read this work. An appendix is added of 32 pages, embodying

Freemasonry at a Glance,

which gives every sign, grip and ceremony of the Lodge together with a brief explanation of each. The work contains 429 pages and is substantially and elegantly bound in cloth. Price, 75 cents. Address

"The Christian Statesman deserves a VERY LARGE CIRCULATION. It fills a place supplied by no other."—HON. JUDGE STRONG.

The Need of the Nation

Can only be supplied by an acknowledgement of Christ's authority and an acceptance of His Divine Law as the BASIS OF NATIONAL LIFE.

To secure this, and maintain all existing Christian features of the American government, is the object of the National Reform Association, an organization undenominational in character, with a membership of many thousands, including leading ministers, educators, authors and jurists all over our nation.

THE CHRISTIAN STATESMAN,

A large, elegantly printed sixteen-page journal, advocates the principles of this Association, and discusses all public questions in the light of the Christian religion. The Maintenance of our Sabbath Laws, and of the Christian Law of Marriage and Divorce, the use of the Bible in the Public Schools, the Prohibition of the Liquor Traffic, the Mormon Question, the Rights of the Indian and the Chinaman, receive constant attention in its columns. It gives thorough expositions of the International Bible Lessons, and their bearing on national questions is not overlooked. Price, $2.00 per year. ☞ Sample copies free. Address,

THE CHRISTIAN STATESMAN

"In its course has been manly and consistent, its editorials able, and its success, under the conditions of apathy and prejudice which surrounds the whole subject, marvelous."—THE REV. S. F. SCOVEL, PRESIDENT OF WOOSTER UNIVERSITY.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

THE COMING CONFLICT.

A NEW AND RAPIDLY SELLING BOOK IN OPPOSITION TO FREE-MASONRY.

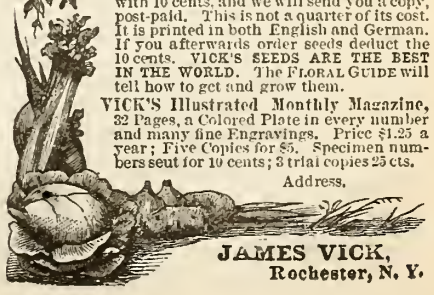
We desire to call your attention to this useful work, and ask you to help us in its circulation. We want Agents to canvass every community.

By selling this book one can do much good. It is by such literature that we must expect to awaken a popular sentiment against secret societies, and overthrow them. By selling this book one can make money. Liberal terms will be allowed, and any energetic Agent can sell many copies. Masons will buy it from mere curiosity. Anti-Masons will buy it for the facts and arguments presented. Many will buy it to send to their neighbors. Those on the fence will buy it that they may learn the truth on the subject. Those not interested in the discussion, and young people especially, will buy it for the story.

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"It is an attack on Freemasonry with a sprinkle of Slavery thrown in to make it go down well."—A. R. Presbyterian, (S. C.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of the best class of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D D., in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia, Pa.)



"A charming work fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ill.)

The book is neatly and plainly printed, handsomely bound, 352 pages, thick paper. A specimen copy sent to any one contemplating accepting an agency for $1.10.

Single copy $1.50; Per Dozen. $15.00.

FARM NOTES.

HOW TO SAVE MONEY IN FARMING.

While the snow covers the ground and the evenings are long it is a good time to make up plans for the summer campaign. Take a look at the stock in the harn, and see if there are not some animals which could be disposed of with profit. Are the cows first-rate in every particular, and do they pay a good profit upon their cost and keep, or do they scarcely pay for the food they eat, leaving nothing over? We think that full one-half of all the cows kept by farmers do no more than pay for the food consumed during the year; consequently the owners are actually losing money, because the animals depreciate in value as they grow old. Now, the way to save money in keeping stock is to have no animal that is not either increasing in value in proportion to the amount of food consumed and the labor expended in taking care of it, or returning an equivalent in labor performed, as with work horses, or in milk as with cows.

The only true way of ascertaining this fact is by keeping an account of expenditures and receipts, which we fear is seldom practiced with those who fail to save money in farming. Merchants and other tradesmen usually take an account of stock at least once a year, and know to a cent how they stand in the world financially, and their future operations are planned in accordance with past experience, and if there is need of cutting off any particular branch of trade, or economizing in any way, it is done; but the farmer alone seems to he the victim of luck, seldom knowing whether he is prosperous or otherwise until it is too late.

It is also well to draw up a plan of farm operations for the coming season, and it is far better to have them a little too restricted than too comprehensive, because bad weather sometimes intervenes and puts one behindhand, especially in the spring. Better put in one acre of potatoes and do it so well that the yield will be four hundred bushels per acre, than to go over four or five acres for the same quantity. Practice the same system with all farm crops, and you will he surprised to see how easy it is to save labor as well as money hy farming. We are quite certain that if our farmers would give this condensing system of farming a thorough trial, we should hear less of disastrous seasons and the unprofitableness of farming. They would not stop at good crops, but their horses, cows, sheep and hogs would have to he of the best breeds. No cows would he kept from the milk of which two to three hundred pounds of butter or its equivalent in cheese could not he made in a season. It costs no more to feed or care for one of our hest cows than the very poorest, and the same is true with all other kinds of stock, and as a rule the most worthless are the most expensive to keep.

A farmer would think he was badly swindled if he had to pay twenty-five dollars more than his proportion of taxes; still there are thousands of animals kept by these same farmers, each of which costs fully twenty-five dollars per annum more than it yields the owner or advances in value. This is hut one of the many leaks in farming which would not be tolerated in any other kind of business.

If a field is so poor that it will not pay a good profit on the cost of cultivating, let it alone or put it in proper condition for producing a good crop. A man ought to know better than to waste his time in working soil that yields no return for the labor expended upon it. But there are scores of men doing this every year, and they wonder why farming is such an unprofitable business.

The very idea of a man going over an acre of land a half dozen times with various implements just for the sake of obtaining ten bushels of corn or any other grain, is sad enough. Still there are thousands who do this and think at the same time that they are the victims of bad luck. Now let every one try the coming season to economize by raising a large amount on a small space, and dispose of all stock that does not pay a profit, and see if money cannot be saved hy this system.—New York Sun.

DR. JOHN BULL'S

Smith's Tonic Syrup

FOR THE CURE OF

FEVER and AGUE

Or CHILLS and FEVER.

AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamp on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN J. SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, of Louisville, Ky. Examine well the label on each bottle. If my private stamp is not on each bottle do not purchase, or you will be deceived.

NIGHTS IN A BAR-ROOM

T. S. Arthur's great temperance book, complete and illustrated. By mail, 5c each; 50c per doz. By express, $3.50 per 100.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC THE GREAT SOURCE OF CRIME.

Leaves from the diary of an old lawyer.—By Hon. A. B. Richmond, author of "Court and Prison," etc. A book of intense interest, rivaling the famous "Diary of a Physician," and, in its truthful, terrible pictures of the power and crime of intemperance, excelling the well-known "Ten Nights in a Bar-room." The temperance issue of the present time is Shall prohibition be partial or entire? Shall the branches of the death-bearing tree be pruned and trimmed, or shall the tree itself be cut down and its stump be torn up by the roots? The answer of "Leaves from the Diary" is, "Cut down the tree, tear up the roots, leave not a shoot or shred behind." It is certainly a very strong and eloquent volume. Complete edition on fine, heavy paper, with colored lithograph of Sewall's stomach plates. By mail, 30c each, $3 per doz. By express, $20 per 100. Abridged edition, by mail, 15c; $1.25 per doz. By express, $9 per 100.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC AND THE SOBER CITIZEN.

An able and telling work, by Rev. J. H. Sherman, which brings out the effects of the liquor traffic in a new light. The following are some of the commendations of the first edition

"The author drives the nails of conviction through and clinches them."—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

"Speakers and workers in the temperance field will find valuable aid in this pamphlet. It is crowded with convincing facts."—Zion's Herald

"One of the ablest reviews of the drink curse ever issued from the press."—The Morning and Day of Reform.

"The arguments are put in telling form."—Judge Pittman.

New revised and enlarged edition. By mail, 10c each, $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

DRINKS FROM DRUGS.

A startling exposure of the liquor traffic, by El. Johnson. A book that cannot fail to arouse the American people to the gigantic swindle now being perpetrated. The writer was offered $10,000 by a leading brewer to keep still. Liquor not only doctored, but made entirely from drugs. Extracts from a whole library of secret books, giving receipts for making and doctoring; advertisements of essences, fac-similes of labels, engravings, etc. etc. Claret, port, sherry, champagne, whisky, brandy, gin, rum, etc., all out of one barrel, and made at less than 25 cents a quart. Wine that never saw grape juice; cider that never saw apples; beer factories in place of breweries, fine cream ale without barley or brewing; whisky from arsenic; millions of gallons of liquor that pays no revenue tax. The farmer's corn and barley "all in your eye." A wholesale liquor store in a ten-foot square cellar; more French wine sold in New York City than is produced in the whole of France. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By Express, $6 per 100.

W. C. T. U. ORGANIZATION AND WORK.

A book of general information on how to organize and run successfully a Woman's Christian Temperance Union. This book should be widely distributed among W. C. T. U. presidents, pastor's wives and other representative women. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $8 per 100.

BAND OF HOPE SONG BOOK.

Band of Hope Songs.—Fifty-seven choice pieces for juvenile temperance gatherings, Bands of Hope, etc. Old, familiar tunes, also choice new words and music. Words far in advance of anything else issued. By mail, 8c each; 75c per doz. By express, $4 per 100.

DANIEL'S BAND.

A temperance concert exercise, with parts suitable for all ages; entirely new. Songs, recitations, dialogues, etc., of a thoroughly aggressive character; sure to carry weight with the rendering of it. By mail, 5c each; 50c per dozen. By express, $2 per 100.

TEMPERANCE ANTHEM BOOK.

Temperance Anthems.—A new idea; nothing else of the kind in existence. Will insure good music by the choir at temperance meetings. Forty-eight pages of choice anthems by ablest writers. By mail, 15c each; $1.50 per doz. By express, $10 per 100.

BATAVIA CONVENTION PAMPHLET.

A Staggering Blow!

Such was to Freemasonry the great NATIONAL CONVENTION held in BATAVIA, N. Y., September, 1882. It gave the world

Thurlow Weed's Great Letter

On the abduction and murder of WILLIAM MORGAN in 1826, which has been the most widely published of any Anti-masonic document. The dedication of a noble granite monument to the memory of Morgan, and the able and eloquent addresses of the Convention make this a most valuable pamphlet.

SEE WHY.

It contains—
1. Portrait of Morgan.
2. Portrait of Thurlow Weed.
3. Fine picture of the Monument.
4. The great letter of Thurlow Weed and his affidavit—almost the last public act of his life.
5. Address by J. E. Roy, D.D.
6. The monument oration by Pres. C. A. Blanchard.
7. Addresses on "Christian Politics" by Pres. J. Blanchard, on the Character of Freemasonry by Prof. E. D. Bailey, on the "Freedmen and Secret Societies" by Rev. H. H. Hinman; and very interesting personal and historical reminiscences.

The "bad eminence" to which Mayor Harrison has brought the reputation of Chicago is hardly yet so despicable and infamous as the blot which Boston gets from her school board. Were the outrage upon decency and law not backed by the signature of Rev. E. E. Hale it might be doubted. He asserts that public schools in Boston are closed by local school committees to give an opportunity for licensing liquor sellers. By Massachusetts law no saloon can be licensed within a given distance of a public school. By the opportune closing of one of the schools for a few days eleven saloons obtained licenses, and then it was reopened. Chicago may blush for Boston.

The fight of the distillers, for the extension for two years the bonded period on whisky held for government taxes in warehouses, is to be renewed this year with more energy, system and pertinacity than ever. Willis of Kentucky is their advocate in the House and John Sherman of Ohio in the Senate! A powerful lobby and able attorneys will assist them and nothing will be left undone to carry their disastrous measures. "Nothing," say the press reports, "since the days of the Pacific railroad legislation can compare with the machinery brought to bear in behalf of this object." The arguments of the distillers is familiar. They almost moved heaven and earth last year with their distressing complaints—how the business of the country would be ruined if they were compelled to pay the taxes due; that the banks were all interested, they had loaned the distillers so many millions and had no other security than this stored-up liquor, if this is sold for taxes ruin impends over the land! Well, it ought to. If there is so much invested in this business in this country there ought to be some sort of a punishment that will make the nation arise and cast out this demon of whisky. But when we heard the same thing last year, and the panic did not come, we have a right to believe that the distillers and their advocates, especially Sherman, are lying to us.

The week of prayer begins next Sabbath. The Evangelical Alliance sent out weeks ago its stereotyped list of topics, but it is a mark of deeper spirituality and greater activity among the churches that the recommendations of the Alliance are more and more neglected, and, while observing the time they select such topics as each feels pressed to present before God. The Christian Intelligencer says of this matter: "We publish this list of topics not because we approve of it, for we do not, but out of regard for the Evangelical Alliance, The Week of Prayer was not intended originally to be divided into days of specific objects, but to importunate prayer for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit on all flesh, for a blessing upon the Divinely appointed means of all kinds and everywhere. And as long as that original intention was adhered to, the meetings were much more attractive than they have been for a few years past. The freedom of the meetings has been impaired by the strait-jacket which has been put upon them. Besides, the selection and order of topics has not always received the approbation of the churches. Good men have more than once been dissatisfied with the arrangement of subjects, and with the omission of what they regarded as more important than the themes inserted. We would like to see a return to the original intention."

Moses Pettengill

[See pages 3 and 8.]

It may be convenient for the managers and agents of the American Missionary Association and the American Home Missionary Society that they do not attempt to work in the same States or districts. The former has given much attention to the freedmen and Indians with results that make heaven rejoice. The missionaries of the other have been like a forlorn hope in Sodom in the midst of the worldliness and bold impiety of our Western frontier. To save lost men was the work both were established to do. Does it not then look like an outbreak of pride or prejudice, that it has been necessary for a committee of arbitration to adjust the differences between these Christian societies and tell one that it must keep back among the colored people and the other to stay on the Western frontier?

This unfortunate difficulty is not exactly a sectarian quarrel, because both societies are controlled by the Congregational churches, but it is very like the disgraceful controversies that spring up between the sectarian divisions of the Christian church in a thousand little towns all over the land. These differences may not so deeply affect professed Christians as they do the prejudices of the worldly men whom the churches are sent to save. A striking instance of this evil is seen in the Brahmo Somaj of India. Mazoomdar when speaking in Boston of that movement said his people accepted Christ as the Saviour but they did not accept the Christian religion. And why? Because, as these keen but prejudiced Hindoos beheld the missionaries coming to them and representing different denominations, they became convinced that their incentive to labor was in great part a jealousy of one another. A suspicion was thus cast upon Christianity. The bride of Christ instead of appearing to them in a robe of spotless white is dressed in various and incongruous colors. Historical Christianity thus presented does not woo them, but to the holy example of Jesus Christ they are drawn by a divine love.

ANOTHER YEAR.

Another year is dawning!
Dear Master, let it be,
In working or in waiting,
Another year with Thee.

Another year of leaning
Upon Thy loving breast;
Of ever-deepening trustfulness,
Of quiet, happy rest.

Another year of mercies,
Of faithfulness and grace;
Another year of gladness
In the shining of Thy face.

Another year of progress,
Another year of praise;
Another year of proving
Thy presence "all the days."

Another year of service,
Of witness for Thy love;
Another year of training
For holier work above.

Another year is dawning!
Dear Master, let it be,
On earth, or else in heaven,
Another year for Thee!

MASONIC CONTROL OF EDUCATION IN EUROPE.

BY PROF. CLAUDIO JANNET, UNIVERSITY OF PARIS.

[Translated from the Courier des Bruxelles by Prof. W. H. Fischer, Wheaton College.]

One queries sometimes how laction masonique asserts itself, by what methods these cliques, concealed and disseminated through the land, rule the elections and direct the administration of government. The answer to this enquiry is found in the report of the third Congress of the Lodges of the East, which convened at Nancy, the 7th, 8th and 9th of July, 1882.

These congresses are very important. The first was organized in 1869 by F. Jean Marce, and from thence the movement for the propagation of the League of Instruction emanated. The departments of the East have since then remained among the number of those in which the working of the sect is productive of the greatest results.

To the fundamental question, "What should be the role of Masonry in a free society?" this is the response given by a commission and approved by the whole congress:

"The commission deem that Masonry has for its principal role in civil society the elevating of the moral and intellectual level of the profane; or, better still, to be a school from which should go out zealous masters, prudent propagators of the ideas born and developed within the bosom of the lodges. It ought to accomplish the end that the thoughtful profane may not be held in total ignorance of its operations, but it ought to keep them in a discreet twilight, making them desirous of the light."

One will readily observe these recommendations of discretion, of prudence, of semi-darkness. When Masonry no longer pretends to be a secret society it plays on an equivocation. A vigorous secrecy always protects whatever is done and said in her lodges, and she allows nothing to escape from her intrigue but what she agrees to.

As for the means of dominating over civil society, the Congress of the Lodges of the East places in the foremost rank the control of public education.

"This question," says the report, "is submitted by F ∴ Tugny, of the Lodge of the Regeneration at the Or ∴ de Bar. This F ∴ is one of the most devoted teachers of the department of the Meuse. It is therefore in his daily practice that he is convinced of the necessity of reforms of which he asks you to elaborate the programme. Your commission has agreed with him that too often deplorable sentiments of intolerence [read, religion], insinuated early into the heart of our children, take root there and cannot be eradicated without great pains. Whence the evil?

"The cause, in our opinion, ought not to be doubtful. It must be sought in the manifold teaching of a moral confessional and of a catechism, which preach that outside of the adepts of such or such a religion there is no good man, nothing of merit truly estimable. This narrow exclusiveness, common to too many religions, is well calculated to sow hatred from the beginning among the children, and afterward among the men.

"If this is truly the cause of the evil, let us congratulate ourselves in finding from now on an efficacious remedy in the recent law of which the league of public instruction and all the republican party has at last attained the enactment by their persevering efforts. Henceforth confessional instruction is banished from our public schools, as in Belgium. No father of a family need longer, in order to have his children instructed, consent that they receive at the same time lessons of intolerance. Meanwhile this teaching of a religious and exclusive morality, the cause of all evil, will for yet a long time be given to many children, partly in private schools, partly in the families, partly in the church. We have the firm hope that sometime the progress of the times alone and of enlightenment will cause it to disappear. Our F F.·. Metyger, Schaffner and Fechoin, by terse reasoning and by topical anecdotes, have made the commission comprehend, how much, particularly from this point of view, it behooves Masonry to bring its operations to bear on the women. Are not they the ones who during many years hold almost entirely in their hands the impressible intelligence of the children? Is it not for this reason that the clergy so cleverly circumvent them with a net-work of influences so adapted to feminine sentiment?

"Your commission expresses the wish to see the 'tenues blanche' [a kind of Masonic gathering] to which women are admitted, multiply. To these meetings, we think, the profane friends of Masons ought to be admitted.

"Finally, we should not neglect to invite the children themselves to these meetings, who will, without doubt receive a lasting impression.

"Another direct influence ought to be brought to bear on the children. The new law of instruction has placed morality among the objects of obligatory instruction. It behooves Masonry to favor the manuals of morality in which the author does not fear to insist strongly and repeatedly on this great virtue of tolerance [read, indifference]. It behooves her likewise, with the aid of the public powers, to help on the communistic teachers and liberal directors who are prevented from entering in the same way."

Here is a method of propaganda adopted by the congress of the lodges of the East:

"A special committee of patronage will be instituted in each At .·. This committee, responsible before the L .·. will be charged to search out those children whose intelligence, and the good results during their attendance at the lay schools have marked in a special manner, and whom the precarious situation of their parents prevents from being appropriated to this or that useful vocation, be it commerce, industry or whatsoever, according to aptitude or natural talents. The committee may place a child in such circumstances either with a Mason or a profane man; always on condition that in the latter case the liberal sentiments of the patron be a moral guarantee to the committee. Each year the patron may be called upon to give notes on the apprentice placed under him, and these notes, in common with information received by the delegates of the committee may serve as a basis for the distribution of recompenses among the most meritorious. In case the child does not respond or responds badly to what might be expected of him, representations may be addressed to him and if he persists in his bad way, the support may, after a special report of the committee, be withwrawn by a vote of the At.·."

Behold the authors of these odious measures, made by certain "messieurs," addressed to poor widows to get them for a price to withdraw their children from religious schools, or to receive the expenses of an interment.

Masonry in Spain follows no different purpose than in France. The correspondent of the Times relates that jurors communicate one to another by means of Masonic signs.

Alphonso XII. has been raised to the throne by influence of the lodges to put down Don Carlos, who had refused to receive the affilation offered to him, just as the Correo Catalan of July 8th says. During three years Spain has covered herself with lodges. The Masonic World, in its last January number celebrates their activity. While Canova del Castilo had found means to break up the influence of Catholics in politics, the lodges were propagating their principles in the universities, in the press, in the army, in the administration.

We shall know after a time how profound this work has been. It is undoubtedly too early for Masonry, or at least a part of the lodges (for in this country the rivalries are more marked than in France) to judge when the moment has come to shake off this false monarchy and to proceed direct to the supreme end, i. e. a radical republic.

THE CIVIL RIGHTS ACT AND THE SUPREME COURT.

BY REV. GEO. B. CHEEVER, D. D.

We are plainly under a despotism, if seven or ten men can annihilate one of the artieles of our Constitution framed for the protection of the down-trodden negroes, established by acceptance and experiment of the people, and found to be effective and just. This decision of the Supreme Court is the virtual consignment of the slaves and their descendants back to the reign of contempt, injury and ignominy, perpetrated and justified on the ground of the color of the skin. By enthroning technicality instead of justice, it renders the commonest privileges of citizenship null and void and unavailable. It is the very essence of the edict, re-adopted, that black men have no rights which white men are bound to respect. A resurrected band of Ku-Klux savages could hardly have done worse, or exhibited a greater contempt of justice and humanity.

All honor to Justice Harlan for resisting the decision, and shame to the editors of some of our leading newspapers, once profuse in their professions of hatred to slavery, and love to the blacks, whose cause they now betray, and deny the Constitutional obligation of our government to protect them from the attainder of cruelty and social excommunication and insult, against themselves, their families and children to the latest generations, wherever the habit of social ostracism and oppression by reason of color shall exist. In those States and communities the despotic enactment of the Supreme Court virtually declares that the colored race have no rights that the United States government can constitutionally protect. For the supreme right and power of government over such colored and ostracised citizens of the United States are resident in, and can be exercised only by the State where color is acknowledged as designating and proving a class of persons set apart for the exercise upon them of oppression, hatred, insolence, exclusion and the haughtiest contempt. Such States and communities are sovereign in authority above the government of the United States!

And though the exercise of such passions, the indulgence of such pride and cruelty, the infliction of habitual insults, robberies and assaults, may lead to murders and wide-spread riots, as just now has been demonstrated afresh; yet all this being to the injury of the colored race alone, and the practice of such cruelties being of old a profession and social custom or privilege of the whites as superior to the blacks, and sovereign over them, the government of the United States cannot constitutionally do anything in behalf of such maltreated citizens! They must keep their inferior station and submit themselves patiently to all its miseries, inasmuch as the government of the United States must yield a submissive Constitutional allegiance to the supreme government of the sovereign States, where caste and cruelty rule instead of God, humanity and justice!

By repeated decisions of the Supreme Court in our history neither God, nor justice, nor humanity can make a constitutional supreme rule. And so we have even Christian editors taking ground against the amendment protecting the rights of the colored race as being an unconstitutional interference with the rights of the State, and they insultingly say, "The true way to protect the rights of colored people is through the State courts; and they must gain social privileges themselves by education and personal improvement." And they add, that "The old prejudices against the people are fast melting away."

Now note the inconsistency. The very first beginning of any possible improvement in the position, education and dignity of the colored race was in the amendment of the Constitution protecting their rights. That amendment started the first melting away of the ice in which constitutional slavery had frozen them to the profoundest depths of social, civil and personal degradation and misery. And now the very amendment, that has just begun in the name of God's justice and mercy to accomplish something for their elevation, improvement, and happiness, is itself declared, impliedly, null and void, as being an interference with the rights of the white race to rule over them and socially oppress them!

The amendment and the act enforcing it has been at work nearly twenty years, the Supreme Court being mum for that time; and notwithstanding all the obstacles to its success from the rankling, intricate roots of bitterness and inveterate hatred on the part of the whites, and unpunished atrocities still committed against the blacks, both covertly and openly; and notwithstanding the scantiness of sympathy, encouragement and supply of schools and instruction for their elevation, still it had done much. And without the powerful protection of its adoption as part of our National Constitution for all the blacks and whites irrespective of descent and skin, practically the emancipation-edict and that of free suffrage would have been evaded to a great degree.

And now a court of justice, not daring to intimate that the edict of emancipation was unconstitutional as an intrusion on the rights of sovereign States, undertakes to affirm that the measures intended to carry that edict into fulfilment and necessary for its successful exclusion, are themselves an invasion of State rights; and consequently the United States government is impotent to secure its own citizens from the consequences of slavery and the attainder of its oppression upon the whole colered race in the very States where slavery prevailed, and where especially the government is bound to carry out the amended Constitution and laws, anything in the statutes of any of the States to the contrary notwithstanding.

Just think of it. The Fugitive Slave Law itself was an addition to and amendment of the Constitution against the colored race enslaved on account of their color, in behalf of the whites of the slave States, for security of their property and merchandise in human flesh. Yet our Supreme Court interfered by the plea that State law for injustice could not override National law for Constitutional freedom. But now after slavery is by law abolished, a Supreme Court of justice avers the laws enacted to secure that abolition, and necessary to its accomplishment, to be unconstitutional, because the government enacting them has no authority or right to execute them, or to punish their violation in those States where the customs and statutes of the people establish and proteet the very oppression which the Constitution and the government were created to prevent, and if perpetrated, to avenge.

O that Senator Sumner could have been alive today, and in the free strength and power of his argument and eloquence, to expose the sophistry and subtlety of this great wrong, and to defend the right. For still, as of old, "they turn judgment into wormwood and leave off righteousness on the earth;" "and the statutes of Omri are kept, and the iniquities of the house of Ahab, and the people walk in their counsels and hunt every man his brother with a net." The ignoring of God's Word and will, and of absolute truth, justice, and universal freedom, as the foundation and interpreting law of our Constitution, and the enthroning of a conscience toward expediency and not toward God in our boasted political prosperity, are ominous of evil. Let any man read over the first half of the second chapter of James and apply its principles to the government and constitution of a people holding the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory with respect to persons, and see to what conclusion he will be forced as to our treatment of the Indians and the colored race. "He shall have judgment without mercy, that hath showed no mercy; and mercy rejoiceth against judgment."

I fear that we are getting more and more godless at the center. As soon as the Mormon Territory gets to be a State, the doctrine of the Supreme Court by which it pronounces against the constitutionality of any laws of Congress to proteet the colored race, will be applied to nullify any attempt to defend the Christian citizens of the State against polygamy. Even if an amendment to the Constitution were possible to be enacted by the whole people outside the State, making polygamy a crime to be punished, it would be impossible for our government to execute the law on account of the constitutional dogma of the State Sovereignty!

The Supreme Court have cut off the blade of the sword of justice and humanity from the hilt and left only the handle in the feeble grasp of government. And so it will be until there be some acknowledgement of God and a conscience toward him in the Constitution; which, if our worldly prosperity and worship of wealth and power increase as at present, there never can be; and we are doomed by our national atheism to destruction. God will not be mocked. The pretence that we have not the constitutional right to obey his will and fulfill his Word because our fathers did not put the name of Jesus Christ in the Constitution, will only condemn us as a race of cowardly traitors, doubly dyed in hypocrisy and rebellion from the heart. For our fathers openly before all the world appealed to God for the justice of our cause, and the purity of our intentions before him, for life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness for all without respect of persons. But if we are satisfied and submissive when our appointed judges inform us that in the letter of the bond there is no obligation to God and the Christian religion, and no reference to a conscience toward God, but only a State-conscience toward the skin, and a piety of color, skin-deep; and if we avow and seek no other sanction than that of expediency, for the building up of an empire of our own wisdom and grandeur, solely for this world, there being no mention of any other world in the Constitution, we shall be left, under these doctrines of a godless salvation, "to fill up the measure of our iniquities."

THE PRESENT CRISIS.

When a deed is done for freedom, through the broad earth's aching breast
Runs a thrill of joy prophetic, trembling on from East to West,
And the slave, where'er he cowers, feels the soul within him climb
To the awful verge of manhood as the energy sublime
Of a century bursts full blossomed on the thorny stem of Time.

Through the walls of hut and palace, shoots the instantaneous throe
When the travail of the Ages wrings earth's systems to and fro;
At the birth of each new Era, with a recognizing start,
Nation wildly looks at nation, standing with mute lips apart,
And glad Truth's yet mightier man-child leaps beneath the Future's heart.

So the Evil's triumph sendeth, with a terror and a chill
Under continent to continent, the sense of coming ill,
And the slave where'er he cowers, feels his sympathies with God
In hot tear-drops ebbing earthward, to be drunk up by the sod,
Till a corpse crawls round unburied, delving in the nobler clod.

For mankind are one in spirit, and an instinct bears along,
Round the earth's electric circle, the swift flash of right or wrong;
Whether conscious or unconscious, yet Humanity's vast frame,
Through its ocean sundered fibres feels the gush of joy or shame;
In the gain or loss of one race all the rest have equal claim.

Once to every man and nation comes the moment to decide,
In the strife of Truth with Falsehood, for the good or evil side;
Some great cause, God's new Messiah, offering each the bloom or blight,
Parts the goats upon the left hand, and the sheep upon the right,
And the choice goes by forever 'twixt that darkness and that light.

Hast thou chosen, O my people, on whose party thou shalt stand,
Ere the Doom from its worn sandals, shakes the dust against our land?
Though the cause of Evil prosper, yet 'tis Truth alone is strong,
And albeit she wander outcast now, I see around her throng
Troops of beautiful, tall angels, to enshield her from all wrong.

Backward look across the ages and the beacon moments see,
That like peaks of some sunk continent, just through Oblivion's sea;
Not an ear in court or market for the low forboding cry
Of those Crises, God's stern winnowers, from whose feet earth's chaff must fly;
Never shows the choice momentous till the judgment hath passed by.

Careless seems the great Avenger; history's pages but record
One death-grapple in the darkness 'twixt old systems and the Word;
Truth forever on the scaffold, Wrong forever on the throne;—
Yet that scaffold sways the future, and, behind the dim unknown,
Standeth God within the shadow, keeping watch above his own.

We see dimly in the Present what is small and what is great,
Slow of faith how weak an arm may turn the iron helm of fate;
But the soul is still oracular; amid the market's din,
List the omi nous stern whisper from the Delphic cave within—
"They enslave their children's children who make compromise with sin."

Slavery, the earth-born Cyclops, fellest of the giant brood,
Sons of brutish Force and Darkness, who have drenched the earth with blood,
Famished in his self-made desert, blinded by our purer day,
Gropes in yet unblasted regions for his miserable prey;
Shall we guide his gory fingers where our helpless children play?

Then to stand with Truth is noble when we share her wretched crust,
Ere her cause bring fame and profit, and 'tis prosperous to be just;
Then it is the brave man chooses, while the coward stands aside,
Doubting in his abject spirit, till his Lord is crucified,
And the multitude make virtue of the faith they had denied.

Count me o'er earth's chosen heroes—They were souls that stood alone,
While the men they agonized for hurled the contumelous stone,
Stood serene, and down the future saw the golded beam incline
To the side of perfect justice, mastered by their faith divine,
By one man's plain truth to manhood and to God's supreme design.

By the light of burning hereties Christ's bleeding feet I track,
Toiling up new Calvaries ever with the cross that turns not back,
And these mounts of anguish number how each generation learned
One new word of that grand Credo which in prophet hearts hath burned
Since the first man stood God-conquered with his face to heaven upturned.

For Humanity sweeps onward; where to-day the martyr stands,
On the morrow crouches Judas with the silver in his hands;
Far in the front the cross stands ready and the crackling fagots burn,
While the hooting mob of yesterday in silent awe return,
To glean up the scattered ashes into History's golden urn.

'Tis as easy to be heroes as to sit the idle slaves
Of a legendary virtue carved upon our fathers' graves.
Worshippers of light ancestral make the present light a crime;
Was the Mayflower launched by cowards, steered by men behind their time?
Turn those tracks toward Past or Future, that make Plymouth Rock sublime!

They were men of present valor, stalwart old iconoclasts,
Unconvinced by axe or gibbet that all virtue was the Past's;
But we make their truth our falsehood, thinking that hath made us free,
Hoarding it in mouldy parchments, while our tender spirits flee
The rude grasp of that great Impulse which drove them across the sea.

They have rights who dare maintain them; we are traitors to our sires,
Smothering in their holy ashes Freedom's new-lit altar fires;
Shall we make their creed our jailer; shall we in our haste to slay,
From the tombs of the old prophets steal the funeral lamps away
To light up the martyr-fagots round the prophets of to-day?

New occasions teach new duties; Time makes ancient good uncouth;
They must upward still, and onward, who would keep abreast of truth;
Lo! before us gleam her camp fires! we ourselves must pilgrims be,
Launch our Mayflower, and steer boldly through the desperate winter sea,
Nor attempt the Future's portal with the Past's blood-rusted key.

DEA. MOSES PETTENGILL.

SERMON PREACHED AT HIS FUNERAL, NOV. 11, 1883, BY REV. A. A. STEVENS.

"But after that the kindness and love of God our Saviour toward man appeared, not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost."—Titus 3: 4, 5.

The religion of Christ professes to give men a new character; to enthrone within them right principles of action, right governing purposes, and right affections of heart; to take them out of the corrupt and disobedient and grovelling condition, out of their worldliness and sin, and make them so different that they are properly called regenerate, said to be born from above, or renewed by the Holy Spirit of God. And such are specified as God's "workmanship," and are called "the husbandry" of God.

Does this religion work such a change in men? Perhaps no answer more satisfactory can be given than by tracing the results produced in given cases of his "workmanship."

A long life, much of which has passed before us, has just closed, and we may reverently now look back upon it and inquire, What are the fruits of God's "husbandry"? what are the evidences of such change, such renewal of the character by the Holy Spirit of God? It may help us to understand better what this salvation is which Christ brings to men, and help confirm us in the truth of God, and exalt within us somewhat the exceeding riches of God's grace.

Some account of the beginning of this transformation in his character has been given by our departed friend himself. It was early after coming to this place*, and in connection with a long and dangerous sickness. After lying at the point of death for days "God had mercy on him and on us also," and he began slowly to emerge from that weak condition. And with this returning life and vigor there came also new thoughts, new desires, new purposes as to the future life and its chief aims. In short, he resolved to identify himself with his God who had spared him, his Saviour who had had mercy on him, and his church, his cause here in this world. He was henceforth to be numbered, not among those of whom it is said, they "all seek their own and not the things of Jesus Christ," but among those who "live not for themselves, but for him who died for them and rose again." His religion was to be foremost; "the kingdom of God and his righteousness" sought first. A little test soon came that made it appear as if this were a genuine, governing purpose of the soul. The question of building a house in which to worship God arose. If it were to be done much of the expense must fall on him. His family were then living in narrow quarters on Washington street, and needed a house for themselves. Both enterprises could not be carried out. The question was submitted to his companion: "Shall the Lord's house be built or our own dwelling?" and both decided that God's cause must stand foremost.

But I must come at once to the period of my own personal knowledge of this brother in Christ, in order to illustrate what a change has been wrought in him by the grace of God, and show how these scriptures of truth are verified.

There are several lines of illustration that may be given, showing very clearly the contrast between the renewed, the regenerate character, and that of men who continue in the ordinary, natural, unrenewed condition.

1. Take for instance the love of money, the desire to accumulate. No one can doubt what the natural propensity is in nearly all men. No one can doubt how strong, how controlling, and how constant in its operation this disposition generally is. And no one can doubt that in this particular Mr. Pettengill was just like other men. His toilsome labor, his careful saving, his unceasing industry, his exactness even in little things, and his maintenance of his personal rights in all business transactions left no room for doubt as to his estimate of worldly property and his strong desire to possess it. But was this an unregulated and an over-mastering desire, or had some new principle been introduced, regulating and subordinating even this strong principle to something higher and better than mere personal accumulation and enjoyment? I will try and enlighten you.

In doing so I will only give you the few facts that have naturally fallen under my own observation. I came to Peoria twenty-seven years ago the last of this month; was introduced into Mr. Pettengill's family on my arrival; remained there nearly three months until my family joined me here.

While I was sojourning in this family the question of salary came up and was talked over freely. The little Main Street church was then small and poor, Mr. P. excepted. The one who had been supplying them told me of their history and misfortunes, and said, "Sometimes there were not more than forty in the congregation."

But Mr. P. said he thought they should try and pay $1,000 salary. It was very generous under the circumstances. He furthermore said, "Brethren, you subscribe and pay what you can reasonably, and I will make up the amount." They did so, and the result was he was obliged to pay more than half the salary for several years. For three or four years he must have paid as high as $700 a year. And I never heard from him one word of complaint or hint that he considered it any hardship.

He had aided generously in building the brick church on Main Street a few years before at a cost of about $8,000. But after all was done a debt remained upon it for which he became responsible. It was a burden of anxiety upon us for awhile, until, in the goodness of his heart, he gave it all to us out and out, the sum then amounting to over $4,000.

Our church meanwhile grew, and as it was unnecessary he gave less toward the salary, but our church benevolences prospered finely. We were the envy of neighboring churches. They inquired of us how we did it. They would struggle to raise one dollar a member. We easily raised more than two dollars a member, sometimes for a single cause. For home missions we gave as high as $300 at one collection. For A. M. A. about the same, and some less for foreign missions. The secret lay largely in this man's generosity. When one man gave twenty-five, forty, fifty dollars at an ordinary collection, it raised the average of our small church very much.

I have no account of his outside gifts during all this time. I only know he was besieged by agents, ministers, missionaries, students, colleges and seminaries, and that he helped them, on the right and left, north and south, how much, I suppose nobody knows. By his generosity a piece of land in the country came into the hands of one of my family, and in connection with that I learned that the adjoining forty acres was given years before to aid a ladies' seminary at Godfrey near Alton in this State.

I need not rehearse the particulars as to his promptness and generosity when the erection of this church edifice was undertaken. In every effort he has been a liberal helper, doing as much as he in conscience dared to do in this line, knowing how many other needs there were. His amount contributed to this edifice, I was sometime since informed, is about $10,500. It is a matter of thankfulness with us all that he lived to see it completed, met here to worship God with us, and expressed on the whole a very gratifying satisfaction that he had done what he had for this enterprise, hoping that it would be for God's glory and the people's good that so admirable a religious home had been provided.

His last public effort for us in providing a beautiful seminary for young ladies is well known. From being one of several to provide a place for a flourishing school then in need of a room in which to meet, as was first suggested, he went on to do all himself, as no other one seemed ready to act. He purchased ample lots, beautiful for situation. He proceeded to plan for the building, and after due consideration decided it should be of brick and thus be permanent. He enlarged the plans, perfected the arrangements, carried all to completion at length, doing it all himself, furnishing an admirable property for this purpose at an expense of some $20,000.

But I need not extend this line of remark. Has there been no change here, no renewing of the Spirit? Are these the promptings of the original, natural dispositions? Are these the fruits of selfishness, covetousness, worldliness? Are they the common, the prevailing traits among men? If not, why are they not? Why has he acted on principles so different from what is usual, and why is he so different from what was to be expected, judging from the desires which by nature were so strongly developed within him? Here is something supernatural. There has been a quickening, a renewing to a new, a higher and better life. Can we say less than this, that the man has evidently been saved in God's mercy "by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Spirit?"

2. Another among the stronger promptings of our human nature, is the love of other's approval. We like to have men think well of us, and speak approvingly. We dread their frowns and their reproaches. How much the general sentiments of others and the prevailing practices around us do control us! What cowards we generally are when it comes to the opposition of the masses of the people! And their sneers and ridicule, how we do strive to escape them! There is no reason to think this good brother was, in this respect, any different from all other men. And yet what unpopular causes did he espouse and eleave to, and advoeate most persistently, at whatever inconvenience or expense or loss of other's good will!

*Mr. P. was converted before this under Mr. Burchard's preaching in Brockport, New York, but at this time made a new consecration.

The poor and down-trodden, the slave who had no helper, he befriended when it cost something to act thus. It made no difference that he was mobbed, driven from his own church and their meeting broken up, and a cloud of disgrace sought to be east over him. His practical decision was like that of Luther, "Here I stand, so help me God I ean do no other." And he did stand by the oppressed bondman through thick and thin, until by the governing God his shackles were strieken off and all men in our land were made frec.

His position in behalf of temperance has been alike determined and consistent. Thc enormity of this wickedness which manufactures, traffics in and habitually uses these dreadful intoxieants in all their forms, he has ever proclaimed. He abhorred the whole system from the bottom of his soul. And he believed the eyes of men would yet be so opened to the horrible criminality of these praetices as to swcep this whole saloon system from the face of the earth.

There was still another thing of great strength and wide prevalence which he has steadily opposed from early life. I allude to the system of Freemasonry and other kindred organizations. Many doubtless have wondered at his hostility to these. But he was thoroughly eonversant with the facts conneeted with the Morgan tragedy, whieh oecurred many years ago in the State of New York, living in the near neighborhood of them; and his feelings and eonvictions were then so deep that these things were dangerous and hurtful to community that he has felt bound to testify unceasingly against them. He believed their secrecy was itself to be suspected. He believed them to be clannish, and thus opposed to the spirit of universal benevolenee; and more than all he opposed them beeause he believed there was a tendency to make a kind of religion of these things, and thus cherish hopes that would disappoint men in the end. Judging from their rituals, and forms of ceremony, and obituary resolutions, he feared that many were being deceived to their inevitable harm; and being loyal to Christ, believing that men could find salvation in no other one, and in no other way than that which Christ has laid down, he felt that he must oppose these things. But, as one of our daily papers has justly said, "He never forgot that he was a gentleman." Hc was never belligerent nor offensive. And he calmly, gently, but persistently testified as he did, because he loved men and would have them all to be saved.

Now why should he embrace all these unpopular causes, adhere to them at so much cost and loss of the good will of others. It was not the way to get trade, and he certainly desired to sell goods and to prosper. But, as was said of another eminent merchant, "his principles were not for sale." Such a man is a standing eontradiction of the miserable saying that "every man has his priee." He eould not be bought. Where his conscience spoke clearly no other interest whatever was allowed to eome into competition with duty. He embraced these causes then in obedienee to a higher prineiple of action than this world inspires. He had placed God's kingdom foremost. Right, not interest, was his governing law. He was a ehanged man, a regenerate one, and the principle which in the last result governed within his soul was from above. It was because he had been born of God that he acted thus.

3. But it is often the case that in some of these smaller interests of life we can better see which way thc charaeter is drifting, and what is the real spirit which governs within. A considerablc test is often found in connection with the rites of hospitality. And there are some so situated that the demands in this line make a very frequent and sometimes quite a burdensome appeal.

Such have been the customs formerly that some of our ministers' and home missionaries' families have been desperately taxed. The numbers and unexpectedness of these calls have required of the women in these families to "wash the saints' feet" until their backs have been almost broken, to say nothing of the exhaustion of the larder. But in this parish there has always been a family to take off the half and more of this burden. If any one here has faithfully fulfilled the injunction, "Use hospitality without grudging," Mr. Pettengill's family has done it, and it never seemed an unwelcome duty. The social enjoyment was accounted more than a compensation for all the trouble and expense. And many of the older members of this church will call to mind how many times they themselves have been invited to this hospitable mansion. First, the older ones would be invited to tea, and then the younger, on two or three or morc occasions as the needs might require, until all thc members, or nearly all, had met a eonsiderable portion of the others in free and friendly and most eheerful converse. Thus did he try and make all feel that they had some part in his more ample means and larger home; and above all try to make them feel that they were all brothers and sisters in one common household of the Lord.

4. Again, no one who had observed the glance and flash of his eye under provocation eould doubt that Mr. Pettengill had a temper. There were fires within, but duly smothered. Never in all these twenty-seven years have I heard any seolding tones from these lips, nor rasping, fretful language, nor any boisterous outbreaks whatever. He kept rule over his own spirit. "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that rulcth his spirit than he that taketh a city."

5. And still I have not spoken of the piety, the daily and consistent religious life, and godly walk before men, of Mr. Pettengill. The church well knows how constant he has been in all its meetings, worship, ordinances and duties. The weather, the distance, the roads, the inconveniences have not kept him from worship on the Sabbath, or from the weekly prayer meetings. Nothing but indisposition and the growing infirmities of life have been allowed to break in upon his attendanee with us in these services. When we eonsider his age and his distance from the church, all his habits during these later years have put us to shame. He has attended so constantly, by day and by night, and often walking also, that we could not doubt that he exceedingly loved the assemblies of God's people and the worship of his sanctuary. His charaeter seems to have been growing mellow, and ripening for heaven more and more as he grew older. He has fully justified the language of an English author who says, "Old age is a beautiful period. It gives us leisure to lay off our earthly garments, one by one, and dress ourselves for heaven."

His religion has borne him up in sorrow, too. And in spite of many and protracted earthly afflictions his life has been eminently a happy life. He had sad reverses in business in early life; he suffered from grievous sickness at times; he buried his two children in their early childhood; his first wife was long an invalid, and sometimes suffered in mind as well as body; the one he leaves behind him has often expected to go before him, and for years has required most eareful nursing to preserve her own life. But through it all not only has Mr. Pettengill been a happy man, but his has been a happy family; and few visits have I had with my parishioners more lively, cheerful, and every way pleasant, than the very last one I had with these friends before this last siekness came on. Herein lies a deep mystery to some, that people should be so happy and yet so afflieted; "as sorrowful yet always rejoicing." It is because they learn to bow to "God's sweet will." It is because God is so good that they ean always rejoiee in him. This brother's trust in God was sueh that his experience verified the statement of Faber's beautiful verse—

> "Ill which God blesses is our good,
> And good unblest is ill;
> And all is right which seems most wrong
> If it be his dear will."

Not only was he blest while here, but we feel the utmost assurance that it is well with him in the world beyond us. Who is in any doubt about his future? How do the people express themselves? Why are they so certain about his safety? Because of his earnest, consistent Christian life. So far from it being uncertain what moral truth is, so far from it being doubtful about the reality of this religion, there is almost nothing in the whole realm of our experience of which we feel so sure as of the essential truth of God and its effeets upon the human soul. There is no other reality more definite and substantial than this godly life and all its blessed experiences where it really exists. And there is nothing deeper in the radical eonvictions of our spiritual nature than this faet, that the character built up and life led here in this world must effeet the destiny hereafter.

If then we ask ourselves, Is it well with this soul? the universal verdict is, "It is well." Are we sure of it? Just as sure as we are that he was a subject of God's "husbandry," that he was in spirit and character a production of his "workmanship"—and this grace which brought salvation to him is alike free for us all. "This kindness and love of God our Saviour" is towards "man," the race. Can we look baek on such a life, traee its progress and growth, weigh well its issues and fruits and experiences, without in heart exclaiming, "May I die the death of the righteous, and may my last end be like his?"

And now we must bid him farewell. How we shall miss him! What benediction among us his presenee has been! He was a man of peace. Who ever contributed so much and eontrolled so little? May his mantle fall upon us, so that others shall fill up the great gap, and his loving, gentle spirit, his large generosity, and his fervent piety shall not be lost to the world.

We cannot help sorrowing when such a man dies. But the tears we shed are not all tears of sorrow; they are grateful tears. We are full of thankfulness. For the grace of God bestowed, for the "workmanship" performed, for the charaeter wrought out by all this care and eulture of the Divine "husbandry," we can only say, "Thanks be to God for his unspeakable gift."

REMARKS ON THE SAME OCCASION.

BY REV. E. FRANK HOWE, PASTOR OF THE FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, PEORIA.

Although there is no necessity for adding anything to what has already been said, and while I am profoundly grateful that our brother, who has been assoeiated so many years with the one who has now gone, is here to tell the story of his life on this occasion, yet I cannot, on aeeount of my position in relation to this chureh and my relations to Deacon Pettengill himself, let these services end without bringing some tribute myself. I will, therefore, speak of one thing which has struck me more forcibly than almost anything else in my acquaintance with Deaeon Pettengill, and that is the spirit which he has manifested in all his reformatory work.

As has been already indicated he was emphatically a reformer. He was a bold and persistent reformer, and one who could not be swerved a hair from his convictions. The confidence with which he entered upon all attcmpts at the correction of moral evils is indicated by an incident whieh came to my knowledge on the way to the chureh this morning. It oecurred in the very early days of the anti-slavery movement. A few persons decided to form an anti-slavery society here in Peoria. Notice was given accordingly of a meeting to bc held on a certain evening in the Congregational church for that purpose. A citizens' meeting was at once called to protest against the formation of the proposed society. At this citizens' meeting it was resolved that the movement should be stopped, by persuasion if possible and by force if necessary. When the evening arrived for the anti-slavery meeting these resolutions of the eitizens were read to the meeting. The Abolitionists however insisted upon their right to meet in an orderly way and organize for a lawful purpose, and expressed their determination to go on. Whereupon the citizens proeeeded to put out the lights and thus break up the meeting.

The next day the leaders in the new movement met together in the offiee of one of their number and were very much disheartened at their failure. After listening to their doleful remarks, Dea. Pettengill said, "Gentlemen, I expect to live to see every slave in this land free." The father of the gentleman who told me the story, at onee replied, "I admire your faith, sir, mueh more than I do your judgment." The sequel we all know.

And then, too, as to the faet that he could not be swerved from his convietions take, as an illustration, an incident whieh I heard him relate in the very last publie speech which I ever heard him make. In the early days of the city when the temperanee movement had not become popular as it is now, a man came to him from a neighboring town to get some work done upon a still. There was no other place where the work could be done this side of St. Louis. He refuscd to allow the work done in his shop. The man urged, was willing to pay any price, but it eould not be done, and it was not done in his shop. I wonder how many business men to-day are strong enough in their temperanee principles to refuse to share thus indirectly the responsibility for this business? He who lies there would not even in the most indirect way, in the eourse of ordinary business, do anything which could help in the manufacture of that which he believed should not be manufaetured. Not of an easy and accommodating conseience was he. And yet, with all his courage, persistence and strictness, [illegible] manifested a gentleness of spirit whieh won [illegible] respect, but disarmed personal hostility. We gen[illegible] think of a reformer as a harsh, severe man, and such traits we usually find in them. But not so with Deacon Pettengill. He seemed to me to have more of the spirit of Christ than any reformer I ever knew. I very mueh doubt if there be a man associated with any business or organization or eause whieh he has opposed who has not for Deacon Pettengill the profoundest respect. It is no small or easy thing to oppose men and yet retain their respect. He was able to do this.

THE NATIONAL REFORM CONVENTION.

The annual meeting of the National Reform Association was held in Cleveland Dec. 11 and 12. About two hundred persons composed the convention, besides the audienees which gathered to hear its proceedings. The Hon. Felix R. Brunot, of Pittsburgh, presided. Addresses were made by the Rev. Frederick Merrick, former president of Delaware University, Ohio, on "Our Politics;" by the Rev. J. B. Helwig, D.D., (Lutheran) of Akron, Ohio, on "Christ's Authority over the Nations;" by Bishop Bedell, of the Diocese of Ohio, and the Rev. H. M. Tenny, of Cleveland, on "Divoree Reform;" by Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, president of the Ohio Woman's Christian Temperance Union, on "Intemperance and the Republie;" by the Rev. A. M. Milligan, D.D., of Pittsburgh; the Rev. D. McAllister, professor of Political Seience in Geneva College, and the Rev Sylvester F. Scovel, president of Wooster University. The theme of the last address was "Rights of Conscienee."

Six of the nine district se[illegible]taries of the Association were present, and presented [illegible]orts of their work. The report of the financial seere[illegible]ary showed the receipt of more than six thousand dollars, from nearly three thousand contributors, during the year which closed June 1. During the three months just past the receipts have been almost three thousand dollars, given by more than fifteen hundred contributors in nineteen States and Territories.

The Hon. Felix R. Brunot was re-elected president. The list of vice-presidents embrace more than one hundred names, representing every State and Territory.

REFORM NEWS.

THE AMERICAN PUBLISHING COMPANY.

215 4½ St., N. W.
Washington, D. C., Dec. 25, 1883.

Both yesterday and to-day our Central Exeeutive Committee has been in session, and reached important results eoncerning the general political movement and the joint stoek company. Others will report the interesting and important series of meetings agreed upon, and I will only give an account of that part which coneerns the Washington building and the joint stock company.

Final reports of the repairs were rendered to Mr. Stoddard, and the present financial condition was earefully considered. A strenuous effort is to be madc to finish paying for the building before the eonvention to be held Feb. 21st and 22d. This effort ought to succeed, and doubtless will.

Senator Pomeroy prescnted a well-prepared applieation for a charter whieh was agreed to, together with the blanks for subseriptions and for certificates of stock. As it is necessary that all the charter members should meet to accept the charter and organize, it was unanimously eoncludcd that seven brethren, all residing in Washington, should become the incorporators, and, according to custom, a nominal sum was paid in by them to secure the charter. As soon as returns are received from the Secretary of State these seven gentlemen are to meet, accept the charter, organize, vote to fix the capital at $25,000, open the subscription books, and then the body will have a legal existence. The incorporators are Messrs. Pomeroy, Bowes, Gibson, Ford, Grisham, Hinman and Bailey. The money is to be paid in to-morrow, the application signed in due form, and forwarded to the Governor. A few days will be necessary to get returns. Mr. Milton Ford is to be custodian of the funds until the organization is completed. The name of the new company is "The American Publishing Company of Washington, D. C.," and it was agreed, after a free expression of opinion, that the paper should bear the simple, appropriate, and euphonious name, "The American." This was understood to be the second choice of Mr. Needels, who has taken so much interest in the enterprise and whose preference had great weight with the committee. But there were other obvious and weighty reasons for this name, and it will unquestionably be popular with friends everywhere.

Letters giving pledges to the stock continue to come, and almost all of them urge us to push the work rapidly. Nothing now remains but to raise the $5,000 cash. We have succeeded in organizing in a manner to meet the wishes of all the friends, absolute harmony is secured and grand success is all that for the movement. If any further delay occurs it will be on the part of those who must furnish the money. The publication of the paper could be commenced within two weeks if the money was here.

Among other important things attended to the Washington committee is preparing a form of constitution for organizing American clubs everywhere. There is no time to lose in executing these plans. Energy, zeal, wisdom, and much prayer, may, and doubtless will, produce rapid and important results. While with the left hand we strike down the power of the secret lodges by which they defeat temperance legislation, with the right hand we must bring in prohibition and every needed moral reform Let us take new courage and redouble our efforts.

E. D. BAILEY.

DR. COOK IN OHIO.

DEER LICK, Williams Co., Ohio, Dec. 13, 1883.

Dr. S. L. Cook, State lecturer for Indiana, is now in this county and is drawing such audiences as have seldom been seen in this vicinity. It is plain that in this reform the people require line upon line and precept upon precept until we shall have educated a generation to hate the lodge. Dr. Cook is certainly an entertaining speaker, and his thorough knowledge of the subject, together with his manifest desire to be kind to the sinner even while reproving sin conduce to fit him eminently for the delicate work he has in hand. The work here cannot fail to accomplish much good. The emissaries of the lodge sneak away like whipped puppies and to their honor preserve their jewel. Every additional laborer in the lecture field tends to weaken the influence of the lodge and promote the welfare of society. We congratulate our brethren in Indiana in having secured the labors of so efficient a lecturer, and hope it may not be long until every State is equally well supplied. H. S. KIRK.

GOOD WORD FROM INDIANA.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—It has been a long time since I have reported any work through the columns of your paper, but it may be gratifying to some of my old friends to know that I still live and am trying to defend the faith once delivered to the saints. It is with joy of heart that I mark every indication of the onward march of the reform work. I hail it as a token of the coming of the kingdom of our blessed Lord. Every new fortification from which as a sally port the soldiers receive supplies and come forth equipped with the truth to combat the powers of darkness. Clanism must go; and so it will. Its days are numbered. Its kingdom is finished, and now on the eve of a final victory let the sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty come up to the spoils and possess themselves of the victory won over sin through the blood of the Lamb, and by the testimony of his saints. O let us have the testimony of the saints to do the finishing work! The duty of testimony against Baal was never more absolutely required than now. If all of God's dear people would put on moral courage and testify at all times and places, be instant in season and out of season with their testimony, not only secretism but intemperance would no longer receive a toleration in this Christian country.

I spent last week abroad in the field. Attended the county temperance convention at Albion in Noble county, Ind.; preached on Wednesday evening in the Wesleyan Methodist church to a fine audience, many of whom enjoy the religion of the Spirit, a noble band of workers, whose testimony, with their pastor and others, gives no uncertain sound against Baal. May God continue to bless them, until their light shall shine away the darkness of secretism from Albion.

On Thursday evening I lectured on secret societies at Syracuse in Kosciusko county. This I am told is the first lecture of the kind in the place. We had a good attentive audience and a number of the fraternity were out. Bro. Bell here seems to be alone in the work; but by the help of God we made a beginning and I promised to come back in the near future. I am satisfied from my knowledge, and assured from my large correspondence the fields are already white to the harvest, and he that reapeth will receive wages. JOEL H. AUSTIN.

THEY NEED THE CYNOSURE.

The aged ministers are passing away and but few even of those who have been "entered, passed and raised" care to be sent to that "Grand Lodge" where the disciples of our rejected Lord can never enter after death. The young men who are taking their places are quite generally opposed to the secret works of darkness, but very many are confessedly ignorant on the subject. They are desiring light, and there is no way in which you can help them more than by getting them to subscribe for the Cynosure, or by sending it to them.

CORRESPONDENCE.

GATHERING HOME.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec., 24th, 1883.

Visiting Vineland, N. J., on the 21st inst., I missed some who had hitherto extended a helpful hand and a cordial greeting. Sister N. W. Myers had departed with a good hope, to join the assembly and church of the first-born in heaven, leaving her benefactions to bless the poor and needy with spiritual and temporal supplies.

Mrs. S. W., wife of Dr. T. W. Young, and only daughter of Rev. O. Wilbur, bade adieu to her husband and aged mother, on the 22d of August, to tread the path her father and only brother had passed over before, confidently following the same Guide who walked with them through the valley of shadows. Just two weeks later came the reapers for Elder Russell, and gathered a devoted minister with the garned stores of a long and active life. Sweetly he fell asleep in autumn's eve, to wake amid the splendor of that morning which to us who remain "doth not yet appear." With characteristic forethought, this servant of the Master disposed of his possessions, making, as I was informed, a faithful colored domestic who had been for years in his household and equal sharer with his own children in his ample estate. "In as much as ye did it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me," and one who has given even the cup of water to one of his little ones shall in no case miss the reward. J. P. STODDARD.

WHY DISTRUST MASONRY?

In an address at the fiftieth anniversary of the "Star in the East" lodge, in New Bedford, Mass., (just ten years ago), Dr. A. H. Quint, orator of the occasion said of Freemasonry. "Why then should men look on this institution with distrust? I can solemnly say, that in all the obligations I have ever assumed, there is not one that interferes with the duty I owe to my God, my country, my church, my neighbor, my family or myself." Let Mr. T. C. Jerome then of the same city, at the anniversary of the City Missionary Society previously held, where Mr, Quint was also present, reply to the above question, and show a more exalted charity, a Christian way of doing good:

"Associations of human devising were first defensive and offensive, then social, and finally charitable. But the poor cannot join these charitable organizations, where it is expected that every one shall give more than he receives. Masonry is not free, and we have an odd rather than even fellowship, where half the world is certainly shut out; are the women not worthy of membership, or are the societies not worthy of them? The inquiries as to an applicant for membership are not only, is he of good character? but, has he means? can he give more than he receives? He did not wish to assail such societies; that would be as unequal a contest as David's with Goliah. He would pursue this portion of the subject only just far enough to show the superiority of the church to all human institutions. Whatever may be concealed in such an order, its avowed character is exclusive and narrow, aristocratic rather than republican; it is for Masons, not for men. It is religious, keeps out infidels, admits members on the open Bible, and has a chaplain; but is the question, 'If ye love them who love you, what reward have ye?' quoted in its litany? The world's highest type of charity is far below the true idea. By standing in the place of religion it may be a fatal snare to some.

"The mission of the church is specially to those cast out, to those in prison, in the gutter, in brothels. They are fellow sinners with us all, and it is no disgrace for us to stand beside them and say, Go in peace and sin no more. Thy brother is him who has fallen among thieves. This is the true human brotherhood."

For myself I would say in reply, What but distrust, can a Christian feel, for an institution, which planned and perpetrated and then by every means in its power sought to cover up the murder of at least one innocent man? Morgan's groans and shrieks still cry for vengance. Why? Because the fraternity as such, have never repented of and confessed the crime.

ERNESTINE.

NOTES OF SOUTHERN TRAVEL.

DEAR CYNOSURE:— I have been South, and my observations and experience may be of some interest to your readers.

1. Passing through southern Ohio I entered into conversation with a conductor. And after mutual compliments on a former manager of the road, I said, "I have never observed that you men on this road have anything to do with those secret organizations that get up the strikes."

"No," said he, "I don't believe in any secret organization except the Masons. I think Masonry is a good thing,—a benevolent institution, and I have about made up my mind to join it."

"But," said I, "is it not a wise maxim to look before you leap? Masonry is understood to involve very grave and serious obligations; and we have already about as many obligations as we can carry. Is it wise for a man to bind himself with great and increased obligations of which he knows nothing until he has taken them?"

He admitted that it did not seem wise. "Then," said I, "had you not better look into the matter before you tie yourself up?"

He looked surprised and said, "Yes; if there is any way, but is there any way?"

"O yes; there is a way." I then gave him a lecture of half an hour with a few tracts, for which he thanked me; and during the ride he came back again to thank me for the information I had given him; promised to receive an exposition; said he should never join the Masons or any other secret organization, and, he supposed I had saved him two hundred dollars.

2. Passing through Kentucky on the Cincinnati Southern, R. R., I was attracted by the pleasant face of an old white-haired man like myself, and took a seat beside him. After a few common-place remarks, I asked, "Are you a Christian?"

"Why do you ask that question?"

"Because we are both old men, nearing the border, and that is the great thing for us."

"That is just what I think," said he. He was a Presbyterian minister from western Pennsylvania, going South to spend the winter. After some further talk, I asked if he could tell me anything about the lodges in his neighborhood. He could give me no definite information. I then gave him "Boys who hope to be men," and "Modern Heathenism," which he looked over, and said, "Here, too, I agree with you." He then went on to tell me of a prominent Methodist minister and high Mason with whom he was acquainted, and to whom he had put the question, "What do you belong to the Masons for?" The Methodist brother after a little hesitation, said, "Position." "Yes," said the interrogator, "you know that the bishops and presiding elders are all Masons, and if you don't want to starve you must belong to the lodge." The Methodist brother laughed and dropped the subject.

It looks like a pretty strong reflection on the M. E. church, and I fear it is not wholly undeserved; but I must here add that though the Presbyterian church is comparatively free from the corruptions of the lodge, yet it is so in fear of the lodge that for an ordinary pastor to treat the danger and wickedness of the lodge as we all treat the danger and wickedness of the saloon, is simply to lose his position.

3. Passing west from Chattanooga through northern Alabama, a plain-looking farmer from South Carolina gave me the due-guard of a Master Mason in response to the same sign, which I had made by way of instructing a fellow passenger by my side. But when I showed him an illustrated exposition he turned his back on me very quick.

At one of the stations a large man with a swagger and Knight Templar badge came on to the train, and took a seat opposite to me. I watched him for a while, and then as politely as I could, offered him the above mentioned tracts. He read them both carefully through, tore them into small pieces, and then turning his back to me looked out at the window till we arrived at Huntsville where he left the train. But for the most part, my tracts were well, and sometimes thankfully received.

At each place where I stopped, I took pains to ascertain what I could as to the condition and activity of the lodge. At Athens, Alabama, an old and wealthy town, the Mayor told me that he had never belonged and knew nothing of the lodge save that there was one there and always had been. The pastor of the Cumberland Presbyterian church said he knew nothing about the lodge, He used to be posted in regard to it; but for years he had thought that a pastor had enough to do without meddling with any of those "outside issues." But I am sorry to add that he was just as ignorant of the noble Freedmen's school in that place, as he was of the lodge. But it was cheering to be told by the principal of that school, that the negroes of that place had found out that when they joined the lodge, they lost their money and got nothing in return; and they are quite sick of it.

In Madison, a village of 500 inhabitants on the Memphis and Charleston R. R., the lodge had surrendered its charter and business men seemed indifferent to the subject. In Huntsville, Dr. ——, pastor of the Presbyterian church South, is not a Mason and not in favor of Masonry. I asked a negro student for the ministry here, if he had ever been spoken to about joining the Masons. He said he had; his pastor belonged. "What will it cost?" He had been bitten to the extent of $16.00 in one secret society, and had not much to spare. You may be sure I gave him light on the subject.

In Chattanooga where I stopped on my return, business of all sorts is active. A Methodist pastor in answer to my inquiry said exultingly that there were two lodges, a chapter and commandery there, all in flourishing condition. "Do you work in that line?"

"Not in the same direction that you probably do. I am acquainted with those institutions, and when I find a sober, sensible man who wants information concerning them, I readily give him the information he desires.

A Presbyterian pastor on whom I called said he was a Mason, but not an active Mason; did not care whether the lodge went up or down: but thought our efforts to destroy the institution would hardly be worth the candle. I gave them both tracts for their cogitation which they promised to read,

And here it is proper for me to say, that I have endured some persecution in my time; yet at Chattanooga I was received and for four days entertained with such kind and generous attentions as I have rarely if ever met in my life, though the man who thus received me is a Mason and, for many years has known my position in regard to the matter. Nor is this the only instance in which I have been treated by a Mason with no less respect for my endeavors to destroy an institution with which he was connected.

In another letter I may travel again over the same ground with a different class of observations of no less interest to the general reader. Yours truly,

WARREN TAYLOR.

PITH AND POINT.

Bro. Bailey, in a brief letter in which he speaks highly of the Philadelphia convention and hopes much from its effect, says of the Worcester secret political society:

"The communication from the Worcester Spy in the last Cynosure (Dec. 20th), was exceedingly interesting to me. The so-called "Dark Lantern" society in Worcester is no myth, but a reality. Men who gained some inside knowledge of its existence have repeatedly given me information, but its operations were too sly to follow its tracks. Mayor Hildreth, our non-Masonic, temperance mayor of last year, fell a victim to a cunning snare, which, in his ignorance of secret political tricks, he did not see till too late; but he had the manliness to disclose the snare afterwards, and is deserving of great sympathy. A designing politician, a member of Plymouth church and a Knight Templar, supposed also to be a temperance man, gained the mayor's confidence by promising to stand by him in his temperance efforts, and thus gained a controlling influence in his counsels which he used to entrap him, by which means he run the licenses up from 175, the number given the previous year, to 240. This was in the interest of the secret ring which runs city politics. Worcester is rapidly ripening for the advent of the American party."

Bro. R. W. Lyman makes an amendment as follows:

Upon the 5th page of Cynosure of 13th inst. Geo. Eley presents a resolution, preceded by a preamble, touching the subject of Christian union. He impliedly invites suggestions and adds, "With due respect for the views of others these thoughts are submitted." With like modesty and like invitation to "suggest a better," I accept the preamble, and copy the resolution, adding, as I shall indicate, my offered amendment. If, as amended, Mr. Eley will accept it, I hereby indicate a seconding.

Resolved, That all Christians should adopt as the measure of their faith and practice [all and] only those things taught by Christ and his apostles," while wholly repudiating the idea of selecting and severing a portion of Bible teaching, from the mass as a whole, in order that, upon such selected portions a human organization shall be formed which, in its fellowship, shall be exclusive as toward any person born of the Spirit.

Park College, Missouri, has been before noticed in our columns as an institution managed upon an original plan. Rev. J. D. Gehring, who has lately gone thither, praises it below, and if he and President McAfee will take good counsel and raise the banner for Christ against all substitutes devised by men, from the lodge up, the college will stand alongside Avalon on the roll of honor. Bro. Gehring writes:

"We have come to this place to have our children educated. The president of Park College, Prof. McAfee, very generously proposed to take in and train and educate our children free of charge. This institution is born of prayer and lives—and thrives—by faith. It is the most thoroughly religious (in a spiritual sense) of any school in all the Presbyterian church, and is independent of all church boards and committee supervision and dictation. There are over 200 students, more than half females, now here; three-fourths of them are beneficiaries, in an absolute sense, receiving not only instruction, but board, clothing and books free. Not one of the young men here uses tobacco in any form. Most of them are devout Christians. A few coming here for a time resist the high spiritual pressure brought constantly to bear upon the heart and life, but they must either finally yield, or—which in rare cases happens—they must leave."

Another friend who advocates the union of anti-lodge and anti-saloon forces says:

"My convictions are strong that prohibition will not be a permanent success, until the root that sustains the accursed traffic in drink is looked after and the ax of truth applied. I believe the lodge is the secret strength and encouragement of saloonists. Why? Because their own count will allow me to say that nine-tenths of that long list are enrolled as lodgites. Will the lodgites vote prohibition? No; they will not violate their oaths to hurt their own friends. Then there is a root that gives more life and strength to the lodge than all others. How many that profess to be ministers of Christ are in that secret den and join hand, heart and sentiment with the debauchee. We must strike at these roots fearlessly, do our duty, and leave the event to God."

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON II.—January 13, 1884.—Hearing and Doing. Jas. 1:16-27.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Be ye doers of the word and not hearers only. Jas. 1:22.

THE LESSONS IN JAMES.—The next three lessons, from the Epistle of James, are doubtless placed here (1) because in the previous lesson occurs the last notice of James in the Acts, save a brief one in ch. 21:18, and he is brought forward as a prominent person in the history; (2) because the Epistle was probably written about this time. This lesson will give an idea of the man, and of the people and times at the period of the history we are studying.

"The source of all good." The tendency of the race is to charge their sins upon God. It is a great error. To err here may mean errors of judgment and errors of practice the mind receives and cherishes error, and then evil practice follows. To avoid error we must seek the truth.—Alford.

"From the Father of lights." God is (1) the Father of the heavenly bodies, the sun, moon and stars, which he has created, and from which all our light comes. (2) The Father of all our intellectual and spiritual light, of which the former is the emblem and symbol. Light, in the Scriptures, is the emblem of knowledge, purity, happiness; and God is often represented as light (comp. 1 John 1:5; 1 Tim. 6:16). There is doubtless an allusion here to the heavenly bodies, among which the sun is the most brilliant. No cloud, no darkness seems to come from the sun, but it pours its rich effulgence on the farthest part of the universe. So it is with God. There is no darkness in him (1 John 1:5); and all the moral light and purity which there is in the universe is to be traced to him.—Barnes.

"Neither shadow of turning." That turning or revolution in which the heavens are ever found: by means of which the moon turns her dark side to us, in a constant state of change, and shadow of turning: by means of which the moon is eclipsed by the shadow of the earth, and the sun by the body of the moon, or, if you will, though this is hardly so likely to have been in view, is hidden from us during the night. From all these God, the Father of lights, is free; as (1 John 1:5), God is light, and in him is no darkness at all.—Alford.

"That we should be a kind of firstfruits." We should be to all the rest of God's creatures something like the first fruits, the first-born of man and cattle, the first fruits of the harvests and the vines, which were consecrated to God by the Jews, and by which the entire produce, though used by the people, was consecrated to God (Num. 15: 19-21; Ex. 23:19). So the Christians then were the first fruits of the conversion of the world, (1) the sign that all belonged to God, (2) the peculiar treasure used for his highest and most spiritual ends, and (3) the pledge that the whole world would yet belong to Christ.—P.

"Let every man be swift to hear" the Word of truth, which has so great a power for good and for life. The verb is absolute and general, having only reference to the Word of truth.—Alford.

"Slow to speak." Slow to speak authoritatively as a master or teacher of others (cf. ch. 3:1) a common Jewish fault; slow also to speak such hasty things of God, as in ver. 13. Two ears are given to us the Rabbis observe, but only one tongue; the ears are open and exposed, whereas the tongue is walled in behind the teeth.—J. F. and B.

"Worketh not the righteousness of God." That which is righteous in God's sight. Passion (1) unfits us to see and know the truth. (2) It hinders us from imparting it to others by prejudiciug them against it. (3) It tends to kindle anger in others instead of making them better. No one was ever scolded into goodness.

"The engrafted word," i. e., the implanted word. The word spoken of is beyond doubt the same as the word of truth above, i. e., the Gospel in its fulness. This has been implanted in your minds and memories, and should be received in your hearts and lives. The Gospel is represented here under the figure of a shoot implanted or engrafted, that produces fruit of its own, whatever may be the original character of the tree into which it is engrafted. The meaning is, that we should allow the principles of the Gospel to be thus engrafted on our nature; that however crabbed or perverse our nature may be, or however bitter and vile the fruits which it might bring forth of its own accord, it might, through the engrafted word, produce the fruits of righteousness.—Barnes.

"For....he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass." As the glass represents to us the features of our faces, whether beautiful or deformed, and so the Word show sus the true face of our souls, the beauty of God's image when restored to them, and the spots of sin which so greatly disfigure them.—Pool.

"Whoso looketh into," literally, stoopeth down to take a close look into. Peers into: stronger than "beholdeth" or "contemplated" (ver. 24) A blessed curiosity if it be efficacious in bearing fruit.

"The law of liberty." The Gospel gives the new heart to which obedience to the law is natural, spontaneous and free, as the song of a bird, or the play of a child. Whosoever comes into the Gospel, comes into the glorious liberty of the sons of God, freedom from the bondage of sin and lust, freedom from the penalties of sin, and the dread of it, the freedom of doing what we love to do because we love.—P. "This man shall be blessed in his deeds." The joy, the rest, the refreshing, the comforts, the contents, the smiles, the incomes the saints now enjoy, are so precious and glorious in their eyes that they would not exchange them for ten thousand worlds. If there be so much to be had in the wilderness, what then shall be had in Paradise!—Thomas Brooks.

"Deceiveth his own heart." Mr. Barnes once said that some men were too dishonest even to be saved, because they would not be honest even with themselves. The worst of all deception is self-deception. Men refuse to see themselves as they are.

"Religion." The Greek expresses the external service or exercise of religion, "godliness" being the internal soul of it. "If any man think himself to be (so the Greek) religious, i. e., observant of the offices of religion, let him know these consist not so much in outward observances, as in such acts of mercy and humble piety (Mic. 6:7, 8), as visiting the fatherless etc., and keeping one's self unspotted from the world." (Matt. 23:23.) St. James does not mean that these offices are the great essentials, or sum total of religion; but that, whereas the law service was merely ceremonial, the very services of the Gospel consist in acts of mercy and holiness.—J. F. and B.

"The fatherless and widows." These are mentioned because they are the most likely to be neglected and oppressed. Especially in the East are their circumstances very deplorable. Widows have no means of earning a living for themselves, and are not allowed to make their wants known. These two classes are but the representatives of all who are in need, both spiritual and temporal, those near and those far off in distant lands. The lower and more oppressed and despised any person or class or race may be, the more earnestly does the true Christian spirit seek to aid them, both physically and spiritually. "And to keep himself unspotted from the world." He does not say "unfilled" with the world, nor "overwhelmed" by the world; for that would keep him from being a Christian at all,—but not a drop or stain of the worldly influence, not a spatter of its mud, not a particle of its corruption, not a breath of its spirit, should defile the Christian spirit. Mr. Ruskin has well said that life is purity, and death is corruption. Living plants keep pure by their living, the running water is the pure water. So Christians, filled with the life of Christ, keep themselves pure, unspotted, by living the Christian life, by activity in doing good. Only working Christians and working churches can keep themselves unspotted from the world.—Peloubet.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

Doers of the Word Practice a Pure Religion.

1. The number of hearers is always very much larger than the number of doers. We find it so in every branch of reform. There are plenty of people who will go to hear some great temperance lecturer like Gough, while there are few willing to go actively to work, and do what they can, much or little, to save the drunkard. It is so with the anti-secret cause. If everybody who feels convinced that secret societies are wrong would do all he could to convince others the lodge would soon go down.

2. When a doer of the word accepts Christ's righteousness, he must first throw away the filthy garments of his sinful habits. We all know that tobacco is unclean; but a sincere doer of the word will not only refuse to smoke or chew himself, but he will try to get others to leave it off.

3. In spite of its high pretensions the secret lodge is a great foe to moral purity, and therefore one of the forms of filthiness that Christians are commanded to lay aside.

4. This can be proved by the fact that Masonic writers without exception trace back its origin to the old heathen mysteries. We know that this was a kind of secret idolatry carried on with most impure and revolting rites. God's people were enticed into it (Num. 25, Ez. 8.) Reason as well as Scripture teach that nothing good can come from a corrupt source.

5. A fatal form of typhoid fever broke out in a certain village which puzzled the doctors until they found that the water the people had been drinking come from a polluted spring. Whatever good Masonry may seem to teach it is poisoned at the fountain. Christ alone gives us the living waters in which no drop of defilement can mingle for they flow directly from beneath God's throne.

6. We often find people who refuse to believe what is told them about secret societies, or even read an anti-secret tract; but a sincere doer of the word will always be willing to receive instruction.

7. Pure religion is pure love. It seeks no reward but the joy of doing good. "Masonry is organized selfishness."

Light from the Word.

Does pure religion seek to purify others? Dan. 11:35; Phil 2:15.

Can a good thing come from an evil source? Job 14:4.

What instance can you give of a man who practiced pure religion? Job 29:11-17.

FARM NOTES.

EXPORT DEMAND FOR AMERICAN HORSES.—The Americans are cutting us out of another market. For many years the demand of France and Germany for remounts has been confidently calculated upon by our horse-breeders; but it would seem that in this market also we are being undersold by America. French agents are out West with orders for no fewer than 5,000 horses for the French army. They are to be shipped to Havre, in batches of 250 at a time. These American horses, as a shipper says, are just the thing to carry a Frenchman into or out of a fight, as they are hardy and spirited. Three years ago 2,000 American horses were shipped to London to the Metropolitan Tramway Company, and a letter is quoted from Mr. C. A. Smith, Chairman of the company, to the effect that "The American horses are the toughest and most hardy of any that we can get. I would give two French horses for one American any day." It would seem that it is not only on the race course that the transatlantic horse-breeder distances his British competitor.—Pall Mall Gazette, London.

EFFECTS OF FOOD AND AIR UPON THE FLAVOR AND QUALITY OF MEAT.—The best animal food comes from localities where the peculiarities of the soil are such as to develop rich and high flavored herbage. It happens that such peculiarities exist high up on the Alps, and on some of the elevated parts of the British Isles, where the grasses are rich and aromatic to an extent notably greater than on the lands lying lower, while on the elevated portions of New England and New York, as compared with the lowlands and the blue grass region of Kentucky, the reverse is true. No; much exercise is not the basis of superior animal food. It may seem, at first glance, that the severe exercise which gives great strength and power of endurance to the muscles, and which contributes to vigorous health and the strongest hold on life, would also be most favorable to high quality of food in the bodies of such animals; but it does not follow that what is best for the welfare of a living animal is best for the welfare of the one who is going to eat the animal. The welfares of the two clash strongly at some points, and the result of laborious exercise on the part of the animal is one of them. It is not so much severe exercise as good food and pure air that contribute most to excellence in animal food. Pure air is one of the most essential. Its importance is well illustrated in the difference between wild fowl and tame. The partridge, grouse, and prairie chickens, which are comparable to our gallinaceous fowls, are vastly superior to our domestic hen, not because they are better fed, nor because they have more exercise, but because they breathe purer air. Next to pork, the flesh of domestic fowls is most uncleanly and impure. Besides injury from over-fattening, and from mingling offensive matter with their food by being fed in filthy places, the most objectionable thing is their breathing the effluvia of the roost, over which most of them are compelled to sit till the marrow of their bones becomes saturated with the malarious infections of their offal. This is enough to make all the difference between wild meat and tame. The close stable, the sty and the roost, are the bane of domestic meats.—Prof. L. B. Arnold, in New York Tribune.

A CAR LOAD.—A car load is nominally 20,000 pounds. It is also 70 barrels of salt, 70 of lime, 90 of flour, 60 of whisky, 200 sacks of flour, 6 cords of soft wood, 18 or 20 head of cattle, 50 or 60 head of hogs, 80 to 100 head of sheep, 9,000 feet of solid boards, 17,000 feet of siding, 13,000 feet of flooring, 40,000 shingles, one-half less hard lumber, one-fourth less of green lumber, one-tenth of joist, scantling and other large timbers, 340 bushels of wheat, 400 of corn, 680 of oats, 400 of barley, 360 of flaxseed, 370 of apples, 330 of Irish potatoes, 360 of sweet potatoes, 1 000 of bran.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)
Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.
Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)
Christian Reformed Church.
Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)
Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.
Disciples (in part.)
Friends.
Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.
Mennonites.
Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.
Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)
Moravians.
Plymouth Brethren.
Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.
Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)
United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

WM. HAZENBURG, Cape Town, S. Africa.
A. D. ZARAPHONITHES, Smyrna, Turkey.

Contributions for either of these brethren may be forwarded through the Treasurer of the N. C. A. PLEASE DESIGNATE to which one such funds shall be sent.

NOTICE.

Persons write occasionally, saying, "I sent a remittance so and so, but the tag on my paper it not changed." Such inquiries are proper, and the explanation is this: when a subscription is received it is entered at once on the book and the letter filed for future reference if needed, but the printed mailing list is not changed until a sufficient number are received to require the printing of a new list. If but few subscriptions are received, the change may be delayed for a month or more, but when the list fills up rapidly it requires frequent revision. If the date on your paper is not changed within four weeks after you remit it is the safest way to drop a card to this office.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JANUARY 3, 1884.

THE CYNOSURE'S HAPPY NEW YEAR.

John H. Sloan, Westfield, Ill.—In the last Cynosure you ask each reader to help by sending in one two-months' subscriber. I send in three for two months and one for a year.

S. A. Pratt, Esq., Worcester, Mass.—The Cynosure is a glorious messenger of Truth. Let its leaves fly to the ends of the earth, and may many souls be saved from lodge destruction, is my prayer.

C. M. Strickler, Clearport, Ohio.—I only wish that the Cynosure could penetrate into every household in this land.

Rev. W. W. Warner, Waupun, Wis.—The paper is improving. It is what it claims to be—the Guiding Star in Reform. God bless you.

Lewis Wood, Spiceland, Ind.—I started out in town yesterday and got these five subscribers in a few minutes. Send me Gen. Phelps on Madagascar. If possible I will send more.

W. J. Carter, Syracuse, N. Y.—I have no desire to part company with a paper that speaks so boldly and openly of sins of these wicked times, both public and secret. You will find in me a regular subscriber to your paper. I welcome it and am almost lost without it.

Jesse Hunter, Beman, Kansas.—With great anxiety I wait for the arrival of the Cynosure with its cheering news of the glorious reform work. It fills a place and is doing a work that no other paper is doing in America. I love its fearless and outspoken tone.

Dr. J. N. Norris, Birmingham, Iowa.—Let me wish the whole Cynosure company, and all the friends of reform everywhere, a "Happy New Year," and also wish all the victims of lodgery, of whatever sort or grade, a happy escape from the thralldom of the devil of secretism, and a speedy and safe return to freedom and simple citizenship—the normal condition of every honest man.

John Ward, Jr., Owaneco, Ill.—Your valuable paper I do not propose to do without as long as I can manage to pay for it. When I get my mail it is the first paper I read.

James Brown, Warner, Dakota.—You ask if there is anything in your paper that I did not like. I may just say that I think it is the best paper printed on the continent of America. As soon as I read it I send it to some one else. Several of my neighbors would subscribe, but feel too poor at present.

ALWAYS IN SEASON.

To renew your subscription to the Cynosure at the right moment is always a handsome thing to do. Some are compelled to postpone for a few days because the cash-box is empty; some have grown up with a bad habit of neglecting such little opportunities for doing good. But all will be forgiven if the renewal now due is sent on soon. GIVE YOUR PAPER A HAPPY NEW YEAR COLUMN EVERY WEEK LIKE THAT ABOVE.

If each one will add to his effort for a good cause the name of a new subscriber, enclosing $4.00 for both, the sender may have also his choice of the following valuable pamphlets:

1. The Batavia Convention pamphlet, with the great speeches on that occasion, illustrations of the Morgan Monument, etc.; or

2. Egypt in History and Prophecy; or, Pharaoh proclaiming God, by the celebrated Robert Patterson, from Hasting's Anti-infidel Library; or

3. The Anti-masonic Scrap Book, a new and enlarged edition now in press, containing all the tracts published by the N. C. A.; or

4. The Island of Madagascar; the excellent history written by Gen. J. W. Phelps and noticed in a late Cynosure.

5. Copies of any of the pamphlets sold by the N. C. A., to the amount of 25 cents.

A CLUB OF FIVE

trial subscribers (two months for 25 cents) will just now be a valuable accession to the Cynosure list. To every friend who will get one up and enclose the $1.25 and addresses plainly written we will send either of the documents mentioned above.

FOR A CLUB OF TEN the sender may choose any two from the above list.

Get the Cynosure circulated in your town. The lodge does not thrive where it is read.

MOSES PETTENGILL.

"The memory of the just is blessed" is an adage as beautiful as true. His clear, calm intelligence; his word winged with love; his steady devotion to the right and true; his gentleness, goodness and charity, like starlight growing brighter and clearer as the world grows dark,—O, the memory of such a man is blessed.

And such was the man whose shadow has fallen on this New Year's Cynosure. Hundreds will hail this "once familiar face;" and not all of them with dry eyes.

In December, 1845, thirty-eight years ago, the writer of this sketch, with his young wife and two little children, drove a span of Missouri horses and a broad-track ,Indiana wagon 300 miles, from Cape Girardeau, Missouri, to Galesburg, Illinois. The winter was in its surliest mood. We left the river floating huge blocks of ice; and when we reached Illinoistown (now East St. Louis), loaded teams were crossing the Mississippi on the ice. An early friend and acquaintance (Mr. W. O. Willard), met and recognized us in the Lone-tree Prairie, Tazewell county, Ill., and directed us to call at Mr. Moses Pettengill's, (a name till then unknown to us) in Peoria. We did so. We were brothers in Christ; and, after the first Mrs. Pettengill's death, we became brothers-in-law.

The human part of Mr. Pettengill's story, like all human stories, is soon told. Born in Salisbury, New Hampshire, April 16, 1802; his father and mother were Benjamin and Hannah; his grandfather received his death fighting under Stark at Bennington; he was married to Miss Lucy Pettengill in 1833; buried little Moses and Hannah, all the children they had; and died in Peoria, Illinois, in November, 1883. He taught in Salisbury academy, N. H.; at Lowell, Mass.; at Saratoga Springs, and in Lewiston, New York; and was at the latter place when Morgan was brought to Fort Niagara and murdered. Mr. Pettengill knew the brutal Cummings, a preacher of Rochester and chaplain of the Masons; knew Bruce, King and others. Col. Jewett, who had charge of the Fort when Morgan was put there, was Mr. Pettengill's friend, and visited the fort with him, and showed him through it, except the powder magazine.

When the conspiracy and murder were uncovered in the courts there, Mr. Pettengill's great American soul comprehended the nature of the lodge as the certain ultimate destruction of every American principle and institution; and from that hour he has been the steady, constant and consistent foe of secretism. He was a member of the Convention in Pittsburgh (1868) which formed the National Christian Association, and he spoke at the unveiling of Morgan's Monument at Batavia, New York, September, 1882. He was calm, clear-headed and tranquil; but the blood of his Revolutionary fathers ran hot in his veins against an institution whose theory respects no law of God or man but its own.

When the lodge-god thrust in the slave-question to shield the secret orders from the popular indignation which cast 228,000 votes against it in 1832, Mr. Pettengill accepted the issue and became an Abolitionist; was mobbed in Peoria Court-house, while his neighbor Robert G. Ingersoll was a pro-slavery Democrat; and when the slave system fell, and the lodge which stood grinning in the shadow behind its human auction-block, came out of the battle-smoke of the rebellion to the front, he was there to face it; and his wife who survives him, stood firm by her husband's side, and entertained thirty delegates to the Peoria State Convention in their palatial residence on the bluff.

As a business man Mr. Pettengill had few equals, and no superiors. Merchant, builder and manufacturer, he embarked in seven different kinds of business and prospered in all. He gave away in benevolence much more than his rich neighbors were worth; and gained property all the time.

He settled in Peoria when the town consisted of thirty log huts. He asked his wife, "Shall we build a church and live on in our little cabin; or first build our own home?" "Let the house of God be first built," was the noble woman's reply. On Thanksgiving Day, 1879, he gave $4,000 to the beautiful stone temple where he worshiped, notwithstanding the lodge, which he abhorred, had snaked its way into it. He put $20-000 into a Peoria female seminary. He paid many thousands, and left $5,000 to Wheaton College. He helped Berea. He gave steadily to anti-slavery missions. When the ear heard him it blessed him, when the eye saw him it gave witness to him, because he delivered the poor that cried, and him that had none to help him; and the blessing of him that was ready to perish came upon him. Job 29:11–13. "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace."

This was Mr. Pettengill on this side the silent river. But, for him, the track was laid across, and he has passed into heaven without a jar. "These are they that follow the Lamb whither soever he goeth." "And the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of water; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." Rev. 7:17. And as Elijah's mantle fell on the young Elisha as he went up, so this great and good man's principles and character, find a fitting representative in his son.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Three Conventions called—Fusion of Americans and Prohibitionists—"The American Publishing Company" incorporated — Stock subscriptions begun — Paper named—Harmony, "fervent and effectual."

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 26, '83.

After repeated, earnest and harmonious consultations, in which Hon. S. C. Pomeroy, Secretary Stoddard, Revs. E. D. Bailey and H. H. Hinman, Joseph Bowes, Peter H. Grisham, Mrs. J. Blanchard, Mrs. E. D. Bailey, Mrs. John Tanner and the editor of the Cynosure were present, the following results were reached, in which all coincided, viz.:

1. To call an American and Prohibition Convention in Washington, to meet on Wednesday at 7:30 P. M., February 20, 1884.

2. To call a New England American and Prohibition convention to meet in Northampton, Mass., about the first of April next.

3. To call an American and Prohibition convention for the central States, to meet in Ohio early in May next.

4. To name the proposed Washington paper "The American," subject to the approval of the stock-holders.

5. To incorporate the American Publishing Company of Washington, D. C., under the laws of West Virginia, forthwith. The article of incorporation is drawn up, the law complied with, and it will be on record in a few days at most. It was thought best to incorporate under the laws of West Virginia because less stringent than the laws of this District. Some two thousand dollars are already subscribed toward the stock of the new paper; and the instrument of incorporation will be published as soon as received from the Secretary of State of West Virginia.

Some early and devoted friends of the reform are concerned lest the Washington paper should "kill the Cynosure in two years." Others are afraid that the National Christian Association will "drag her anchor;" and become weak and worldly as the Morgan gan movement did, and so all our labors and self-denials end in smoke, and that the smoke of the pit.

OUR ONLY SECURITY

is in "The Lord who made heaven and earth." Just as soon as we secure a large popular vote, thousands who now shun will then become advocates of our cause; and if the principle which excludes adhering Masons from the communion table and ballot-box is waved, blinked or given up, of course our cause is like Samson shorn,—

"Eyeless in Gaza at a mill with slaves."

But if, as signs now indicate, our cause is to spread and become more truly national, we must not stand back from our own success and the answer of our prayers. But we must pray more and pray better. The battle is God's not ours. He can do ten thousand things we do not now dream of. The Prohibitionists are beginning to see that prohibitionist Masons are sworn confederates with those Masons who are now presidents of brewers' and distillers' associations. And if men like Hon. Mr. Schumaker of Ohio and Hon. Chas. Almy of Massachusetts, who together received more than half a million votes in the fall election, shall join us with their followings, there will be enough to support the Washington paper twice over, and not take a subscriber from the Cynosure. God can and will take care of his own: and the Christian anti-secret people will not see a paper die which seeks to enthrone Christ against Satan.

NOTE

that the conventions called are entitled American and Prohibition in all good faith. Not that Americans are expected to come in and attack prohibition, or vice versa, prohibitionists attack the American platform; but, as the American platform includes both, both parties will share in officering the convention, and the advocates of each cause will be welcome to the platform to advocate the cause to which they are primarily attached.

B.

EXTRACTS FROM OFFICIAL MINUTES.

Voted that an American and prohibition convention be called to meet in Washington, Feb. 20th, 1884, at 7:30 P. M. The committee of arrangements chosen were J. P. Stoddard, E. D. Bailey and Milton Ford.

Voted that an American and prohibition convention be called to meet in Northampton, Mass., about April 1st.

Voted that Pres. J. Blanchard be appointed to continue his correspondence with New England people concerning the proposed convention, and to visit New England to complete arrangements for the meeting at such time as he may deem best.

Voted that an American and prohibition convention be called for the central States, and that J. P. Stoddard be appointed to arrange for this convention.

The following paper was adopted:

TO COLORED VOTERS.

Resolved, That the colored people of the United States be earnestly and respectfully invited to represent themselves in the conventions above provided for on the following grounds, to wit:

1. The colored people of the United States generally believe in Christ, who "spake nothing in secret," nor tolerated concealment in his disciples.

2. No other people on earth have suffered such cruelty and outrage from secret lodges as they.

3. The robes, masks and disguises of the Ku-Klux, Golden Circle, White Leagues and night-raiders, have been kept in the lodge-room closets of the South.

4. Colored churches of all denominations are depleted, and their ministers starved by the taxation of the secret orders, which are led generally by religious men.

5. Secret lodges devour the earnings and pinch or starve the families of American laborers, both white and colored.

In Washington city almost all laborers belong to secret orders. These lodges promise them partiality and favoritism, help while living and salvation at their funerals, but where all belong to secret orders, favoritism is impossible, as the lodge cannot be partial to one set without robbing another. Thus families and churches, are starved by a swindling promise of favoritism, not possible to be kept; and nobody is profited but a few leaders who make Masonry their trade.

6. Finally, we ask the entire colored population to join us because we were original Abolitionists; and because we have put a plank into the American platform, insisting on the Civil Rights of our colored people against all decision of courts, unreasonable and cruel popular prejudices, and Ku-Klux outrages.

E. D. BAILEY, Sec'y.

HAPPY NEW YEAR!

Yes, dear reader, happy New Year! for the bright sun continues to shine on the just and the unjust; the loving Father defers the judgment not willing that any should perish but that all might come to repentance and live; the risen Saviour stands at the right hand of the Father pleading for us. Yes, truly, a happy New Year to every one whose sins are forgiven, whose heart is cleansed and whose name is written in the Lamb's Book of Life.

Of what avail to wish those a happy New Year who are determined to go on in sin and rebellion against God, for the Bible says, (Prov. 3: 33): "The curse of the Lord is in the house of the wicked," and (Ps. 146: 9) "The way of the wicked he turneth upside down." Who can bless the man whom God curses? So, dear reader, be not amused with empty words. Look not for triumph in a war with God. Hope not for peace while you persist in sin. Be wise now, in this added day of your probation. Lay hold on eternal life through Jesus Christ who hath "tasted death for every man"—for you. (Heb. 2: 9). Then the Holy Spirit shall cleanse your heart from all sin, (1 Pet. 1: 2; and 1 John 1: 7), and then whatever may betide you on your journey, happy are ye in time and eternity. (1 Pet. 3: 14; and 2 Pet. 1:11).

MORGAN RELICS.

THAT SPOON.

Among the mementoes of interest that have been preserved from the Morgan times is an old-fashioned spoon, of solid silver, having Mrs. Morgan's initials on the handle. Mr. and Mrs. Morgan once boarded with Peter Tower, Sr., who died a year ago last March. In settlement Mr. Tower received a set of silver spoons. They were used commonly and disappeared one by one until a single spoon was left. Mr. George Tower has this in his possession and proposes to keep it as a memento. I should prize it highly, but can scarcely expect its possessor to relinquish so rare and valuable a family memento. I was glad to handle even for a brief time a relic which had done service in this now noted family.

THAT WEIGHT.

Dr. Jamison, who was a Royal Arch Mason and conversant with Morgan's taking off, when in the agonies of despair just before his death told his wife that the Masons took a 64-pound stone weight from hay-scales in Canada which they tied to Morgan when he was thrown from the boat into the Niagara river. Mrs. Jamison made this statement to Father West, from whom I received it in Lewiston. This is undoubtedly the weight fished up by Peter Tower and now in Bro. P. D. Miller's possession.

There is a difference of twenty pounds weight in the two statements, but this might readily occur either in Mrs. Jamison's or Father West's recollection, but the fact that such a weight was procured and used for that purpose is too material to be forgotten, and a man dying of remorse and grief for the part he had taken in the murder of Morgan would never be guilty of fabricating such a statement. I have no doubt but we have the very weight that sunk Morgan's body to the bottom of Niagara river and held it there until loosened by the grappling hooks, and that the body thus freed floated up at the mouth of Oak Orchard Creek, and after the most searching examination delivered to Mrs. Morgan and buried near where the monument stands in Batavia. J. P. S.

—In addition to what is elsewhere in this number said so well and feelingly of the late revered and loved Moses Pettengill, the friends of the National Association will be glad to know that this body is named in a residuary legacy which may bring a considerable sum to the aid of our reform.

—"How Masonry Works" in Europe, and, if its secret counsels were uncovered, how it would work also in this country, is revealed in the remarkable article of M. Claudio Jannet in this number of the Cynosure. Developments like this demand the attention of every friend of American common schools. Less direct but no less effectual agencies for the lodge with us are the juvenile temperance societies connected with the Good Templars and Temples of Honor. Let us beware of them. They are in a sense more dangerous than Freemasonry.

—John F. Burrill, late Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Illinois Freemasonry, was caught stealing—not from freemen, but from the Grand Lodge—hence the sequel. He was lately seen by a Chicago reporter in the States prison at Chester making shoes for the great Peoria boot and shoe firm of which Moses Pettengill was the head.

—The Courier of Brussels, Belgium, says that Prof. Jannet, of Paris, is "one of the first economists of our times," and is "very much occupied with the workings" of the secret lodges of Europe. The great work of P. Deschamps which he has revised and continued to the present is said by the Courier to be "one of the most complete that has appeared on the subject. One cannot study it too much."

—Bro. Van Alstine, of this city, tells the following good story: Not long before the Morgan tragedy in 1826 a young man named George Mercer, in Ames, New York, was initiated into the Masonic lodge. He was out of money, but the Hiramites, anxious to secure him, agreed to take his note for the usual fees. The note was given and the candidate was put through the three degrees. The note becoming due payment was demanded, but Mercer refused. The lodge entered suit but Mercer plead that no value had been received, and the Freemasons with much chagrin were obliged to withdraw the suit, fearing to carry it further lest their precious secrets be published.

A SILENT BUT POWERFUL WITNESS.

We all feel greatly impressed with the importance of prayer to the Master of the vineyard to send forth laborers into his vineyard. From Maine to Oregon there is a great field. The laborers are few.

The readers of the Cynosure have noticed a few insertions of an article headed "Freemasonry at a Glance," which gave directions how to have an exposition of the three first Masonic degrees in every village at a small expense. The offer was limited to January 1st, but from Canada and the Pacific slope, as well as from many other places, orders have come for these pamphlets. This fact testifies so strongly that the judgment of the people is that this kind of a messenger is better than no lecturer, that the offer is now continued, only making it better than before, by putting in with copies of the "Glances" an equal number of the N. C. A. tracts, so that as each pamphlet gives an exposition of the ceremonies the tract will give an exposition of the character of those ceremonies. The "Glance" has also been illustrated with a cut of the Morgan monument, together with inscriptions on the monument.

A NEW AND VALUABLE ARRANGEMENT

provided for the Cynosure readers during the year 1884, is a special exposition of the Bible lesson for Sabbath schools, by

THE AUTHOR OF "HOLDEN WITH CORDS."

This talented writer has consented to contribute during the year a weekly application of the international lessons, and bring the Scripture truth to bear upon our reform principles. Parents and Sabbath school teachers will appreciate this valuable assistance in their work of instruction. If the tide of lodgery is stopped the streams that feed it must be turned into other channels. This is a grand work to be done in home and Sabbath-school instruction—teach the children to be Christ-like, open-hearted, undeceptive, and they will never swear to vain secrets in the lodge. The Cynosure lesson exposition with God's blessing will be an invaluable assistance in thousands of homes during the coming year. Let every reader by all means in their power extend its influence and circulation

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

JONATHAN BLANCHARD,
OF ILLINOIS.

For Vice President,

JOHN A. CONANT,
OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

NOTE.—In March, 1883, Pres. J. Blanchard resigned the nomination above, subject to the action of the next National Convention of the American party.

WHY SHOULD PROHIBITIONISTS NOMINATE a candidate separate from the American party? Or why not the two nominate the same man? Senator Pomeroy when a young Free-soil member of the Massachusetts Legislature carried a vote against the opposition of Hon. Wm. Claflin, afterward governor, to receive Dr. Lyman Beecher at the head of a procession of New England ministers, with a large temperance petition. Mr. Claflin was opposed to the reception for fear of losing Free-soil liquor-votes. Pomeroy has never swerved since.

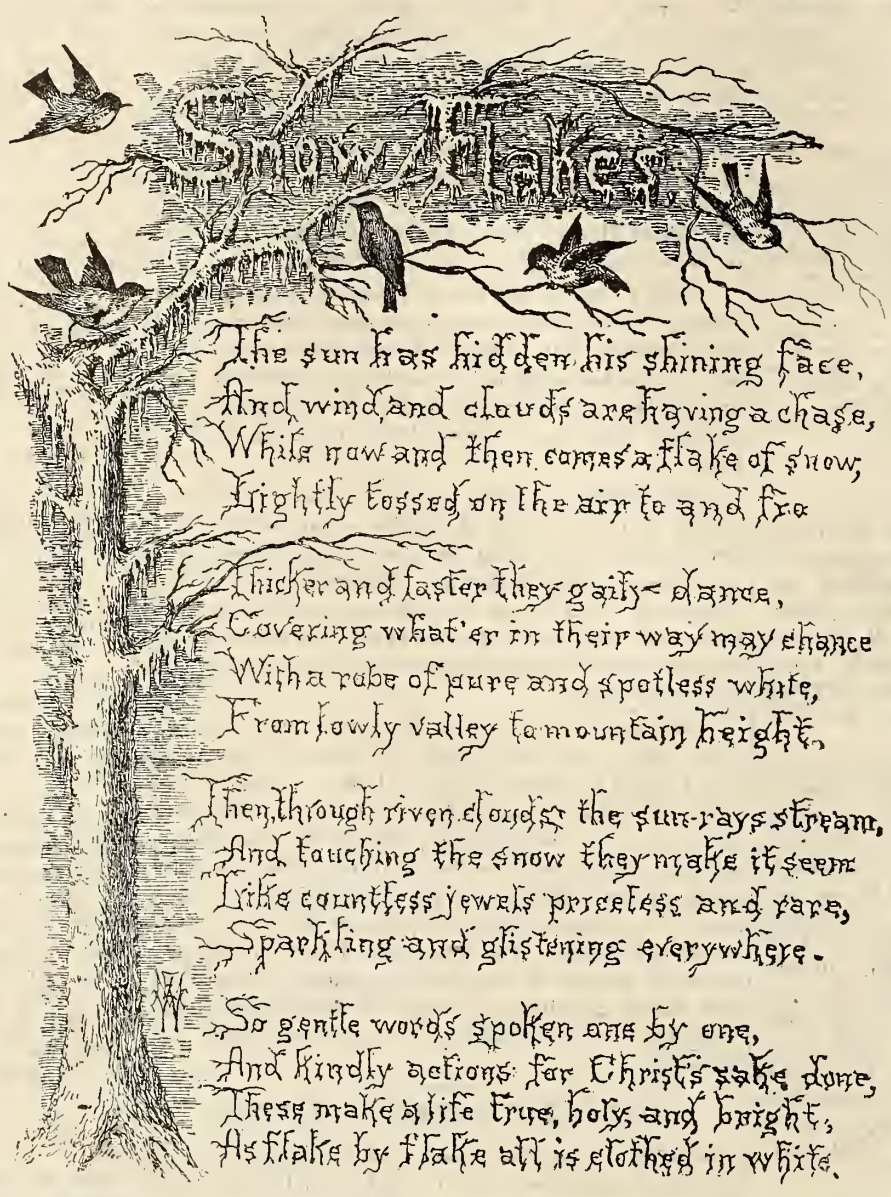
AN AMERICAN PARTY IN EUROPE.

There is a political party in Bulgaria called the "American Party," from the fact that its principal leaders are young men who have been educated by American missionaries. Their ideas are, almost as a matter of course, liberal, and opposed to those of the ruling powers, which are in accord with those of Russia. A division of the people on this question of governmental policy has resulted, and much agitation is going forward. Bulgaria was a Turkish province until after the last Russian war, when as a favorite stroke of policy on the part of the English Liberals, it was erected by the "Great Powers" into an independent state. Its territorial limits and its population are a little less than those of Illinois. The people are of Slav origin, and are nominally members of the Greek church. This causes the sympathies of the governing class to be with Russia in religious as well as political matters. But, through the influence already alluded to, the people appear to be imbibing American ideas, and an overthrow of the present ruling powers is one of the possibilities of the near future. The country may now be regarded as little more than a Russian province, while nominally independent, though one object of creating it was that it might act as a hindrance to Russian designs upon Constantinople.—Standard.

PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES.—The next Presidential election is likely to be closely contested, and there are good reasons for believing that party attachments are not as strong as they were five years ago. These conditions dictate to parties great care in the selection of candidates, and we take an early occasion to claim for the Christian people of the country respect for their wishes as Christians in the matter of the personal character of candidates. They do not want Presidents who drink and swear and shun the house of God on Sunday. If there are candidates who do such things, they would better be dropped at once. Christian people are not going to prescribe that a President shall belong to any particular church, or to any church at all; but they are more and more disposed to insist that the President shall be decent in speech and sober in his habits, and that he shall respect the Christian Sabbath. Another danger to which parties are more and more exposed is the temptation to spend large sums of money to secure success. We respectfully remind their leaders that a large number of voters have grown to be suspicious of these increasing political expenditures. —Christian Advocate.

THE HOME.

A NEW YEAR'S APPEAL TO THE UNCONVERTED.



REV. GEO. C. NEEDHAM.

A few years ago, a writer was informed, by one who professed to know the circumstances, of the following sorrowful and startling event: A lady who moved in the higher circles of society was induced to attend one evening what is called "revival preaching." She was convinced of sin by the Word of God, and became much alarmed about her soul. Deep convictions followed. She struggled hard, but could not get rid of them. She thought of her many engagements, and the difficulties of her position in life. Conscience said, "Decide at once for Christ." The tempter said, "Not now, but by-and-by—such a step should not be taken hastily." In this state of perplexity and distress, she retired to her bedroom. But here the curtain drops—the scene closes to mortal view. As she did not appear the following morning, or answer to any call, her room was entered. But oh! what a sight to the family! The struggle was over—the stillness of death reigned. There the body lay cold and lifeless; but—the soul—where now? It was gone—gone to its eternal place. All was changed—changed suddenly—changed forever. Her diary lay open upon the table. Two entries had been made the previous evening. They were to this effect: 1. "I am determined, this day six months, to give up the world and become a Christian." But, as if the conflict in the soul had deepened, and conscience crying still louder, "Be decided now for Christ;" she made a second entry. 2. "This day month I am determined to be done with the world and follow Christ." Beyond this entry we cannot follow her. God took the matter out of her hands. All her intentions, however good, were vain. No one on earth can tell what may have passed between her soul and God during that solemn night. It is but fair to infer from these two entries that she passed through deep exercise, if not real agony of soul. Oh! what a night! It was the dark shadow of a night of endless woe, or the breaking morn of endless day. What a night for heaven—what a night for hell—what a night for her! Who is to gain the victory? Christ or Satan—the truth or a lie? Solemn thought! Eternal happiness or eternal misery quiver in the balance. But it is comforting to know that one look of faith to the blessed Saviour would settle all for heaven and the blessedness of her soul forever.

Unconverted reader, I appeal to you. As I write, my soul is filled with trembling for those who sport upon the brink of unutterable woe. How shall you escape if you neglect your soul's salvation? If you are unsaved to-day, your neglect is either willful or unintentional. If willful, you are verily guilty. If unintentional, you are no less guilty, for you have been warned, entreated and pleaded with, to flee from coming wrath. Are you thoughtless, my reader? What! thoughtless! and the cry gone forth: "A sword, a sword is sharpened and also furbished; it is sharpened to make a sore slaughter; it is furbished that it may glitter; should we then make mirth? Should we then be thoughtless? Do you not know that you are gliding on to the whirlpool, nay, more, you are already on the verge of its outer circle; soon, soon you will be borne round, and round, and round, each revolution drawing you nearer to its awful vortex. Thoughtlessness is vanity, carelessness is a crime—a crime against God, who formed you for his glory; a crime against yourself, for thus you commit moral suicide. Are you procrastinating, like the above mentioned lady, saying, "Not to day"? Remember every time you say so, you re-echo the devil's suggestion—that enemy of all good. When Pharoah was urged by Moses to let the children of Israel go, he said, "To-morrow." The devil, a more cruel oppressor than Egypt's king, whispers in your ear—"To-morrow." Oh! man, heed him not; Oh! woman, beware. Oh! child, the Holy Ghost saith—"TO-DAY." "To-day, if ye will hear my voice, harden not your hearts." ponder your footsteps; remember Christ is for you to-day; his blood avails to-day. Take another step without him, live another hour unsaved, sleep another night the slave of Satan, and you do so at your peril. Friend, do not hazard your eternal safety for a darling lust, a right-eye sin, a misnamed pleasure. Now is the accepted time. Now, JUST NOW.

"As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have evsrlasting life." Look, then, to Jesus Christ now. Trust him to-duy.—Watchman.

Remember now thy Creator.

A LITTLE BEHINDHAND.

OR A GOOD RESOLUTION FOR THE NEW YEAR.

"Grandpa, when does a man have three hands?"

This question was put by a child to her grandfather, in the midst of the family circle on Christmas evening. They were all merry with innocent fun and chit-chat. Giving and guessing riddles was one of the entertaining pastimes of the hour. The grandfather repeated the child's question slowly, and after thinking a moment, he said, "I give it up." The bright child in great glee cried out, "A man has three hands when he has a right hand and left hand and gets a little behindhand."

All hands laughed heartily at grandfather's failure to guess, and he looked so grave over it, they laughed the more merrily.

But the "head of the house" did not seem to join very heartily in the amusement, and they rallied him by asking if it was not a fair conundrum.

"Certainly, not only fair but excellent; the play on the word is very neat, but it has set me thinking of what comes of getting a little behindhand, and some other time, when you want to hear it, I will give you a little sermon or lecture on the subject."

"Now, now—let us have it now!" they all exclaimed; but he knew the children too well for that, and saying that his sermon would keep, he told them to go on with the riddles and stories.

The next Sabbath evening, when they were all in the parlor, the bright little girl, who had puzzled her grandfather with the conundrum, looked up from the book she was reading, and said, with a smile:

"Grandpa, are you not getting a little behindhand with that sermon you promised us?"

"You shall have it now, if you wish;" and all sat still and attentive while the good man began:

"To-morrow will be the first day of the new year, and a good time to take a fresh start. To begin well is half the doing whatever it is. The habit of being on time, never a minute behind, is one of the greatest helps to success in life. While on the other hand, to get into the way of delaying, keeping others waiting, not being prompt, punctual and ready, is the secret cause of failure in ten thousand cases, many of which I have seen in the course of my life. We notice it in children. What you are in the morning, you will be at noon, and probably at night, 'The child is father of the man,' 'just as the twig is bent,' etc. The family meet in the morning for worship and breakfast; one child is late. She is usually late, the same one. She was behindhand in getting herself ready; the rest waited for her a few moments and then went on without her, and presently she came, disturbing all and making herself disagreeable and them uncomfortable. The boy with such a disposition is late at school, not prepared with his lessons, always just a little behindhand in everything. Perhaps he goes to college, or into business, trade or profession, and if he is dependent on his own exertions he makes a failure in everything.

"Forty years ago I knew two smart boys, helpers in a grocery store. They were brothers. They seemed to be made of steel springs, so quick, prompt and decisive were they in filling every order. They were poor boys, apprentices then. But they worked as if the concern was heir own, and success depended on their energy, push and faithfulness. Now they live on one of the fashionable avenues of New York in their own large mansions, retired from the grocery business, in which they made their fortunes. Holding important trusts they are useful and respected citizens and Christians. They owe their success solely, under God, to their own promptness in performing every promise, in being always ahead rather than behind time. And there are mechanics and tradesmen with whom I once had dealings and now have deserted, because they never would fulfill an order in season, would not send a thing home to me when they promised, and invariably kept me waiting whatever might be my distress to be served. This vice runs in the blood sometimes, and whole families are distinguished by taking it easy, 'time enough yet,' being their motto and rule. They drop behind in their race of life. They would be run over if some one did not pick them up and help them on. Half the world has this work to do, besides doing its own. In the absence of positive crime, this habit of taking it easy causes the poverty and failure of the greater part of the human family. With the same chances, with equal wealth and wit, in the same field, one man succeeds and another makes a dead failure. And why? Because one took time by the forelock, was ever prompt, and therefore prosperous. The other was always a little behindhand, and by-and-by so far behindhand as to be counted out as of no account.

"When you are old enough yourselves to meet and move with men and women in business and good works or ife, you will soon find some who are late at the appointed time, who come bustling in, ten or fifteen minutes after the hour saying 'I had no idea it was late,' my watch never deceived me before,' 'I am very sorry to keep you waiting." All such managers are poor timber to make Boards of. If they had the grace of resignation, they would make room for somebody not always a little behindhand.

"The train starts at nine in the morning, and they are two minutes late and are left. The boat goes at five, and they arrive in time to be laughed at by the passengers who see them wiping the perspiration from their heated brows. I knew a Georgia preacher who was holding forth in an asylum to a congregation of the insane. He described a man on a scaffold about to be hung, while in the distance comes a messenger on horseback bringing a pardon. But the hour of fate was just at hand: a minute or two and it would be too late. The preacher drew out the agony by talking and talking, till one of his crazed hearers cried, 'can't you hurry up a little? They'll hang that man if you don't.' And when I see people dilly-dallying, wasting precious time in doing nothing, I long to tell them to hurry up, for life, soul, salvation may be lost if they are only a little behindhand. It is so in every relation, calling and duty of life. It is the one principle on which the prize of success in this world depends, and immortal glory beyond. Now is the accepted time. To-day, if you will hear it, is the day of salvation. You may as well be a year, or a hundred years, or a whole eternity too late, as to be only a little behindhand. When once the Master of the house has shut the door, you may knock long and loud, and with a great and exceeding bitter cry, may call to him, Lord, Lord, open unto me; I am only a few minutes late: I heard the door close as I came to the threshold: O Master, Lord open and let me in.' And he from within will answer, 'Depart; I never knew you.'

"You were never one of his. When he called, you were not ready. When he warned, you did not heed. When he entreated, you did not yield. When he shut the door, you were a little behindhand. And, as it was with them when the flood came, and in the cities of the plain, when the rain of fire descended, so will it be with you who put off and put off until a convenient season the work of to-day.

"There, children dear, you have the sermon I promised. The new year begins to-morrow, and the resolution

I want you to make is this, 'With God's good hlep, for which I will daily pray, I will always be on hand, at the moment, ready for every duty, and will do with my might what I am called to do.'"

While the sermon was in progress, the child who gave the conundrum had quietly climbed into her grandfather's lap. She was one of the irrepressible sort of children, and could hardly wait for him to make an end, when she exclaimed, "Grandpa, it's just the other way, isn't it. If a man never gets a little behindhand, he has three hands or four, and does more work and better than the lazy fellow who is always behindhand."

"That's so," said the old man, "and if you had said that at the beginning, you might have spared the sermon."

"Yes," said John, the oldest boy, "but that would have been a great loss to us, and for one I promise not to be a little behindhand, if I can help it, as long as I live."

"Good night all," said the grandfather. "God bless you all with a happy New Year."

"Happy New Year to you grandpa," they cried in chorus, and went off to bed.—N. Y. Observer.

DON'T CRY, JOHNNIE.

"Never mind, Johnnie, don't cry," said brave little Bessie, who with her two years more of age and experience than her brother, had also a more courageous spirit when in trouble.

"Never mind; we'll soon be home and then you can dry yourself."

But this made Johnnie cry the harder, for it reminded him of his mother's charge not to go upon the ice. New Year's day had come, and yet the little stream was not frozen over firmly, and the careful mother knew the danger of wet feet and clothes. Johnnie was so full of play with his school boy friends that his mother's voice was almost forgotten, and the smooth ice was very tempting to the ready feet which almost ached for a slide.

"I don't believe it will break; do you, Louis?" said Johnnie, to a playmate; and he stepped cautiously upon the treacherous, glaring edge of the frozen stream.

"There! Don't it hold me? said the little boy, with a tone of triumph. Another step made him bolder and so did the next; but then came a warning crack and poor Johnnie turned, but too late to escape a bad wetting.

"Don't cry, Johnnie," cried his sister running to his help, and then thinking of mother's command she said wisely, "We must tell mother all about it, though; and she will fix you all right."

Her calm and soothing words cheered her brother, and his sobbing soon ceased.

Years afterward, when a young man entering business life, and finding new and severe trials of his honesty and his faith in God, Johnnie often found the advice of his good sister like a shield to guard him from evil.

Many little boys who read the Cynosure this New Year's have blessed sisters like Johnnie. Do they love them dearly and strive to make them happy? If so, they will find in after years how great a treasure God has given them in a true-hearted, loving sister.

TO THE OLD YEAR.

Farewell, Old Year! a last, a long farewell!
Who shall live out the next no tongue can tell;
For, wrapped in darkness, to but One alone
Is the dim pathway in the future known,
Then, whilst we may live, may each with constant care
For higher, nobler, life prepare;
So that when time's perplexities are o'er
Our souls may dwell with God forevermore.

GOLDEN RULES FOR BOYS AND GIRLS.

1. Shut every door after you, and without slamming it.
2. Never shout, jump or run in the house.
3. Never call to persons upstairs or in the next room; if you wish to speak to them, go quietly where they are.
4. Always speak kindly and politely to the servants if you would have them do the same to you.
5. When told to do or not do a thing by either parent; never ask why you should or should not do it.
6. Tell of your own faults and misdoings, not those of your brothers and sisters.
7. Carefully clean the mud or snow off your boots before entering the house.
8. Be prompt at every meal hour.
9. Never sit down at the table, or in the parlor, with dirty hands or tumbled hair.
10. Never interrupt any conversation, but wait patiently your turn to speak.
11. Never reserve your good manners for company, but be equally polite at home and abroad.

Let your first, last and best friend be your mother.—Sel.

PLEASURE RIDING IN MEXICO.

BY H. M. BISSELL, MISSIONARY IN GUADALAJARA.

One popular amusement here is a ride in an ox cart. It is usual for large numbers of people to visit certain churches at given times, particularly on the day of some saint specially honored in such and such churches. Churches in villages, or pueblos, some miles distant are visited from this city. Holiday pleasure and religious exercises can be combined. On a street leading out toward such a church, on the feast days, you will find numbers of these carts—the very same that are loaded with all sorts of burdens at other times—drawn now by a single yoke of cattle, and covered with blankets, the bottom with a rush-mat; the covering above may also be mats. They do not seem to be reserved for the very poor. They are often filled by well dressed people who can provide themselves with rugs, and who seem to enjoy the sport. Nor are these carts thus used for these religious jaunts only. They afford one way of travel from place to place. Here in the city one sometimes sees one of them drawn up before a residence for a family party to go on board. Sometimes a party of girls takes possession. I am not sure whether parties of both girls and boys go out in this way, but I rather think they do. At certain times these parties seem to be very popular, and as they go about the streets, perhaps returning home in the evening, they have a pleasant custom of singing. Some of these songs are tiresome repetitions, and others are quite pleasing. You may laugh at my oxen [a pen drawing of oxen and cart accompanies this letter.—ED.] as much as you like but do not blame them for their looks—that is my fault. The driver, with his cruel goad, is on the "off side;" unless in a hard pull, when he is right in front of them, walking backward. These wheels of wood never lose a tire, for they have none. The yoke is bound to the horns. A horn filled with grease for the wheels hangs in front. Some use chains, but many have, instead, a twisted thong of ox-hide, with the hair on!

DON'T CRY, JOHNNIE.

BEAVERS COASTING.

Two boys who live in the State of Iowa once concluded to see what beavers did on moonlight nights. Therefore, they crept through the snow just about midnight, and went to the home of the beavers. At the dam which the beavers had built the moon was reflected from the ice with a great glare. To their great surprise the boys saw the beavers coasting down a long slide from the top of the dam to the ice below. It was fine sport. The old beavers gave the young ones rides on their broad, flat tails, all sliding down very rapidly. Just then one of the boys sneezed, when the beavers disappeared like a flash.

THE OHIO CRUSADE.

The beginning of the wonderful movement of ten years ago in Hillsboro, Ohio, is told thus in the Union Signal by Mrs. E. J. Thompson, who led the band of praying women on that memorable day. Dr. Lewis lectured on the evening before:

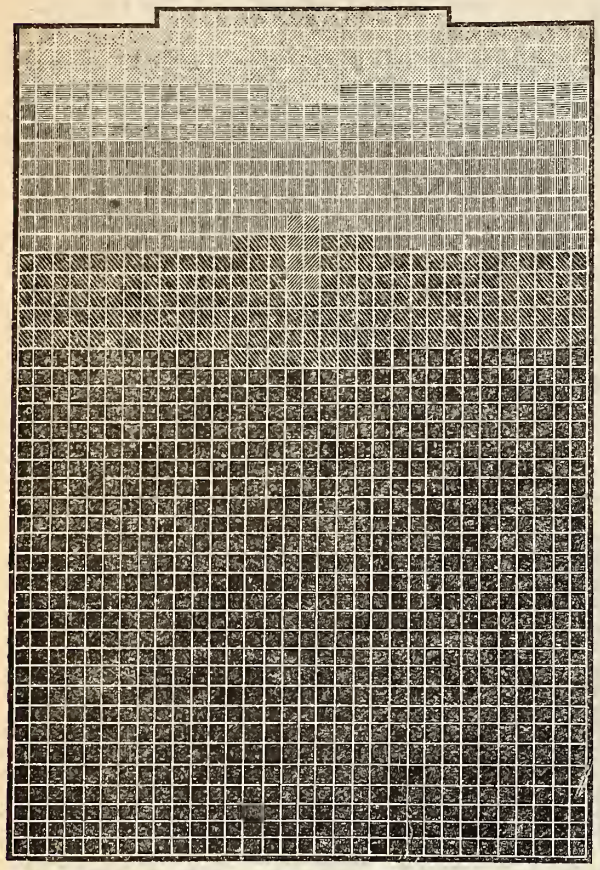
"I did not hear Dio Lewis lecture (although he was our guest), because of home cares that required my presence, but my son, a youth of sixteen, was there, and he came to me on his return home, and in a most excited manner related the thrilling incidents of the evening.

"'And now, mother,' said the boy, 'they have got you into business, for you are on a committee to do some work at the Presbyterian church in the morning at nine o'clock, and then the ladies want you to go out with them to the saloons.'

"'My husband, who had returned from Adams county court that evening and was very tired, seemed asleep as he rested upon the couch, while my son in an undertone had given me all the above facts; but as the last sentence was uttered, he raised himself up upon his elbow and said 'What tom-foolery is all that?' My son slipped out of the room quietly, and I betook myself to the task of consoling my husband with the promise that I should not be led into any foolish act by Dio Lewis or any association of human beings. But after he had relaxed into a milder mood, continuing to call the whole plan, as he understood it, 'tom-foolery,' I ventured to remind him that the men had been in the 'tom-foolery' business a long time, and suggested that it might be 'God's will' that the women should now take their part. (After this he fell asleep quietly, and I resumed my Bible reading.) Nothing further was said upon the subject that had created such interest the night before until after breakfast, when we gathered in the 'family room.' First, my son approached me and gently placing his hand upon my shoulder, in a subdued tone said, 'Mother are you going to the church, this morning?' As I hesitated, and doubtless showed in my countenance the burden upon my spirit, he emphatically said, 'But, my dear mother, you know you have to go.' Then my daughter, who was sitting on a stool by my side, leaning over in a most tender manner; and looking up in my face, said, 'Don't you think you will go?' All this time my husband had been walking the floor, uttering not a word. He stopped, and placing his hand upon the family Bible that lay upon my work-table, he said emphatically, 'Children, you know where your mother goes to settle all vexed questions. Let us leave her alone,' withdrawing as he spoke, and the dear children following him. I turned the key, and was in the act of kneeling before God and his 'holy word' to see what would be sent me, when I heard a gentle tap at my door. Upon opening it, I saw my dear daughter, with her little Bible opened, and the tears coursing down her young cheeks, as she said, 'I opened to this, mother. It must be for you.' She immediately left the room, and I sat down to read the wonderful message of the great 'I Am' contained in the 146th Psalm.

"No longer doubting, I at once repaired to the Presbyterian church where quite a large assembly of earnest people had gathered.

'Appeals were drawn up to druggists, saloon-keepers, and hotel proprietors. Then the Presbyterian minister (Dr. McSurely), who had up to this time occupied the chair, called upon the chairman-elect to come forward to the 'post of honor,' but your bumble servant could not; her limbs refused to bear her. So Dr. McSurely remarked, and he looked around upon the gentlemen: 'Brethren, I see that the ladies will do nothing while we remain; let us adjourn, leaving this new work with God and the women.'



"As the last man closed the door after him, strength before unknown came to me, and without any hesitation or consultation I walked forward to the minister's table, took the large Bible; and opening it, explained the incidents of the morning; then read and briefly as my tears would allow, commented upon its new meaning to me. I then called upon Mrs. McDowell to lead in prayer, and such a prayer! It seemed as though an angel had brought down 'live coals' from off the altar and touched her lips—she who had never before heard her own voice in prayer!

"As we rose from our knees, for there were none sitting on that morning, I asked Mrs. Cowden, our M. E. minister's wife, to start the good old hymn, 'Give to the winds thy fears' to a familiar tune, ("St, Thomas,") and turning to the dear women, I said: 'As we all join in singing this hymn, let us form in line, two and two, the small women in front, leaving the tall ones to bring up the rear, and let us at once proceed to our sacred mission, trusting alone is the God of Jacob.' It was all done in less time than it takes to write about it; every heart was throbbing, and every woman's countenance betrayed her solemn realization of the fact that she was 'going about her father's business.'"

THE FIELD IS THE WORLD.

The Actual and Relative Numbers of Mankind, According to their Religion.

Each square represents 1,000,000 souls.

Pagans. Mohammedans. Jews. Roman Catholics. Greek Church. Protestant.

This cut will at once be remembered by all who attended the late Christian Convention held at Farwell Hall, Chicago, as a fac simile of the large chart which made its powerful appeal for foreign missions during that great meeting. It tells its own story.

Protestants	116,000,000
Greek church	84,000,000
Roman Catholics	190,000,000
Jews	8,000,000
Mohammedans	170,000,000
Pagans	856,000,000

"Ask of me and I will give thee the heathen for an inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession."

Joseph Cook says: "On the plan of three ordained missionaries in the foreign field, and one to one thousand in the home field, the whole world might be brought to a knowledge of Christianity within fifty years."

It is gathered from our missionary periodicals that nine-tenths of the contributions to foreign missions are given by one-tenth of the church membership, while only one-half of the membership give anything. The average amount per member is fifty cents per annum—only the seventh part of a cent per day for the conversion of a thousand millions of heathen! Ninety-eight per cent. of the church's contributions for religious purposes, are spent at home, while only two per cent. is applied to the foreign mission field. There are 75,000 ministers in the United States, or one to about every 600 persons, while there is only one allotted to half a million in heathen lands. There are 1,500 counties in China without a single missionary.

ENCOURAGEMENTS.

The whole world is now open to the reception of the Gospel.

The Bible is printed in 250 languages and dialects.

There are 150,000,000 copies in circulation.

The number of missionary societies is ten-fold what it was eighty years ago.

The number of converts is nearly fifty-fold.

"Women's Work for Woman" has been given "an open door" in the homes and hearts of heathenism which "no man can shut."

The increased facilities for inter-communication.

The diffusion of the English language.

Wonderful revivals, with Pentecostal power, are common in heathen lands.

The increase in membership in heathen lands is thirty times greater than at home in proportion to the number of ministers employed, although the tests of discipleship are of the most trying nature.

But above all other encouragements are the precious promises of God: "Ye that are the Lord's remembrancers keep not silence and give him no rest till he make Jerusalem a praise in the earth." Isa. 62:6, 7.

The Word, the Work and the World says: "Our great desire is to awaken the people of God to the unparalleled opportunities of our own age, and the need of a movement more deep and wide, more earnest and self-denying, more bold and aggressive than anything that has yet been attempted, to reach the neglected at home and evangelize the mighty generations abroad—the one thousand million souls who are dying in Christless despair at the rate of 100,000 a day."

—The revival in Japan is still going on. At Okayama thirteen applied for admission to Mr. Cary's (Congregational) church, on the first Sunday in October.

—The Turkish Bureau of Censorship has lately seized a number of copies of the Missionary Herald, and condemned them as "a bad book of which every number has something about Turkey."

—The English missionaries in Madagascar heaped coals of fire on the Jesuits by interfering in their behalf and saving them from being murdered by the natives. They have gratefully acknowledged the service.

—The London Missionary Society has decided to address a fraternal letter to the Reformed Dutch church of Transvaal, South Africa, to enlist, if possible, greater Christian sympathy and effort in behalf of the native tribes.

—In North China the missionaries rejoice in the increasing confidence and respect of the people. The schools and the different forms of medical work are at present the most successful means of awakening attention to the Gospel.

—In the Maratha Mission, India, a remarkable advance is reported in the direction of self support, the sixteen pastors being wholly paid from native funds. While there is but one more ordained missionaries than in 1873, the number of native helpers has increased from 41 to 83, and the church membership from 629 to 1,422.

—Mrs. McFarland's work among the Indians of Alaska is succeeding. The number of pupils in the school increased last year and many of them have become Christians. One of the oldest girls married a Christian Indian, and both are engaged in faithful missionary service in Upper Chilcat. Others of the girls are preparing to enter upon mission work.

—Only let an intelligent Christian spirit once take hold and possess the millions of China, and you shall secure a permanent investment of the highest good for all mankind; for although slower and less docile than the Japanese, harder to win than the soft islander of the Pacific, and less sensitive and responsive than the African, the Chinese have vastly more stability than any of these. Their endurance of all climates, ranging from the icebergs of the north to the most malarious countries of the tropics, is superior to that of any other race of men. If the hard work of this world were to be farmed out to the lowest pay, it seems likely that the Chinese would take the contract.—London Missionary Herald.

—A letter from India says that the past year has been the most prosperous in the history of the United Presbyterian Mission in that country. The increase of membership has been over 50 per cent. More than 200 have been baptized in the district of Sealkot alone.

—Prof. Hodge, in an article on "Morality and Religion" in the North American Review, says: "Never before has Christianity, nominal and real, advanced as during the present century. The best approximate estimates give as the whole number of nominal Christians on earth at the end of the first century, 500,000; at the end of the seventh century, 25,000,000; at the end of the fourteenth century, 80,000,000; at the end of the seventeenth century, 155,000,000; at the end of the eighteenth century, 200,000,000; and in 1880, 410,000,000."

—Rev. Dr. Mackay writes from Yamsui, Formosa: "I regard this year, 1883, an era in the history of this mission. After years of toil on the east coast, the Lord has at length opened a large, wide door for his own blessed Gospel. I sent a telegram some time ago to say that one thousand were asking Christian instruction. I state below the mark, now, when I declare that upwards of two thousand have thrown their idols away and wish to follow the Lord of Hosts."

—From Ongole, India, Dr. Clough writes, that while the Malas and Madigas have been converted by the thousand, heretofore not many caste people have been baptized. The time is near, he thinks, when the Sudras will come in crowds. Many, he believes, are converted men now, and will break away from caste and Hinduism in the near future. He reports about sixteen hundred baptisms thus far this year, One hundred and twenty-three were baptized at the quarterly meeting in July, and sixty-five since then. "All branches of our missionary work," he adds. "were never more prosperous and encouraging."

—The Nonconformist and Independent says that the Paris Signal devotes a conspicuous article to the efforts put forth in France for evangelization through the post. In order to assist in this work, the English Monthly Tract Society, of Bridge street Blackfriars, London, has prepared six tracts, of which three thousand copies will be sent each month, to senators, deputies, magistrates, professors, and other public personages who are by their very position without the ordinary circles of evangelization. After the same example, a copy of the Gospel of Matthew, in Breton, has been sent to every magistrate, mayor, and schoolmaster in Brittany, to be followed by the other Gospels. The books themselves have been supplied by the Trinitarian Bible Society, and the postage paid by an English gentleman.

—Rev. H. Loomis writes to the Evangelist: "Intelligence has just been received that three Protestant Christians from China have recently presented the king of Corea with a copy of the New Testament. These men were distinguished scholars, and obtained an audience with the king by the assistance of the Chinese admiral. The king was very much perplexed, as he did not dare to decline the gift lest it should make trouble with China, and if he retained it there would be trouble from his own people. He asked the advice of his ministers and there was a strong division among them. The head of foreign affairs, named Kin-hong-chip, was a fierce opponent of Christianity, and seizing the New Testament tore it in pieces, saying, 'The men who have given this are violators of our law, and should be sent from the country.' But this opinion is not shared by others, and a violent discussion has arisen. Some are in favor of entire freedom, and it is not known how the matter will end.

—The Presbyterian Observer, speaking of "Women's Gifts to the Heathen," says: "We are just a little proud to see the Presbyterian women stand first among the Christian denominations of the United States, who during the past year gave $600,000 to Christianize the heathen. Of this amount Presbyterian women gave nearly $200,000, the Baptists $156,000, the Congregationalists $130,000, the Northern Methodists $108,000, the Southern Methodists $25,100, and the Methodist Protestants $1,400. These sums are expressed in round numbers. The exact amount contributed the past year by our Presbyterian Women's Board is $192,720, not far from one-third of the total contributions of the year. This, as against $178,180 last year, is a gain of $14,540.

—The growth of the various missions of the principal societies in India is exceedingly interesting and encouraging. Beginning with Baptists, who were earliest in the field, we find that from 1850 to the present time their converts in all the Baptist societies in England and America, in India, Ceylon and Burmah, have increased from about 30,000 to upwards of 90,000; those of the Basle missions of Germany have multiplied from 1,000 to upwards of 6,000; those of the Wesleyan Methodist missions of England and America from 7,000 to upwards of 12,000; those of the American Board from 3,000 to 13,000; those of the Lutheran church, belonging to five societies, from 4,000 to upwards of 40,000; those of the Presbyterians of Scotland, England, Ireland and America from 900 to 10,000; those of the London Missionary Society from 20,000 to 48,000; and those in connection with the Church of England from 61,000 to 164,000.

CHINESE IN AMERICA.—Rev. C. R. Hager, missionary at Hong Kong, China, writes in the Pacific to the Christians of California urging them to lay aside prejudice and labor for the conversion of the Chinese. He makes these points:

1. America has a population of 115,000 Chinese, of which 75,000 are in California, and about 10,000 in Oregon. All these should be Christianized and brought to love the Lord Jesus Christ.

2. This duty God has imperatively laid at the door of the Christian church, and she cannot excuse her neglect if she refuses to obey his command.

3. It is as easy or easier to convert a Chinaman in America than it is in China.

4. China, especially South China, will be largely affected by the Christianization of the American Chinese.

5. American Chinese are in a critical position, and what is done for them should be done quickly, for every year of waiting increases the difficulty of their being brought to accept the Gospel. In a certain sense they may be said to become spiritually hardened.

He suggests these measures for the evangelization of the Chinese: Increase the number of the Chinese schools; labor among the Chinese in the households; let Christian conversation and actions win them; teach them to read and write. He is confident that a great blessing both to America and China will result from faithful effort in this direction.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—Twenty thousand coal miners in the bituminous regions of Westmoreland, Blair, Bedford, Huntington, Center, and Clearfield counties, Pa., are preparing to resist a proposed reduction of wages.

—The bark Mohawk, having a Japanese crew, anchored off New Haven Tuesday last, with all hands frost-bitten. Two men will lose their feet. One sailor was killed by falling from aloft.

—A misplaced switch threw a passenger train on the trestle-work near Sunbury, Pa., Wednesday, the engine, tender, and baggage car plunging to the bottom, and the first coach stopping when half-way over.

—Fort Columbus, in New York Harbor, fired the National salute and the bell in Independence Hall, Philadelphia, was rung a hundred times Monday, Dec. 24th., to commemorate Washington's surrender of his commission as Commander in chief of the army.

—Near Salem, Ind., early Monday morning, last week, the baggage car, a sleeper and two coaches of a L., N. A. and C. train went through a culvert, and the cars taking fire were consumed. Six persons werc killed and ten wounded.

—An avalanche, on the 24th, dashing down the Marshall Basin, in Southwestern Colorado, buried the Mendota mine shaft-house, in which were fourteen men, eight of whom were killed instantly and two wounded. Four others burrowed their way out from the mountain of snow.

—Fifty armed men took three persons of bad reputation from a saloon at McDade, Texas, Monday night, carried them to the out-skirts and hanged them. Tuesday, friends of the lynched men came to McDade, and picked a quarrel, when a fight with shot-guns and revolvers ensued, in whch three men were killed, and one badly wounded. Farther trouble is anticipated.

—While a party was returning to Ouray, Col., bringinging the bodies of the men killed by an avalanche on the 21st, at the Virginia mine, another snow-slide struck the sleds containing the corpses, carrying them 2,000 feet down the mountain, whence they plunged 500 feet over a precipice, where they must remain until spring. The party reached Ouray half dead from exhaustion.

—In the streets of Yazoo, Miss., a party of negroes fired upon a band led by John F. Posey, a white business man, killing Posey and two others and wounding two more. Posey had been insulted by a negro and went ofi to collect his friends. The negro did the same thing, and his band unexpectedly opened fire as soon as the Posey party put in an appearance. The negro leader was killed Tuesday morning while resisting arrest; and the city council, after an investigation, resolved that the conflict was entirely personal, and not the result of race rancor or political difficulties.

—It is stated that France will not begin negotiations for peace in Tonquin until her forces occupy Bac Ninh, and that the French loss of life at Sontay was greater than reported. The Chinese are active in the Red River delta constructing defenses.

—At Carthagena, in the United States of Colombia, Monday, the boilers of the steamer Severn exploded, seven persons being killed.

—An Arabic journal says 3,000 of Hicks Pasha's army escaped annihilation in upper Egypt, and are now encamped at Melbass, while the Governer of Dongola is reported as telegraphing that Hicks Pasha was victorious, and that the Mahdi's followers were deserting him, believing that, as he was defeated, he is not the promised prophet.

—In the riot at Harbor Grace, N. F., Wednesday, two Orangemen and two Catholics were killed, and eight persons mortally and about twenty slightly wounded. Business places and private houses ase closed. Fearful excitement prevails at Carbonear, and men there are parading the street and preparing to march to Harbor Grace.

—Fifty-three men of the steamer Plantyn, which sailed from New York Nov. 11th for Antwerp, have been landed at Oporto, having been rescued from the wreck of their craft. There were sixty-one souls on board, and it is believed the eight persons missing were picked up by another uessel.

An Awful Responsibility.

EVERYBODY has something to say about consumption. We all deplore its terrible ravages, but only a few of us seem to have enough common sense to take the proper means of preventing it. It is as simple as "two and two are four," that Hale's Honey of Horehound and Tar, taken as a remedy for coughs, colds, difficult breathing, hoarseness, or any of the symptoms which pave the way for that terrible destroyer, will effect a radical and rapid cure of the ailment, and avert all danger. Whoever, under these circumstanees, negleets to resort to the true specific, assumes a fearful responsibility. Sold by druggists.

PARLOR ORGANS

ONE YEAR'S TEST TRIAL. Money Refunded, with interest at six per cent., if not just as represented. Organ shipped same day order is received.

ONLY $88.00

It is by far the sweetest toned and most powerful Organ yet made. The case is manufactured from the choicest of seasoned and kiln-dried Black Walnut, built neat, so as not to absorb dirt or dust. It is manufactured on a new and scientific plan, so as to render sound of reeds PIPE-LIKE in tone. The Pipe Tube Cells enable this Organ to imitate a Church Pipe Organ that would cost from $500 to $1,000. The Scotch BAGPIPE, ALPINE HORN, CHIME OF SWISS BELLS, EUROPEAN FLAGEOLET, ORCHESTRA, BRASS BAND, OLE BULL VIOLIN, MUSIC BOX, the HUMAN VOICE, ANGELIC HARP, NIGHT HORN, CATHEDRAL PIPE ORGAN, are all exactly imitated in "Beatty's Best." Only $88; providing order is given and remittance made within 25 days after date of this newspaper. If ordered within 13 days, $80.00, or if order is given and remittance is made within 9 days, only $75.00 cash will buy this magnificent $200.00 Parlor Organ, including a very handsome Bench (or stool), Book and Music. The reason why this limited time price is given is to induce you to order as early as possible, thus introducing this sweet-toned instrument immediately. ☞ IF YOU CANNOT BUY NOW, WRITE, GIVING YOUR REASONS WHY, AS I WANT TO HEAR FROM YOU ANYWAY. ☜

11th Set—ANGELIC HARP Reeds.
12th Set—Weird NIGHT HORN Reeds.

READ THE DESCRIPTION OF STOP WORK. 29 IN ALL.

1—CLARIONET.—A set of reeds that exactly imitates the musical instrument that bears its name. It is one of the most brilliant sets of reeds used in "BEATTY'S BEST"

2—VOIX CELESTE.—The sweet, pure, and exalted tones produced from this Stop are beyond description.

3—CELLO.—A rich and melodious tone is produced.

4—FRENCH HORN.—Imitates a full ORCHESTRA and BRASS BAND.

5—PICCOLO.—Variety of music which makes the Piccolo the most difficult and expensive Stop to build. Producing an effect similar to a MILITARY BAND.

6—SAXAPHONE.—The beautiful effect of this Stop is "Beatty's Favorite." This set of reeds is so pleasing that many have written to me saying: "It alone is worth the price of the Organ."

7—DIAPASON.—Draws a full set of Golden Tongue Reeds.

8—POWERFUL BOX SUB-BASS.—New and original. Its THUNDERING TONES are without a parallel. Imitating exactly the PEDAL BASS of the famous Freiberg (Germany) Pipe Organ.

9—DULCIANA.—A full set of Paris Reeds is drawn by this Stop.

10—VOX JUBILANTE.—When used in conjunction with Stops Nos. 3, 4, 5 and 6 peals forth most delightful music.

11. VOX HUMANA. Tremulant, which, by the aid of a FAN WHEEL, imitates the HUMAN VOICE.

12—OCTAVE COUPLER.—Doubles the power of the Organ. Couples all octaves. Oratorio effects produced.

13—Melodia. 14. Clarabella. 15. Bourdon. 16. Viol Di Gamba. 17. Viola Dolce. 18. Grand Expressione. 19. Harp Æolian. 20. Echo. 21. Violina. 22. Orchestral Forte. 23. Grand Organ Stop. 24. Right Knee Stop. 25. Automatic Valve Stop. 26. Mezzo Knee Stop. 27. Maestoso. 28. Percussion, open patented Combination Swell.

29. AEROSTATIC EXPRESSION Compass or Regulator, showing at a glance the amount of pressure upon the instrument; same as a compass to the ship so is this new improvement to the Organ. The last seventeen [17] Stops are operated in direct conjunction with above twelve [12], bringing forth, at command of the performer, most charming music, with beautiful orchestral effect, from a mere whisper to a grand burst of harmony. Its MELODIOUS TONES, while using the full Organ must be heard to be appreciated. To which is added the RIGHT and LEFT Grand Organ Knee Swells, so as to enable the performer to throw on or off full power without removing hands from keyboard. Also a Third Knee Swell (patented) gives the Organ a resonant tone not obtained in any other make. Lamp Stands, Pocket for Music, Treble (3) Upright Bellows, Steel Springs, 6-Octave Keyboard, BEATTY'S PATENT STOP ACTION and SOUNDING BOARDS. Regular Catalogue Price, without Beneh, (or Stool), Book and Music, ONLY $200.00. This Organ is worth, to any lover of sweet music, several times its price, $200.00.

If you ever intend to buy an Organ you should order this instead of some other make. Why? Because this instrument contains all the music to be found in an ordinary Organ that is sold at retail for $200.00. Besides, it has many varieties of sweet combinations and imitations of several musical and pipe instruments only to be obtained in "BEATTY'S BEST." Now ready for 1884. It is fully secured by United States patents. Why, then, not order the best? If you are not entirely satisfied after one year's use you are at perfect liberty to return the Organ, and I hereby positively agree to promptly refund you your money, with interest at 6 per cent. If you don't want to buy just now, why not come and see me, anyway? Look at the Organ, hear it played, and see for yourself. YOU ARE WELCOME. FREE COACH meets you at train. Don't fail to visit my factory, as it is by far the Largest Organ Works in Existence. ☞ Shipments of Beatty's Organs during the past three months were as follows: September, 1,600; October, 1,800; November, (2 Holidays), 1,600. TOTAL, 5,000. This is as many Organs shipped as any two of the largest Organ Builders in America combined, and it is beyond a doubt positive proof that the public are buying Beatty's Organs in preference to other makes.

ODDS AND ENDS.

A large delegation of manufacturers and commercial men of Australia are making arrangements to visit this country next spring.

The largest locomotive ever built is now being made in Sacramento by the Central Pacific Railroad. The engine and tender will weigh 105 tons, and will be 65 feet five inches long.

Wm. H. Vanderbilt owns $47,050,000 in United States registered four per cent bonds, a draft for the interest on which is mailed to him quarterly from the Treasury. The interest on these bonds amounts as follows: per annum, $1,882,000; per quarter, $470,500; per month, $156,883. 33⅓; per day, $5,156.16; per hour, $214.84; per minute, $3.58.

The Titans gathered in one of the parlors of the Hotel Brunswick, New York, to celebrate the 1st of December, which is an important day in the Titanic calendar. Forty-four Titans answered the roll call, and there was a wonderful unfolding of lanky limbs, and the palm of great stature was given to John Wentworth, from Chicago, who reached up to six feet seven inches above the floor. He was given the place of honor, and was admired and envied by all present.

The losses of our lake marine during the present season have been most disastrous. In fact, the figures have swelled to an almost appalling magnitude. It has been ascertained that 102 craft were totally destroyed, while nearly fifty met with serious losses. This is about three per cent of the whole number of registered vessels on the lakes, the value of which and of their cargoes cannot fall short of $1,350,000.

It is alleged that on the 19th of October, 1881, Charles W. Faulkner, a one-armed man, saw Charles J. Schmidt, a Chicago brewer, whipping a colt; that women and children were crying from sympathy; that the one-armed man upbraided Schmidt; and that the whipper, enraged by his own brutality and made furious by wounded pride, turned on the one-armed man and lashed him till the blood flowed freely. On the relation of these allegations before Judge Tuley of the circuit court, Mr. Schmidt, the whipper, was commanded to pay to Mr. Faulkner the sum of $1,000.

It will surprise many to learn that the War Department has 540 Confederate battle-flags which were captured by the Federals during engagements of the civil war. Most of them give evidence of the terrible struggle through which they were borne by victims or victors, while a number of them hang in a halo of romantic interest. One of these was captured at Malvern Hill, from a South Carolina regiment that had piled up its own dead for breastworks. Another is a black flag, captured near North Mountain, Md., and was designed for use as a sign of "no quarter" in any fight where colored Union troops took part.

District Attorney Corkhill, of Washington, finds so many dishonest pension agents in that city that he has called the department of justice to assist in prosecuting them. It is stated that there are over one thousand of these agents in Washington, and that many of them live upon frauds against the government and the pensioners. During the last eighteen months more than three hundred have been suspended, that is, forbidden to practice before the department in pension cases. The primary cause of this evil lies in the legislation of Congress and the rulings of the department.

A very remarkable case of resuscitation occurred recently at Black River Falls, Wis. Miss Lena Richmann, the daughter of a very wealthy German, had been very sick for some weeks, and died, as was supposed. Her body was prepared for burial, and on the fourth day the funeral services were held. While the ceremony was in progress, Dr. Baxter of Milwaukee, looking at the face of the supposed corpse, asked that the services be interrupted long enough for him to attempt resuscitation. This was done, and the woman arose in her coffin with a terrific shriek. The scene was highly exciting. Men turned pale with horror, women fainted, and it was a long time before anything like quiet was restored. She says that while in a trance condition, she realized with unspeakable agony that she was being prepared for the grave, but could not speak or make any motion.

DR. JOHN BULL'S

Smith's Tonic Syrup

FOR THE CURE OF

FEVER and AGUE

Or CHILLS and FEVER.

AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamp on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN J. SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, of Louisville, Ky. Examine well the label on each bottle. If my private stamp is not on each bottle do not purchase, or you will be deceived.

NIGHTS IN A BAR-ROOM

T. S Arthur's great temperance book, complete and illustrated. By mail, 5c each; 50c per doz. By express, $3.50 per 100.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC THE GREAT SOURCE OF CRIME.

Leaves from the diary of an old lawyer.—By Hon. A. B Richmond, author of "Court and Prison," etc. A book of intense interest, rivaling the famous "Diary of a Physician," and, in its truthful, terrible pictures of the power and crime of intemperance, excelling the well-known "Ten Nights in a Bar-room." The temperance issue of the present time is Shall prohibition be partial or entire? Shall the branches of the death-bearing tree be pruned and trimmed, or shall the tree itself be cut down and its stump be torn up by the roots? The answer of "Leaves from the Diary" is, "Cut down the tree, tear up the roots, leave not a shoot or shred behind." It is certainly a very strong and eloquent volume Complete edition on fine, heavy paper, with colored lithograph of Sewall's stomach plates By mail, 30c each, $3 per doz. By express, $20 per 100. Abridged edition, by mail, 15c; $1.25 per doz. By express, $9 per 100.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC AND THE SOBER CITIZEN.

An able and telling work, by Rev. J. H. Sherman, which brings out the effects of the liquor traffic in a new light. The following are some of the commendations of the first edition.

"The author drives the nails of conviction through and clinches them."—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

"Speakers and workers in the temperance field will find valuable aid in this pamphlet. It is crowded with convincing facts "—Zion's Herald

"One of the ablest reviews of the drink curse ever issued from the press."—The Morning and Day of Reform.

"The arguments are put in telling form."—Judge Pittman.

New revised and enlarged edition. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

DRINKS FROM DRUGS.

A startling exposure of the liquor traffic, by El. Johnson. A book that cannot fail to arouse the American people to the gigantic swindle now being perpetrated. The writer was offered $10,000 by a leading brewer to keep still. Liquor not only doctored, but made entirely from drugs. Extracts from a whole library of secret books, giving receipts for making and doctoring; advertisements of essences, fac-similes of labels, engravings, etc., etc. Claret, port, sherry, champagne, whisky, brandy, gin, rum, etc., all out of one barrel, and made at less than 25 cents a quart. Wine that never saw grape juice; cider that never saw apples; beer factories in place of breweries; fine cream ale without barley or brewing; whisky from arsenic; millions of gallons of liquor that pays no revenue tax. The farmer's corn and barley "all in your eye." A wholesale liquor store in a ten-foot square cellar; more French wine sold in New York City than is produced in the whole of France. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By Express, $6 per 100.

W. C. T. U. ORGANIZATION AND WORK.

A book of general information on how to organize and run successfully a Woman's Christian Temperance Union. This book should be widely distributed among W C. T. U. presidents, pastor's wives and other representative women. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $[illegible] 100.

BAND OF HOPE SONG BOOK.

Band of Hope Songs.—Fifty-seven choice pieces for juvenile temperance gatherings, Bands of Hope, etc. Old, familiar tunes, also choice new words and music. Words far in advance of anything else issued. By mail, 8c each; 75c per doz. By express, $4 per 100.

DANIEL'S BAND.

A temperance concert exercise, with parts suitable for all ages; entirely new Songs, recitations, dialogues, etc., of a thoroughly aggressive character; sure to carry weight with the rendering of it. By mail, 5c each; 50c per dozen, By express, $2 per 100.

TEMPERANCE ANTHEM BOOK.

Temperance Anthems.—A new idea; nothing else of the kind in existence Will insure good music by the choir at temperance meetings Forty-eight pages of choice anthems by ablest writers By mail, 15c each; $1 50 per doz. By express, $10 per 100.

Family, Oxford and Gift Bibles at Half Price.

TERMS.—Cash with order; if by express, charges not paid; if by mail, postage extra as quoted and safe delivery guaranteed ONLY when 10 cents extra is sent to pay for registering All Family Bibles are furnished in strong paste-board box and are carefully wrapped for Express or Mail. Remit by P. O. or Express Order, Draft on Chicago or New York, or by Registered Letter. Postage stamps taken for less than $1.00.

BUSINESS.

Through some misunderstanding with the publishers of the American Agriculturist, it has been advertised that the Cynosure would be furnished with that excellent monthly and its premium dictionary and picture for $3.20. This is lower than can be afforded. The price which the Agriculturist demands makes a raise necessary to $3.60.

Please notice—the Cynosure, Agriculturist, valuable dictionary and fine engraving will be sent for $3.60 cash. Those who have sent in orders will confer a favor and save the Cynosure the necessity of advancing 40 cents for them if they will remit this amount.

NOTICE.

After February 1 we shall be able to fill all orders for Freemasonry Illustrated PAPER COVER and cloth cover, seven degrees and three degrees as soon as received.

We have now a good stock of everything except seven degree paper cover.

FREEMASONRY AT A GLANCE."

An exposition of the first three degrees of Freemasonry in every village! How can it be done? By sending to W. I. Phillips, Treasurer N. C. A., for a 32-page pamphlet, containing 40 illustrations with explanations, with the legal attestation of the pastmaster of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago, as to the correctness of said exposition. We will send, postpaid, from now to first of January, thirty (30) of these pamphlets for one dollar; sixty-five (65) for two dollars, and 165 for five dollars.

Edmund Ronayne says: "One of these pamphlets put in each family will do as much good as a public exposition would do."

Many have written: "Send a lecturer to our place, we need one very much.' This is often impossible, but the above plan is much better than no lecture; does not need a church or hall, which often cannot be had; and costs but a fraction of what a lecturer usually costs. Will you see to it that you have one of these lecturers, silent as sunlight and as powerful, in your town. If you cannot afford the dollar or five dollars yourself, you can soon collect from friends for this purpose the needed funds.

N. B. With each "Glance" will be sent an N. C. A. tract, and as the pamphlet gives an exposition of the ceremonies of the lodge the tract will give an exposition of the character of those ceremonies.

Not less than thirty sent on the above terms, and only to one address. Single copies 6 cents.

FREE TRACT FUND.

You will notice that the tract fund has received a few donations, for which we are thankful who have to answer the calls for tracts, and see that the printing of them is paid for.

Bro. W. W. Ames in sending the donation of Capt. Wilson, writes:—"Enclosed find two dollars for the tract fund, and which I hope will be greatly increased."

FOLLY.

It's all folly to pay $50 or a $100 for seven degrees in Freemasonry in the Lodge and Chapter when you can send a dollar to the National Christian Association, 221 W. Madison street, Chicago, and get the whole thing by return mail, without being hoodwinked and haltered or having to "put up refreshments" after tedious "initiations."

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE FOR 1884.

The representative of the national movement to "WITHSTAND, EXPOSE AND REMOVE" THE SECRET LODGES can now promise for the coming year a more attractive LIST OF CONTRIBUTORS than ever before, embracing some of the ablest writers upon Christian reform topics in over twenty denominations. The Cynosure has been known for fifteen years as one of the most radical and uncompromising defenders of Christianity against the error of false religious systems, especially those now organized and powerful in the SECRET LODGES OF AMERICA.

The Cynosure is a welcome family paper in thousands of homes, having a choice family department, temperance, religious and secular news, farm notes, editorial notes on current events, literary reviews, etc.

The editors, PRES. J. BLANCHARD and HENRY L. KELLOGG, will be most ably assisted by the lecturers and agents of the National Christian Association and its auxiliaries: J. P. Cloth.....75 cents.

THIS is a pleasant surprise in many ways. The author is Rev. W. T. Meloy, of the United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and the book is published by the Board of Publication of his denomination. It is a love story, not "fascinating," but with so much of genial interest that the reader is in no danger of laying it down unfinished. * * * The moral purpose of the book is to describe and vindicate Christian character, in its more heroic aspects, and it is a success. We congratulate the author and the United Presbyterian Board of Publication on this literary lily of the valley.—The Interior.

NOW!

This word deserves large capitals. It is at this season one of the first importance. Hundreds of subscribers will find on examination that it is time to renew. There is no better time than NOW for it. It is a pleasure to know that hundreds are prompt in this matter and have the reform and the Cynosure close to their hearts. Let all imitate their good example and write quickly.

If each one will add to his effort for a good cause the name of a new subscriber, enclosing $4.00 for both, the sender may have also his choice of the following valuable pamphlets:

1. The Batavia Convention pamphlet, with the great speeches on that occasion, illustrations of the Morgan Monument, etc.; or

2. Egypt in History and Prophecy; or, Pharaoh proclaiming God, by the celebrated Robert Patterson, from Hasting's Anti-infidel Library; or

3. The Anti-masonic Scrap Book, a new and enlarged edition now in press, containing all the tracts published by the N. C. A.; or

4. The Island of Madagascar; the excellent history written by Gen. J. W. Phelps and noticed in a late Cynosure.

5. Copies of any of the pamphlets sold by the N. C. A., to the amount of 25 cents.

A CLUB OF FIVE

trial subscribers (two months for 25 cents) will just now be a valuable accession to the Cynosure list. To every friend who will get one up and enclose the $1.25 and addresses plainly written we will send either of the documents mentioned above.

FOR A CLUB OF TEN the sender may choose any two from the above list.

Get the Cynosure circulated in your town. The lodge does not thrive where it is read.

The prohibition cause which has seemed to slumber for a while in Kansas is beginning to attack the remnant of the saloon evil; the country towns it is believed are free from it, and attention is now given to the cities where it yet lurks. In Lawrence twenty saloons defied the law, but a vigorous prosecution was begun a few weeks ago and on the 25th ult. they gave up the fight and hauled down their flag. Their places of business will be purified and occupied by mercantile establishments; and now no drop of intoxicating liquor can be had in the city for drinking purposes. In Topeka also a war of extermination will soon begin no doubt, a late city election having put a prohibition mayor in office. God speed the work.

Butler is not yet deserted of all his friends. The Grand Treasurer of the Knights of Labor is visiting the interior cities of Illinois organizing Butler clubs. If this lodge movement succeeds Butler may call on a wider and more powerful circle of his lodge friends; or, if it fails, he may yet rally the lodges as a last resort. He left his office the other day to his successor Robinson, but with a gross insult to all Christian people. In issuing an order he severely criticised his predecessor for pardoning a criminal, but finding that he had himself given the pardon, he published a letter saying that so many Christians, Sabbath-school men, etc., were under indictment that he was confused about names—an insult very characteristic of thirty-three degrees of Masonry.

The tendency of the churches toward formality and ceremony in religion is year by year more painfully apparent during the "holiday season." No prayerful parent can observe without pain the confused ideas about Christ that an ordinary "Christmas" festival produces in the impressive mind of a child. Such a mixture of heathen practice with revered Scripture names and history would puzzle most older heads to explain. The Advance, however, scolds the International Sabbath school lesson committee, because they did not drop the course of lessons in the Old Testament and substitute something to please the fashionable observers of "Christmas;" and later, in the same spirit gives the first place to a contributor who urges turning the week of prayer into an "Easter" affair. The season now being observed by the churches is already so much of a formality that many are ceasing to observe it, at least in the perfunctory way suggested by the Evangelical Alliance. If it is put over till "Easter," the Knight Templar Freemasons would come out of their saloons to observe it better than the churches.

The Northern Pacific dragged down Jay Cooke, the banker, whose energy first disposed of its stock over ten years ago. The road is built and finely equipped, but it has overthrown the man whose energy carried it through. Henry Villard, the President, has just resigned, and like Cooke, has turned over millions of personal property to make good in part the losses of those who, trusting him, invested in the road. Villard had become suddenly and immensely rich from his management of the Northern Pacific and two Oregon companies, but the pressure of Wall Street has so depressed the stock value that Villard could hold out no longer. He is a man of energy and it would seem of integrity, and may yet retrieve his fortune as honorably as Jay Cooke has done. The value of the road is undoubted and its standing among the stock gamblers will be restored. The depression in railroad stocks, by which the Northern Pacific has suffered so heavily, has been remarkable. The thirty-four roads whose stocks are quoted in Wall Street are reported as having shrunk in market value during 1883, $229,966,181, and the three Villard companies lead the list with a depeeciation of $65,000,000.

It must have been a supreme moment for scientific engineering when the other day two trains composed of twenty-four loaded cars and twenty engines of forty-five tons each drew onto the new cantilever railroad bridge at Niagara. The dispatches say it is the first bridge of the kind ever completed, which is hardly correct. It may be the first of its kind in this country or used for railway purposes. Were it the very first the rashness of the engineers would be inexcusable. The plan of the bridge is this: Upon two immense iron piers, built up 200 feet from the water's edge each side the river, are constructed huge trusses extending toward the middle of the chasm to within 125 feet of each other. These trusses are enormous levers, the piers are fulcrums, and the gap between is filled with a single truss which was swung into place and completed the bridge. It is difficult to imagine the care needed to compute the strength of such a structure so that it may safely stand the immense strain of railway traffic; and in spite of the finest calculations, the experimental character of the work must have compelled in the railway men who took part in this first trial a faith in science such as they seldom exercise. As an illustration of the Christian's faith in a Redeemer and Saviour this trial of the bridge is at once striking and forcible. The drivers who ventured their huge engines upon those flying buttresses of iron stretched like a web across the chasm of Niagara may have listened with strained ear for the least sound that should indicate the giving way of the structure; but with what firmer confidence does the child of God venture upon the great and precious promises of his Almighty Father!

SILENT PARTNERS have no place in the Christian church, since the Lord himself desires that the love he puts into a forgiven sinner's heart shall be ever testifying to other souls. So likewise it cannot be that Christ is pleased when one who professes to follow him, and who knows how the lodge enviously rejects him, lifts no voice of protest against such orders for the honor of his Master. A writer in the Gospel Banner puts this duty of every Christian who is informed upon this subject in clear light: "You believe that secret society organizations are evil and tend to interfere with the best interests of the people. You express yourself as opposed to them and look upon them as organized evil, but your silent opposition will never bring freedom to the bondmen. You have need to do more. Unless you do some active work against these great evils, your opposition is virtually neutral, and actually a balance on their side. You must let your light shine and let people know which side you are on, and you cannot do this and remain silent. You are glad that others write and speak against this wickedness, now help by aiding the work of spreading the light on this darkness."

"THE LODGE AS GOOD AS THE CHURCH."

BY ELDER NATHAN CALLENDER.

So say thousands in the lodge and some who are not in the lodge. With some qualifications it may be admitted. As the victim, who has been led by some licentious villain to commence the life of a prostitute, is by some strange law regarded with less favor than the wretch who misleads her, so it may be with a church which can be made the prostitute of the lodge. We are tempted to pronounce the church which will prostrate before the lodge, as even worse than the lodge,—betraying the Son of God with a kiss, into the hands of his enemies. But how did the church get down to the lodge level? Plainly by intercourse, fellowshipping, mixing with the lodge. No mystery at all. "No fellowship with the unfruittul works of the lodge of darkness" is the remedy. The scoundrel who ruins the virgin by temptation, verging upon force, turns his back upon her with the boast, "She is no better than I am." By his fiendish agency he makes it true, or, seem to be true.

A vast river having its source deep in a continent of mud and filth, proposes union with the crystal stream flowing from the "delectable mountains," and they agree to run in the same channel. When they have gone together a little way, you cannot distinguish the waters of one from the other—when lo! it is averred that Crystal river is quite as muddy as Mud river. Take the church as it came from its head, governed by the principles of Christianity and contrast it with the offspring of "Apple-tree tavern," and you have the distance and the difference between Paradise and the "bottomless pit."

Lodge as good as the church! What do they mean? The child of Apple-tree tavern as good as the Bride of Christ, "the Temple of the Holy Spirit!"

Men who would deliberately assert this "are in danger of hell-fire." This implies that a pack of sensual tipplers can legislate as well for man's social, religious being as he who formed him. If, however, by the church is meant the lodge prostitute called by that sacred name, to them be the glory of first debauching, then claiming relationship and equality with the church. Let this be understood and we will not complain of the claim.

That there are societies, honored by the term, church, governed by the lodge or by some similar policy, may be granted. How much better these are than the lodge the judgment will unfold when individual and social apostates are brought to face the Lamb of God whom they have betrayed in the house of his friends.

The real church does not—cannot coalsce with the thousands of societies recognized as churches of Christ. Christ keeps a people free from fellowshiping these lodge-bound bodies. The gates of hell shall never prevail against her. Some of his real children may get their robes soiled in lodge filth; let all such repent, confess and weep bitterly—as they must. When the light of the Gospel dispels the dense lodge fogs of this age lodgery and popery will be made equally odious in the eyes of "those who will live godly in Christ Jesus.

CHURCHIANITY AND CHRISTIANITY.

BY PRES. L. N. STRATTON.

A few years since the telegraphic columns of the newspapers were giving space to reports of the defalcations of the business manager of a religious denomination. A minister of that denomination remarked to a car-load of passengers, that, "The papers may say what they please against our church, it is a big thing, a decidedly big thing. It can stand a good deal of such gammon as that paper contains, for it is rich and powerful and its sword cuts both ways, and the newspapers that report such things will find it out. For our church is a big thing—a decidedly big thing!"

Let the sentiment and animus of that minister's remarks stand for the definition of the first term used in the title of this article. "A decidedly big thing, is it? Ah, does that make it a decidedly right thing? The devil is a big thing. Hell is a big thing, and there are several other institutions, noted for bulk and power, but are not noted for their moral worth. The four hundred and fifty prophets of Baal were not four hundred and fifty times better than the prophet who came last on the scene. We are driven to the conclusion that it will not do to show undue devotion to the demands of any church lest we show more Churchianity than Christianity.

But if it will not do to bow in devotion to the church because of its electrifying census tables, are there any other dangers to Christianity? May we not worship a church because of supposed conformity to the original system of the apostolic church? May it not be that we bow before the church, rather than to its great Head beyond it, because it has been instrumental in the overthrow of some great system of wrong? If so, then we must correct ourselves upon these points and not be guilty of worshiping the church rather than Christ its founder.

But because these dangers of church worship environ us, it does not negate our duties to Christianity, nor to the Christian church which was founded to promote it. Simply this is found to be the lesson taught. The means must not be substituted for the end. The church must not be worshipped instead of Christ its Head. To worship the means, and adore the methods, and work certain clap-trap machinery for advancing its financial and numerical interests, is Churchianity. To worship the Founder, and use all the means his Word and Spirit suggest for the promotion of his cause, is Christianity.

Christ and his apostles organized the church for a certain purpose, but he organized it as a means and not as an end. In its sphere it is God-appointed and heaven-ordained, as it is also heaven-honored and blessed. But used otherwise than as a means, it becomes an incubus, "The letter killeth but the spirit giveth life."

Wheaton Theological Seminary.

It is said of Thomas Aquinas, the angelic doctor, that coming one day into a room where some monks were counting heaps of gold pieces, they said to him: "The time is no more when the church has to say, 'Silver and gold have I none.'" To which he answered, "Yes; and neither can it say, 'In the name of Jesus of Nazareth, rise up and walk.'" The loss or the absence of spiritual power can never be compensated by any amount of money or any evidences of external prosperity.

THE BATTLE IS THE LORD'S.

BY ALXANDER THOMSON.

Make strong and tall your men-of-war
Sheathed in their coats of steel,
Impervious to the battle's shots,
From main-deck to the keel;
Then let them ride the mountain wave,
And brave the tempest's breath
Like gloomy clouds with vengeance charged,
The messengers of death.

Build up your batteries on the land
Till, frowning tier on tier,
The iron cannon grimly scowl
On smiling bay and pier;
Increase your regiments till their tents
On every hill top stand,
And soldiers, like a locust swarm,
Devour the smiling land.

Yet know that stronger than your strength,
Eternal justice runs,
And burns as with the focal heat
Of God's unnumbered suns
Each haughty power whose brazen front
Against his truth is placed,
Or builds within the Ark of God
The vulture's robber nest.

Not sudden as the wrath of men,
God's holy vengeance falls,
His love and patience linger long,
Round evil's haughty walls,
And oft the champions of his truth
In vain lift up their eyes,
To see the naked sword of God
Flame sudden in the skies.

Yet never shall the living God
Leave his own cause to fail,
Nor shall the banded hosts of wrong,
Against his might prevail;
The sword that sleeps through circling years
Shall from its scabbard leap,
And in a trice the harvest fields
Of hoary error reap.

Then vain are all the men-of-war,
The gleaming squadrons then,
As sweeps the cyclone's dreadful swath
The stubble of the plain.
As ships before the storm go down,
When on the grim rocks tossed,
As rout and ruin overtake
The battle of the lost,
So in the dreadful day of God,
All truth shall be restored,
And evil like a shadow flee
The battle of the Lord.

MORRIS ON MORGAN.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

Wm. Morgan, or Political Anti-masonry. Its rise, progress and decadence; by Rob Morris, L.L. D., Masonic writer. Robt. Macoy, Masonic publisher, N. Y.

It is one of the strongest evidences of the evil nature of any institution that it perverts not only the judgment but the moral sense of those who are possessed by it, so that otherwise amiable and excellent men are led to call evil good and good evil, put light for darkness and darkness for light and even feel constrained to slander both the living, and the dead in order to keep a perverted conscience. These remarks apply especially to Jesuitism and Freemasonry.

In the book referred to, Dr. Morris attempts to break the force of Anti-masonic fact and argument by trying to prove—

1. That possibly Wm. Morgan was not killed, only abducted.
2. That Morgan was a bad man.
3. That the Anti-masons of 1826 to 1836 were in the main irresponsible and bad men.
4. That many honorable men have belonged to the order.
5. That Freemasonry has grown in spite of opposition.

I notice first that Dr. M. has unconsciously rendered important service to our reform by bringing before the people many important facts that were imperfectly known and often denied.

2. There is no reasonable doubt of the murder of Morgan by Freemasons, but to abduct him was a great crime.

3. The character of Morgan had nothing to do with the question. The probabilities are, that he was a respectable citizen, but even if he had been as bad a man as Carey, the Masons had no more right to murder or abduct him than O'Donnell had to shoot Carey.

4. The character of the Anti-masons has nothing to do with the righteousness of their principles. It is a favorite plan of defending a weak cause by blackmailing its opponents; but I affirm that the nation has produced no purer and nobler class of men than the Anti-masons of 1826–84.

I have before me the published proceedings of the first National Anti-masonic convention held in Philadelphia, Sept. 11–17, 1830. For dignified and scholarly utterances no similar convention has surpassed it. Many members became eminent in the counsels of the nation. Not one of them was a rebel; and among them are the names of four who were governors of States, two were Cabinet officers, and others eminent for learning, piety and philanthropy. Mr. Morris makes a serious mistake in attempting to bolster Masonry by blackmailing the reputation of such men as Pres. J. Q. Adams, Abner Phelps, Amasa Walker, Myron Holly, Wm. Slade, Joseph Ritner, W. H. Seward and Francis Granger, to say nothing of David Bernard, Charles G. Finney and a host of others.

5. That many honorable men have belonged to the order proves no more, than the fact that there have been good polygamists and good slaveholders proves that polygamy and slavery are to be approved.

6. Freemasonry has grown in spite of opposition. So has intemperance and licentiousness. Secret societies have had a wonderful growth in Europe, and are to-day the standing menace of all civil governments. This does not prove them good. The truth is, that under the discussion of 1826–36 Masonry, according to the testimony of Dr. Morris, lost four-fifths of its members in the North, and its opponents supposed it to be dead. Under the demoralizing influence of the war of the rebellion (for all war is demoralizing) both Freemasonry and intemperance had a great revival, from the effects of which we have not yet recovered.

For the honor of human nature and especially for that of the Christian profession, I could wish that Dr. Morris had not slandered the living and the dead. This he has done in many instances. I will mention but two. Thus, on page 79 he speaks of "the infamous Samuel D. Greene"; on page 311 he is mentioned as in his "general character black and infamous," "practicing the arts of a deep and calculating hypocrite," "confessing to be one of the original conspirators against Wm. Morgan;" and many other libelous charges.

The truth is, that Samuel D. Greene died in 1882 at the advanced age of 94, and that from early manhood he had been an exemplary Christian, and much of the time an honored office-bearer in a Christian church. Those who knew him best, even though they did not sympathize with his Anti-masonic views, loved and honored him. It is doubtless true that he was expelled from the lodge, but not until he had renounced and exposed its wickedness. The only ground for the charges against Mr. Greene is, that he refused to regard as of binding obligation a covenant that he had been led to enter into through misrepresentation, and which he regarded as requiring what was forbidden by his higher obligation to God and humanity. Instead of confessing that he was a conspirator against Morgan he expressly denies it.

The other instance is that of a Christian gentleman who needs no defence at my hands, but he will pardon me for repelling a slander. Of Edmond Ronayne Dr. Morris says, page 379:

"Leader among them is a Jesuit priest, who, commencing life in Ireland came to America, renounced Catholicism, under instructions of the Jesuit General, and took orders in the Protestant Episcopal church. This gave him a status to enter the Masonic order and become the master of a lodge. The Episcopalians finding him more than they had bargained for, he next became a Congregational preacher, and under the tuition of the now offered candidate for President of the United States, renounced Masonry and is employed by the association aforesaid [N. C. A.] to give dramatic representations."

Now this brief quotation contains at least six absolute falsehoods, some of them distinctly slanderous. Mr. Ronayne became a Protestant before he came to America. He was never a Jesuit priest or a priest of any sort; never took orders in the Episcopal church; never became a Congregational preacher"; never renounced Masonry under instructions from, but renounced it before he ever knew Pres. Blanchard; and was never employed by the National Christian Association to give dramatic representations or do anything else. He renounced Masonry and commenced working the degrees before he became a preacher of any sort. During the last two or three years he has labored as a lay evangelist, with success; and as a writer no man has done better service to this reform or administered more telling and timely rebukes to Rob Morris than E. Ronayne. When therefore Dr. M. says, "All this is a Jesuit trick," he simply repeats a thread-bare falsehood.

In conclusion, let me say that I hope Anti-masons will buy and read Dr. M.'s book. It will show them that our labor is not in vain in the Lord.

Washington, D. C.

I try to make my enmities transient and my friendships immortal.—Cicero

WHAT IS MASONRY?

A "Lieutenant" in the order of Foresters told me in the street cars that that order was, in its religious character, just like the Masonic and Odd-fellow orders; its worship was Christless. He said that the Blue Lodge was the only real Masonry. He said "If a man would live up to the requirements of the Blue Lodge he would be a Christian." He stated that a Jew could be in every respect as good a Mason as a Christian could. "How then could Masonry make a man a Christian?" I asked. After trying to explain, he confessed that he was in a mistake. But what he meant was that Masonry taught them to love one another, and if they did that they would be just like Christians. Being questioned, he admitted that Masonic love, as such, was restricted to members of the craft and was wholly carnal.

I then asked him if it was true that a Mason was necessarily a Christian. He said he could see that it was not true. I then raised the question whether a Mason, or such, could be a Christian at all. I asked him why the name of Christ was always excluded from Masonic prayers and Scripture quotations. He said he had never noticed that, but his attention being called to it, he knew that it was so; yet he said that in the higher degrees Christ was not excluded. But he said that Christ was rather insulted than honored by the manner in which his name and word were used in the higher degrees.

He now took the position that Masonry was simply a moral institution. I asked him if the order enjoined the observance of any moral virtue for any other end than the honor and support of the order? He answered, "No." I asked him if he knew of any Masonic offence or crime that was such for any other reason than that it might injure the order? He said "No; every Masonic offence is an offence against the order; and the obligations were intended only for the protection of the order."

He concluded that if Masonry prohibited any wrong or enjoined any virtue for such purposes as that, there was no morality about it. But he felt safe in saying that it was a charitable institution. But on examination he found that Masons were not under any Masonic obligations to assist any but members of the craft and their families; so that what they gave to others was not Masonically given, and what they gave in obedience to their obligations was not charitably or benevolently given, as the subjest has a business claim to what he received.

In view of the use the order generally makes of the money paid into the treasury as fees and dues, and the small amount paid out to the needy the profession of charitableness was false.

So he concluded it was not a charitable institution. At last he frankly admitted that the Masonic claim to piety or charity was false for it was simply a business concern.

He joined the Masons and Odd-fellows only because of its worldly advantages. The members were bound to assist him if he was in need, or to stand by him if he was in trouble, and that was the reason most of them had for joining. He said the Bible was used to make the oath binding.

He said he did say in the ante-room that he was uninfluenced by mercenary motives, but that was not true. I asked him if he thought that it was a very proper place for a Christian? He guessed it was not. —A. H. Springstein in the Free Methodist.

"For ourselves we glory in wearing the livery of the Blessed Virgin the Mother of our Lord, and the Queen of Heaven."—Catholic Review.

Would the ancient idolaters who worshiped Astarte as "the Queen of Heaven" allow such an usurpation of her sacred title by Catholics without a contest; or will they divide their heaven and each have their queen? or shall there be war in heaven between the two queens? Milton's well known description of the heathen deities and worship thus speaks of Astarte:

> ".....Baalim and Ashtaroth; these male
> These feminine.
> With these in troop
> Came Astoreth whom the Phœnicians called
> Astarte, QUEEN OF HEAVEN with ereseent horns!"

Men think that they can do everything until God shows them they can do nothing without his help. Trouble makes men pray. And that is why women can pray better than men; they have had so much of it. Before he has had trouble, a man's prayers are poetic. He begins way up among the sun, moon, and stars, and gives the Lord a great deal of astronomical information. He must be highly gratified. Then he goes down gradually and beautifully, and lands in "Forever and ever. Amen." Trouble will drive all that out of him.—Talmage.

AMERICAN INSTITUTIONS MUST GOVERN AMERICA.

AN ADDRESS DELIVERED BEFORE THE CHRISTIAN CONVENTION OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES IN PHILADELPHIA, DEC. 19, 1883, BY GEN. J. W. PHELPS.

Party divisions, though inevitable in a free State, are attended by many evils. Party spirit is very apt to be out of accord with the spirit of truth and justice. Men emboldened by numbers often forget those principles of honor and morality upon which the safety and respectability of society depend. The tendency of party power is to intoxicate politicians and corrupt them, and impel them to become mere partisans instead of statesmen.

But if this is the nature of all party divisions, what shall be said of a party division like that of Freemasonry, which is deliberately false and corrupt in its very organization? Of what value to any decent society is such a party division as Freemasonry? Some pretend that its chief value consists in its power to oppose and defeat Jesuitry; but by examining into the character of its organization one must become convinced that it is far better fitted for destroying the Christian religion than for opposing Jesuits. It teaches merely the same delusive arts as Jesuitry. Neither of these institutions can claim a higher order of morality than the effort to cast out devils by the aid of devils, which is, in other words, the burning the devil at the stake in his own fire. Good ends sanctify villainous means with them.

It was not by any secret or tricky means that Luther, or Calvin, or the Puritans, or Huguenots, or Quakers contended against the Jesuit and his powers of darkness. The founders of our Republic made use of no such means as are offered us by the Jesuit and the Freemason. They sought the open air and sunshine of Divine truth for their aids, and not the hidden, lurid lights of the Inquisition and the lodge. The spelling-book and the Bible were their principal guides in politics as well as in religion;—not pieces of the true cross or squares and compasses. Their aim was to pour in light and ventilation upon dark and ignorant minds, and not confuse them with low, tricky mystifications. No moral principle is safe, no republican government such as our fathers established is possible where the two contending parties which pretend to sustain it employ such Pharisaic arts as are taught and practiced by the Jesuit and the Freemason.

Thomas Jefferson, our third President, from whom modern Democracy claims to have descended (a claim which may safely be allowed to this extent, that it is very far descended) expressed the wish that a sea of fire might roll between us and Europe. His idea would appear to be this, to shut out the vicious institutions of the old world from our American shores, where, it has been thought that, in the drama of empire, man was to be finally crowned with that glory of free and independent manhood, with that royal priesthood to which he was born a rightful inheritor. But instead of attempting to carry out this idea of Jefferson what do we find our Jefferson Democracy now doing but introducing from Europe, and maintaining with zealous care, and with all the rage of party spirit, two of the worst institutions, viz., Jesuitry and the lodge, that the ignorance and corruption of society have ever brought forth! These two old parties, beginning their warfare in Europe for the control of public sentiment, have transferred or extended their field of battle here to the United States; here they have opened their recruiting rendezvous which we meet at every turn; here they debauch young Americans, and make soldiers and partisans of them, to fight for issues that are of no more value to our American institutions than would be the tramp of contending armies to the interests of the farmers whose fields they destroy. It is not for American religion, or for American government that these secret parties contend; but they are striving merely to place power in the hands of Jesuits or Freemasons; or at least in the hands of political leaders whom these organizations favor and support.

It would seem to be a great folly in American citizens to allow their country to be desecrated by a contest like this. It is not so creditable to our sense of liberty, as some have supposed, as it is indicative of license. It may appear to be generous, and in full accord with Christian liberality to give a free field for a fair fight between all kinds of opposing parties, however absurd and out of date they may be; but when the field becomes so occupied as it is with Freemasons and Jesuits, and all their varied spawn, such as Mormons, Odd-fellows, Ku-Kluxes, Fenians, etc., it seems to us that the time is fully ripe when our American institutions should have a party in the field for their defense. But as it is now, our youth are becoming more and more arrayed under the opposing banners of the confessional and the lodge. They are taught to wear the livery of convents, parish schools, sisterhoods, of Hibernians, Fenians, Knights of St. Patrick, of Freemasons, of Knights Templar, of Daughters of Rebekah, etc., instead of being taught to defend the Republic of Washington of Adams and Jefferson against these foreign organizations. Little indeed are our youths of the present day taught to desire that a sea of fire might roll between us and the corrupt organizations of Europe.

Let us look around us and decide in our own minds who are American citizens. Is he an American citizen who devotes his whole life to the support of those secret, mystic organizations which, instead of being of American origin, or of being able to trace their origin to Nazareth, are utterly hostile to and subversive of American institutions? Is it wise for American citizens to reward with posts of honor and profit that man whose laurels have been won under the banners of Jesuitry or the lodge? To honor men for maintaining the lodge would be as unwise as to make a President of some favorite Grand Vizier of the Turkish Sultan; for Mohammedanism is not more foreign to our American institutions than is Freemasonry. No one who has seared his conscience with its infernal oaths is fit to be trusted with posts of honor under the Republic. The strange fire which Masonic high priests are offering to the Grand Architect in the brazen censers of the lodge (brazen enough in a moral point of view) is too much of the nature of hell fire to render those censers of any use whatever about the altars of our American temple of liberty. These priests do indeed make use of the Scriptures in their monitors, a free use indeed, but it is only in the truculent spirit that the Adversary made use of them in his interview with the Saviour of mankind. It is the same use that the Mormons make of them. It is merely to deceive the ignorant and unwary for the sake of self-aggrandizement and power.

In a political point of view the Masonic lodge may be regarded as an engine of success, as it were a battery of artillery, which each of the contending parties seeks to have on its own side, at whatever cost to the morals or the interests of the country. The Know-Nothing organization was the lodge in disguise; or a mere feint for drawing over the lodge proper from the service of the slave-power Democracy to the side of the Republicans. And the recent effort made in Massachusetts, under the lead of Gen. Butler, a worthy Sovereign Grand Inspector General of the 33d degree (which is, I believe, his title), was to make a bold charge upon the Republicans in order to recover back the lodge to the Democratic party for the Presidential campaign of 1884. The movement, though a determined one, has failed, for the Republicans still proudly hold the lodge, as they have done for quarter of a century. The immense patronage of the government is still in their hands. Their party has been the instrument of the people, it is true, for ridding the country of institutional slavery; but while their work has been but ill done, they have fastened upon the country this odious foreign institution which is more dangerous to religion and the Republic than was slavery itself. A jealous God can hardly look with favor upon a political party that, in a great calamity brought upon the country by a departure from his ordinances, has made an appeal for help to the crooked gods of the lodge, instead of to himself, the God of the fathers. The grounds on which the Republicans have won success have not been sufficiently in accord with American principles. They have been more in accord with the lodge-tricks of the plunderer Tweed, than with the statesmanship of a Washington; and the consequences have been a sudden degeneracy from American patriotism into self-seeking and corruption.

There is no virtue in the Democratic party for purging the country of this corruption. There is no reform possible so long as the Masonic lodge is left in the possession of the political power which it now exercises, by whatever party it may be employed. It is like all other evils, of which it may be regarded as chief, the more it is entertained by persons or parties the worse it is for the nation. In religion it teaches a cold, lifeless deism, whose rites are mingled with indecent buffoonery. We know from experience and from history that a republic is impossible under a deistic religion. We have seen this fact exemplified in the republic which was established for the Jews. That republic, one of the strongest ever founded, because founded on sound moral principle, degenerated into corruption, and from corruption into a monarchy. It is only because a truer and more practical religion than deism, that of Christianity, is now offered us in America that we venture to entertain the hope that our Republic may prove to be more durable than those which have gone before it, and which have been founded on deism and polytheism. Our American Republic is founded on Christocracy, not upon theocracy; but Freemasonry aims to subvert Christocracy and substitute itself as an exponent of Deity in its place. It teaches men to do good in the name of Freemasonry and not in the name of Christ. The deism which it seeks to establish is not purer than that of the Jews, the Mohammedans or the Brahmins. It admits among its worshippers, if not among the things worshipped, all manner of unclean things, infidels, pirates, gamblers, profane swearers, and pagans of every form of heathen superstition under the sun. The worst of Christians may make the best of Freemasons.

The resort to the lodge as a means of controlling ignorant voters is directly subversive of republican government.

The right to vote has been extended among us much more rapidly than that moral and religious education which originally accompanied the exercise of that right. The policy of the slave-power Democracy gave the right to vote to ignorant European fugitives, and in return the administration of the late civil war gave the right to emancipated slaves. The effect of this course has been to strengthen the secret lodge, which is felt necessary as a means of controlling and directing the voting masses who are invested with a power that they have not the education to understand. But this kind of control, and the political education which it gives, is not in accord with the Constitution of the United States, and the religion upon which the Constitution is founded. It is completely subversive of both. This secret control is effectively the government of the country: dispenses its offices and shapes its destiny. It is wholly void of the very first element of republican government, which is accountability in office; for when the ruling power operates in secrecy and concealment there cannot be any of that responsibility which is necessary to republican government. The lodge is an oligarchy of the most odious character. It is worse even than that, for it is a cacocracy, that is to say, a government not only of the few over the many, but of the worst few in the whole circle of political depravity. If one were to look for the worst political characters of the country, he would find them in our numerous lodges—Masonic, Mormon, Odd-fellows, Ku-Klux, etc. All these lodges are teaching ideas and directing political action in a way to prove utterly destructive to American institutions.

Whatever may be the political divisions among us, there are but two legitimate parties extant; and these are the Masonic lodge on one hand and American institutions on the other. We must decide which we will support. We cannot have them both. On the side of American institutions stand Christian character, free, independent manhood and republican liberty; while on the side of the lodge are spurious morals, secrecy, deception, fraud, and all those vices which render imperialism in a government a necessity.

The question is how we are to rid the country of this monstrous importation so foreign to our American institutions. How can we persuade our infatuated voters not to drag this treacherous offering of our enemies into the citadel of our liberties. With defiant front it boasts of its power. It is so sure of its organized and disciplined legions; so confident of its secret relations abroad and at home; so strong in the government patronage it holds in its hands, and in the social organized interests which it controls, the pulpit, the press, the jury, the railroad, the telegraph, the school committee, the legislative hall, etc., that its leaders smile at the efforts which have been made against it. And well may they smile in their security, for the power of the lodge cannot be suppressed either by force of arms or by the laws. It corrupts and demoralizes the one and tramples upon the other. It is an insolent foreign garrison, as overbearing as it is mean-spirited, holding the strongholds in our midst, and crushing out or silencing all who venture to oppose its supremacy. Its quiet demands upon our President to visit its opposers with political death, are as inevitably obeyed as were those formerly from a foreign power in Rome made upon a king of Spain for burning his best and most manly citizens at the auto-de-fe. How then can we contend against a secret power so dark and formidable as this? How can we arouse our fellow citizens from their apathy and indifference, and lead them to feel that Freemasonry, great as the evil may be, is not incurable, nor need it be endured? All we need is men who are as bold in opposing it as its members are unblushing in its propagation and defence.

We, who have established the National Christian Association Opposed to Secret Societies, have such faith in the Christian religion on which our Republic was founded, that we think there is a remedy for the dangers which threaten it from this new form of deism. We believe that the ballot in the hands of Christian men may succeed where the bullet would fail. We believe in throwing our ballots against the agents and minions of the lodge every time, wherever they show themselves, whether in the pulpit, at the press, upon the rostrum, or at the head of armies or parties. As superstitious men have formerly believed that the witch could be killed only by a silver bullet, so we enlightened Americans, who have had the hoodwinks drawn from our eyes, believe that the Masonic office-holder, who has possession probably of nine-tenths of our offices, can be killed off only by ballots thrown by the American party. We live and labor in the faith, though under strong discouragements, that the time will come when it will be as rare to see a Freemason in office over a Christian people, as it has become of late years to see a slaveholder there, where he once swayed the destinies of the nation with Satanic impudence and power. It is to the interest of Christian men everywhere, to rid the world of such a monstrous depravity as Freemasonry. Of no power ought a free people to be more jealous than of the power of secret organizations. In the face of such a power there is no security for reputation, fortune or life.

The present bane of the country comes from an inefficient administration of the government during the late war. Under that administration Freemasonry has thriven, and American sentiments, thought, and institutions have correspondingly degenerated. There is nothing in Freemasonry to check partisanship; it leads to it rather; and where it exists as the bottom power ruling the state, as it does at present with us, statesmanship is impossible. Back of party divisions in England lie the conservative forces of aristocracy, monarchy, armies and navies which enable politicians to be statesmen; but back of our parties here in America lies this Masonic institution, which is a mere infidel sarcasm on the dignity of human nature, a dark, secretive, unscrupulous power, which, far from giving aid and support to statesmanship, is adequate to the commission of any infamy however base or ruinous. Yet this institution is effectively the existing government of the United States; as much so as if it had become incorporated in the Constitution of the country.

—Saturday was a great day for the reform book trade at this office. Nine hundred copies of "Freemasonry at a Glance" pamphlet were shipped, beside a large quantity of other publications.

—Not long since the Cynosure was cheered by a call from Rev. W. P. McNary of Bloomington, Ind., whose labors for Christian reform in southern Indiana have left an impression that cannot be effaced. He was arranging for the publication of a new paper for United Presbyterian readers. With him is associated Rev. A. H. Harshaw, who is classed as a fit associate for Bro. McNary in so important an enterprise. The new paper will be called The Midland, and will issue from St. Louis. An effort to locate the paper in Chicago only failed because of the stronger pledge of pecuniary support which came from the first city.

THE LODGE TERRESTIAL AND CELESTIAL.

BY REV. WILLIAM MOERDYK.

The Sabbath school lesson for Jan. 6th treated of a threatening controversy within the early Christian church. "Paul and Barnabas had no small dissension and disputation" with the false teachers. Now why did not these apostles of the Gentiles keep quiet? why did they engage in controversy, something which is not desirable for its own sake, but to be deprecated? The question was too important and grave for them to hold their peace. The teaching of those teachers was subversive of the faith; it was another Gospel, which is not a gospel, dangerous to the souls of men, and if they had allowed it to take root, it would have destroyed Christianity. It was a time when controversy was an imperative duty.

Nothing is more desirable for the church than to have "peace within her walls." Peace is one of the greatest blessings of the church, one of the best influences for good. But there are times when peace is dangerous and ruinous. Fidelity to saving truth is more important than peace, for without it no church can long exist.

"Let us have peace;" "Give us rest and quiet," is a cry that we have often heard raised, when the question of the evil of oath-bound secret societies was brought up in ecclesiastical assemblies; and men who raise their voice and wield their pen against the sin of Christians associating with these lodges, are branded as disturbers of the church's peace and promoters of schism.

But how can we be silent, convinced in our inmost souls as we are that the teachings, principles and practices of oath-bound secret societies are detrimental to civil liberty and true morality and some of them subversive of the Christian faith. It is reported of the son of Crœsus that he was dumb; but seeing one about to kill his father, his zeal waxed so great that he loosed his tongue, and he cried out, "Will you kill Crœsus?" Shall we then remain dumb when the salvation of souls, and the glory of our Lord are endangered? It would be a crime for one to be silent when he was aware that a fire was smouldering which if not quenched would consume the temple of the Lord.

We maintain that Freemasonry teaches another way of salvation than by the only Saviour Jesus Christ. "Grand Inspector General" Cunningham says: "Genuine Freemasonry is a pure religion." Mackey in his Manual says that a Mason "on the night of his initiation commences the great task which is never in his future Masonic life to be discontinued, of erecting in his heart a spiritual temple for the dwelling of God." And again in his Lexicon that a Mason aims "by a uniform tenor of virtuous conduct, to receive, when his allotted course of life has passed, the inappreciable reward from his Celestial Grand Master of "Well done, thou good," etc. Sickel in his Monitor, speaking of the "common gavel," says: "We as Free and Accepted Masons, are taught to make use of it for the more noble and glorious purpose of divesting our hearts and consciences of all the vices and superfluities of life, thereby fitting our minds as living stones for that spiritual building, that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

These are but specimens of many proofs which might be adduced from Masonic writers of unquestioned authority. And there are now many men of whose piety and veracity there can be no doubt who have felt constrained by their consciences to leave the lodge and move others against the evils by exposing them.

Though pressed with many duties I could not refrain from writing the above, and again raising my voice in concert with others against the Christless or anti-Christian character of Freemasonry, when I read the following obituary notice published in the Milwaukee Sentinel, Jan. 1st, '84:

"IN MEMORIAM.

"Resolutions of respect and condolence passed on St John's evening, by Lake Lodge No. 189, F. and A. M., of Bay View, on the death of Geo. W. Edwards, Sr., who was called to the CELESTIAL LODGE Dec. 25, 1883.

"WHEREAS, The SUPREME ARCHITECT OF THE UNIVERSE has in His infinite wisdom and never-erring providence, removed from our midst our worthy and esteemed brother, by calling him from labor to reward, to which we bow with humble reverence and submission; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the sudden call of our lamented brother from the TERRESTIAL LODGE of which he was a consistent and faithful member for over 20 years, to the CELESTIAL LODGE ABOVE," etc., etc. Signed by the committee.

Comment is unnecessary.

—S. S. Rice, of Pataha City, Garfield county, Washington Territory, writes that it is expected that an Anti-masonic convention will be held in that vicinity in the near future. News of activity in reform work from such remote districts is especially cheering. The heart keeps warm if the extremities are.

A REMARKABLE RENUNCIATION.

To the friends and members of the M. E. church on the Volney and Amboy charges.

DEAR BRETHREN:—We read, "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness;" and again in the history of the Jews in the wilderness if a man did anything sinful he was not counted guilty if he knew not that it was sinful. But when it came to be known to him that the act was a forbidden one, then he became guilty, and was commanded to offer the sacrifice prescribed by the law.

Here is where I find myself to-day. I have sinned. I have offended you, many of you perhaps, personally and grievously, and wish by this means to ask your forgiveness. Personally, brethren Levi Lewis, of Amboy Center, and of him in behalf of his sainted and now departed wife, sister Jane Lewis, who was especially offended, and remonstrated with me but in vain (with shame I write it); also, Austin Wheeler of Mount Pleasant, on the Volney charge; beside, if there be any others who have been annoyed and had their peace of mind disturbed by my relation to Masonry while your pastor, I now ask your and their forgiveness, and say to you, brethren and sisters, I now see Masonry as you did then, and now I do renounce it and all I know of all secretism, forever, desiring to follow carefully Him, who said, "In secret have I said nothing."

I renounced Masonry before my God, four years since, and ought to have done long ago what I do to-day, that I may be restored in your confidence, and our remembrance of each other be sweet after all.

Notwithstanding my offense to you, as I look back over the years I spent among you, those years of feeble effort, I do feel that I tried to do the Lord's work among you faithfully.

I entered Masonry by the advice of some in whom I had the most complete confidence. I will not name them, they have gone to their reward and I hope everlasting rest. I hope they are saved, but if they are it is not by Masonry.

I do not mean to write a sermon on Masonry, but in justice to myself must say, I have never been a Mason in heart. I found it just the opposite of what I expected, and have never been inside a Masonic lodge since I took my third degree in West Amboy, in 1874; and by the help of the Lord I will ever bear faithful testimony with you against this sin; yet with charity and love for all, praying and hoping for the day when our beloved M. E. church shall separate herself from this sin as she did from slavery, bearing clear testimony against it, and hoping that I have your confidence and forgiveness, and that of my Saviour also, "Because I did it ignorantly."

I remain yours in the love of God and of the Gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

E. J. CLEMENS.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 29, 1883.

Leaving Washington at ten o'clock this morning I reached this city after stopping four hours in Baltimore, which appears to be a city of dimensions, wealth and restless anxiety. Bro. Hinman accompanied me to see Rev. Mr. Anderson, United Presbyterian, and Rev. Mr. Crows, Reformed Presbyterian, where we were welcomed. Both expressed a desire to aid in our work. Bro. Hinman tarried and I came on to this city where I expect to spend Sabbath.

I left headquarters at Washingtou with a clear conviction of duty, though not without an effort of the will. It really seemed home-like with the friends in the Christian household of brother and sister Bailey. The very atmosphere is tempered by the happy faces and familiar voices of those we love, and best of all was the morning and evening sacrifice, when we read the Word together, united in "psalms and hymns and spiritual songs," and told the Lord our waywardness, weakness and desires, and brought our thank-offering to the "Giver of every good and perfect gift." Such seasous of refreshing and means of grace are best appreciated after a season of dreary solitude in hotels, among the throng whose convenience is best subserved by keeping out of the way of those who are scrambling for the "uppermost seats."

Washingtou has its full share of self-seekers with eye on the treasury, echoing the horse leech's creed, who stand with extended hand, crying "Give, give!" Not all are thus mercenary. There are a few even in our nation's metropolis whose faces are a benediction to look upon. These are the "elect according to the foreknowledge of the Father," who like Enoch have chosen to "walk with God" rather than "enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season." While sin in Washington is exceeding sinful, true Christians are not unlike to the disciples of Christ anywhere.

There was much business demanding attention but the united and harmonious counsels of Pres. Blanchard, Senator Pomeroy and those of us less experienced, has given renewed strength and a forward impulse to the Washington wing of our movement. Yesterday was a field day in which Bro. Bailey and I attacked certain bills with decided success. The taxes, insurance and sundry accounts incident to "moving in" were readily disposed of, but when we came to the question of interest it took $126.04 to obtain a six-month's truce; when, unless the debt is routed, the conflict must be renewed. This is all fair and honest, but is there not "a more excellent way' by which this amount could be saved to the cause? Bro. Bailey will report results of our several conferences in due time and I anticipate that it will give new courage to all our friends. J. P. STODDARD.

FROM THE SOUTHERN ILLINOIS COL-PORTEUR.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I am glad to report progress in the work in this part of the State. I have canvassed the greater part of three counties (Randolph, Perry and Washington) and with good success. I find the young men are discussing the question in the literary societies in the form of debate. I attended and also took part in a discussion last Friday evening on this subject. Masonry was defended by the sons of a Mason. I was equal to the occasion and have been requested to attend another discussion next Friday evening. I think this will bring the subject before the people in the true light. May the Lord hasten the time when all men shall see it as it is.

JOHN K. HUNTER.

—Bro. M. N. Butler, Missouri lecturer, is unwilling the lodges should have peace about him. He spoke lately at the Salem church, near Albany, and had an appointment at Crab Orchard on Saturday evening last. He has also secured the services of a lady speaker, Mrs. Emma Butler, who lately gave a modest but eloquent address which is published in the American Freeman.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A NEW YEAR CONGRATULATION.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—We are both older than when we first got acquainted and we may at the beginning of another year indulge in a reflection or two as well as others. One is that mundane affairs are all under the law of uncertainty. Uncertainty is like the ague; it shakes people whether they will or not. It clouds our New Year joys, for we can't tell if we shall again see the happy faces next New Year. Young or old may be gone from sight. Even societies are changing and so whilst we try to strengthen the good and weaken the evil ones there are often such changes as seem to frustrate our most ardent hopes. But there is also the bright side. And thus as the old workers make room for the new there is often increased power and wise adaptation to new circumstances which tell for good.

Let me congratulate you, my dear Cynosure, on your past honorable and consistent course. Your flag has ever been displayed to friend and foe. You have ever been found where freedom of speech and Christian liberty of action called for defense, and have never shrunk from the foes of these first principles of our Christian civilization. You have assailed with the smooth pebble of truth the hosts of lodgery and their dreaded Goliahs, and displayed their ghastly heads as trophies of your prowess. But you have stood modestly—not in your own strength—and ever ready to acknowledge the only name given under heaven among men whereby they must be saved. In the Divine Strength may you go on as the advocate and defender of civil and religious liberty, and equally ready to be aggressive upon the anti-Christs and usurpers which would deprive our country of these blessings and enslave our people under the delusive secretisms which are so actively at work among them.

It is to me a most strange thing that so many of our religious papers, of our reverends and of our churches seem asleep in regard to "the religion of Masonry"—a system which teaches salvation without Christ, and a brotherhood which ignores him as the Saviour. The majority of the nation may float along in disregard of these strange anti-Christian features of Masonry, but it must wake up to its dangers as certainly as it did too late to those of slavery if it would escape the sad consequences of neglect!

You, dear Cynosure, have faithfully sounded your trumpet, and your readers are of those who pray that your warnings may be duly heeded ere the penalty shall again rend society asunder—amid all the uncertainty of divided households—and the absence of any color line to mark the secretists in the family, or in society, or in the churches, or in courts of law, or in municipalities, or in our State or National legislatures, or in our executive from policeman to President!

Who could have imagined that amid our wondrous prosperity Romanism and Mormonism and divorce and lodgery could have obtained such success! That our Sunday schools and churches should have still so much to do to withstand these anti-Christs among us!

But we have much to be thankful for in this New Year. We have greater opportunities than ever before to reach larger numbers of our race, and teach them of the glorious liberty and blessings there are in the Lord Jesus Christ. Before his light all darkness must disappear and there shall be peace over the earth and good will toward all men. T. FITCH.

DRIED UP AND FROZEN.

PITTSTON, Me.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—The Cynosure of Sept. 27th reported D. L. Moody at the great Christian convention in Farwell Hall as comparing many Christians to a farmer's well, which "dried up in summer and froze up in winter."

If Mr. Moody had said professing Christians or church members I would not have noticed it, for we read that "many walk who are the enemies of the cross of Christ." But he said "Christians," and it appeared to me that it was a reflection on the Christian's God as not being a perfect Saviour.

Christ said to the woman at the well, "But whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up unto everlasting life." John 4: 14. Such an one will not go dry like the farmer's well. "He that believeth on me as the Scripture hath said, out of him shall flow rivers of living water. But this spake he of the Spirit, which all they that believe on him should receive." John 7: 38, 39.

Now the question arises, have these dried or frozen ones got their living water in them? Christ says this water is the Spirit, and it shall spring up, not for a revival season of a month or two, but unto everlasting life. In other places he tells us his Spirit is to abide with us forever, and he is to be received by believing. The persons under consideration must be under condemnation, broken cisterns; showing by their barrenness that they have not this water, and consequently have not believed. Then again, Jeremiah speaking of the one who trusts God or the Christian: "He shall be like a tree planted by the waters, and that spreadeth out her roots by the river, and shall not see when heat cometh, but her leaf shall be green; and shall not be careful in the year of drouth, neither shall cease from yielding fruit." Jer. 17: 8.

David also tells us what a Christian is like: "Those that be planted in the house of the Lord shall flourish in the courts of our God. They shall still bring forth fruit in old age. . . . To shew that the Lord is upright." Ps. 92. We see here that fruit-bearing is the only way to show that the Lord is upright, able, and does nourish his children. What, then, is a true Bible Christian? He is one in whom Christ by his Spirit dwells (Gal. 2: 20); one whose body is the temple of the Holy Ghost (1 Cor. 3: 16); one in whom God works to will and do (Phi. 2: 13); one whose members are yielded up as instruments of righteousness unto holiness (Rom. 6: 13); one who loves not the world, neither the things that are in the world (1 John 2: 15): one in whom is the water of life springing up and running over (John 7: 38). He is like a city set on a hill which cannot be hid. He is like the candle that giveth light to all that are in the house.

The great fault of the present day is in teaching people to believe they are Christians, only they are too much conformed to the world; or they are wavering in their duties and faith; or they have not the baptism of the Holy Ghost; or a dozen other onlys. Would it not be far better to take these dried and frozen ones and show them, as Paul did the Corinthians, that, whereas ye have all these faults, "are ye not carnal?" "Ye are yet in your sins."

Pure religion begins within, and when once the tree is made good the leaves and fruit will of necessity be good and abundant as a course of nature. The world is starving for a pure Gospel. Let us who know God's power to save ever proclaim that when God saves he saves to the uttermost, and gives life to every one he receives. Ye cannot serve God and mammon. We cannot be born into the kingdom and not live in it. As sure as the physical man lives and develops after he is born, just so sure does the spiritual man live and grow after the new birth.

F. M. MITCHELL.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

PASADENA, Cal., Dec. 18, 1883.

Dear are the recollections of childhood, and no less so are the recollections of the associations of kind friends and neighbors we left behind in Iowa. Here we have had no callers, such as Bros. Stoddard, Rathbun, Ronayne, Mathews and others, to cheer us in reform work and lecture for us; yet we are glad to know they with others are still pushing forward the Lord's glorious work. Here in sight of the great Pacific we find but few outspoken anti-secretists. As a rule this State is cursed with secret societies of nearly all kinds, and consequently, as we might expect, it is cursed with many saloons. Here in Pasadena, nine miles from Los Angeles, is an exception to the above. They are almost unanimous here on the temperance question. Some have tried to get a place to sell drink here but have been refused, and it is declared by both men and women that no saloon shall stand if built here.

There is a wonderful "boom" here now and the prices of land are still advancing since the railway and Raymond hotel work has commenced. The hotel is to be built on quite an elevation where all can see the whole San Gabriel valley for eighty miles east and west, and north to the Sierra Madre Mountains; and in casting the eye south can plainly be seen the broad Pacific with San Pedro harbor with its sail and steam ships; Dead Man's Island, where Gen. Fremont buried his dead, and Catalena Island thirty miles out in the ocean. We can see this island and the ocean from our own door. Pasadena is building up fast with Eastern people and resident lots from one to five and ten acres are selling here from five to fifteen hundred dollars per acre owing to improvements, but here in a beautiful and healthful locality where we get mountain and sea breeze every day, people will come and will have homes, no matter what the cost, among the lemon, orange and banana groves; with the warm, healthy climate. Dry land without irrigation privileges can be had close by, from $80 to $150 per acre, on which can be grown very profitably all kinds of deciduous fruits, such as peach, apricot, pear, plum, apple, fig, prune, etc. We have plenty of fresh tomatoes yet on the vines, and perhaps will have all winter, as some vines near the mountains of three years' growth are still bearing, but they get smaller every year and it is best to put out fresh plants every spring. The lemon trees now show ripe and green fruit intermingled with bloom. The oranges are beginning to show their yellow tinge, and some early varieties are already fit to use, while on other later varieties, last year's crop is still on the trees.

The cost of living here is a little more than in the Eastern States, but wages are higher. We have had two nice rains this fall and many have their wheat and barley sowed; but it will do very well sowed any time between now and the 15th of March. Taking it all in all I have found no place where I think men could live happier than here; and as I want many of my friends to come and see this part of the world, for this purpose, and not for my own profit, I am arranging for an excursion from Oskaloosa, Iowa, to Los Angeles, where those wishing to come and see for themselves can have an opportunity. The round trip ticket will be (I think) a little less than $100, with the privilege of staying sixty or ninety days. All those wishing to avail themselves of this opportunity will write me at once to Pasadena, Los Angeles Co., Cal., and I will give them the exact time for starting from Oskaloosa. We expect to start the first or second week in February. Each one going should be provided with three good blankets. T. K. BUFKIN.

PITH AND POINT.

WELL STOPPED.

I have recently saved one man of influence and means from going into the fraternity, after he had been balloted for in the lodge, and they are mad enough about it. I am sending the Cynosure out through this entire country from Council Grove to Alma. I am preparing for a discussion during the winter.—Jesse Hunter, Beman, Kans.

PRAY FOR OUR RULERS.

During President Garfield's sickness much prayer was offered for his recovery and for the Nation's welfare; and shortly after his death a writer in the Cynosure suggested the idea that there was then more urgent need of prayer than while Garfield lived, now that a man with Chester A. Arthur's antecedents had taken his place as ruler of our Nation; and were not these prayers answered, since Arthur has been a better ruler than from his former career we had any reason to expect? I think this is so; and now let another wave of prayer go through the land, that he may be still more firmly fenced about from evil, both in his official station and in his private life, than he has been, and may we not expect this when we remember that our God is a prayer-hearing God, and from him alone, not man, can we expect help. And then let not the church of Christ neglect to pray, both in the closet and elsewhere, that God will so cause that which is just and right to prevail, that righteous, God-fearing men will be elected to rule this Nation in 1884. Every Christian has a duty to do in this regard, and who will dare neglect it? M. P. N.

HOW STAND THE PREACHERS?

There are two ministers in our town. Mr. Nugent, a Presbyterian minister, who is a Mason and came out boldly (soon after we had an anti-secret lecture here) placing the lodge above the church. The other, a miuister in the Society of Friends, who will not say a word against the lodge, and was not pleased when we opened our meeting house for working the degrees a few years ago. What can we expect from such leaders? Others who were in favor of the reform a few years ago have sons that have joined the Odd-fellows which has silenced them. I noticed in the Cynosure an account of J. H. Douglas's meeting. I wish thee to know he stood up to speak favorably of the lodge in our last yearly meeting, and we feel satisfied that he and Luke Woodward have dropped the fundamental principles of Friends. It is sorrowful, but true, that many of our ministers are joining hands with the lodge and the world instead of following Him who is meek and lowly of heart. May heaven's richest blessings rest upon all the workers in this reform.—Minerva Harvey, Pleasant Plain, Iowa.

WHY PROHIBITION DON'T PROHIBIT.

From our general knowledge of human nature we often suppose a certain evil exists, but it is so well concealed it is almost impossible to prove it. Of this nature is the following "pointer" overheard recently. A man telling a friend how to evade a prohibition statute in a certain town, said: "You will have no trouble if you are either a Mason or an Odd-fellow."—A. F. Act.

A GOOD WORD FOR DR. INSKIP.

I was very sorry to see the fling made at that old strong man of God, dear man Inskip, who is now lying in the hand of his Master as between life and death. I do not belong to his branch of the church of Christ; however, I do feel the closest tie of Christian fellowship as in dear Jesus between his soul and my own. I have seen more of the work of the blessed Holy Spirit under his teaching than any other human instrumentality. I have seen more men publicly renounce the very evils your paper prominently denounces, such as Masonry, etc., under his and his co-laborer, of the National Camp-meeting for the Promotion of Holiness, than under any other; such was his strength with God and man in the days of his meridian power a few years since. Now that that the strength of his grand life in the uplifting of humanity is perhaps over, it makes me sad to see such paragraphs as I refer to on the first page of Dec. 27th number, 1883. Yours for the destruction of the works of the devil and the upbuilding of the cause of dear Jesus Christ.—J. Steer.

RESPONSE FROM OREGON.

To Rev. J. L. Barlow, Pastor of the Berean Baptist Church, of Willimantie, Conn.

MY MUCH ESTEEMED BRO.—Words are inadequate to express the gratitude of my heart to you for your words of encouragement which have so recently appeared in the columns of the Christian Cynosure.

Being so pressed with pastoral work, together with the out-stations, I have not had time to give you the attention which I should have done, and even now, brevity must be the order.

Believing as I do, that you possess an unusual stock of patience, I have not allowed myself to worry, and yet, I do with all my heart, ask your pardon, in the event my delay has disappointed your expectations.

First, I fear you misunderstood me, from what you said in your first letter. I have had no thoughts of entaring the field as a lecturer; and yet I would not fear the results, provided I felt adequate for the task; but I must leave that to other and better men. But I am very desirous of gaining all the information possible upon the subject of organized secrecy, for I want to make "full proof of my ministry," and the question has often been suggested to my mind, and very forcibly too, how can I do so and be silent upon this great and popular evil? I want, I need very much your prayers, your fervent prayers, my brother, your unlimited sympathy and counsel.

I was not a stranger to the fact that in addressing you through the Cynosure in the estimation of many of our own beloved denomination, I was issuing my death-warrant; but I hope that I esteem the reproaches of Christ greater riches than the treasures of this world, or the praise of men.

I am more than ever forced to the conclusion that I have been an observer too long, yet I am troubled to know just how to work successfully for the cause of Christ. W. H. PRUETT.

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON III.—January 20, 1884.—The power of the tongue. Jas. 3:1-18.

GOLDEN TEXT.—By thy words thou shalt be justified and by thy words thou shalt be condemned. Matt. 12:37.

"Be not many masters," rather teachers. In those times in the synagogues, each person in turn could rise and teach (1 Cor. 14:26-33). St. James exhorts against the too eager and too general assumption of this privilege.—Alford. Let it be supposed that there was a prevailing desire among those to whom he wrote to become public teachers, without much regard for the proper qualifications for that office, and the interpretation of the chapter will become easy.—Barnes. This warning is not against uttering our experiences in social meetings, but against (1) the desire to be leaders, to be prominent, to be called Rabbi by the multitude, the "aut Cæsar aut nullus" ("Cæsar or nothing") feeling. This desire to be masters and teachers has ruined many people's usefulness. In the church, of all places, the office should seek the man, not the man the office. (2) Against the imposing our opinions on others, and the assurance that we are all right and others all wrong. (3) Against setting forth half-formed opinions, private speculations, in public. Let us be learners before we are teachers, and teach only that which we do know.—Peloubet.

"If any man offend not in word." This liability is very great in every one, but it is especially "great in an office where the very business is public speaking. If anywhere the improper use of the tongue will do mischief, it is in the office of a religious teacher."—Barnes. "The same is a perfect man." Why? Because the tongue is the easiest outlet and means of expression for the feelings and passions of the soul. So that it requires stronger self-government to control the tongue than any other avenue of the soul's expression. So that he who is able to control the tongue, must of necessity be able to control all the other members of the body. He that doeth the greatest can do the least. He that can bridle his tongue, is "able to bridle also the whole body."—Peloubet.

"A little fire kindleth." The smallest match can kindle the fire that could burn the largest city, or the forests on a thousand hills. You cannot stop the consequences of a slander; you may publicly prove its falsehood, you may sift every atom, explain, annihilate it, and yet years after you had thought that all had been disposed of forever, the mention of a name wakes up associations in the mind of some one who heard the calumny, but never heard or never attended to the refutation.—F. W. Robertson.

"A world of iniquity." A little world of evil in itself. It is meant that all kinds of evil that are in the world are exhibited there in miniature; it seems to concentrate all sorts of iniquity that exist on the earth. And what evil is there which may not be originated or fomented by the tongue? What else is there that might, with so much propriety, be represented as a little world of iniquity? With all the good which it does, who can estimate the amount of evil which it causes? Who can measure the evils which arise from scandal, and slander, and profaneness, and perjury, and falsehood, and blasphemy, and obscenity, and the inculcation of error, by the tongue? Who can gauge the amount of broils, and contentions, and strifes, and wars, and suspicions and enmities, and alienations among friends and neighbors, which it produces? Who can number the evils produced by the "honeyed" words of the seducer, or by the tongue of the eloquent in the maintenance of error and the defense of wrong? If all men were struck dumb, what a portion of the crimes of the world would soon cease! If all men would speak only that which ought to be spoken, what a change would come over the face of human affairs!—Barnes. "Setteth on fire the course of nature." (1) The orb of creation; or (2) it inflames with various lusts, wrath, malice, wantonness, pride, etc., the whole course of man's life, so that there is no state nor age free from the evils of it. Whereas other vices either do not extend to the whole man, or are abated with age, the vices of the tongue reach the whole man, and the whole time of his life.—Pool. "Set on fire of hell." These words are not to be explained away, but are to be literally taken. It is the devil, for whom hell is prepared, that is the tempter and instigator of the habitual sins of the tongue.—Alford. Hell is represented as a place where fire is continually burning. Nothing could better characterize much of that which the tongue does, than to say that it has its origin in hell, and has the spirit which reigns there. The very spirit of that world of fire and wickedness—a spirit of falsehood, and slander, and blasphemy, and pollution—seems to inspire the tongue.—Barnes.

"But the tongue can no man tame." Is this one's own tongue, or the tongue of another? St. James makes no distinction. Simply man cannot tame it, though he can tame all else! Yet the context shows that he is thinking of self-control.—Cook.

'Tis slander;
Whose edge is sharper than the sword; whose tongue
Outvenoms all the worms of Nile; whose breath
Rides on the posting winds, and doth belie
All corners of the world: kings, queens, and states,
Maids, matrons, nay the secrets of the grave
This viperous slander enters.—Shakespeare in Cymbeline.

"With meekness." Meekness is love at school—love at the Saviour's school. It is the disciple learning the defects of his own character, and taking hints from hostile as well as friendly monitors. It is the disciple praying and watching for the improvement of his talents, the mellowing of his temper, and the amelioration of his character. It is the living Christian at the Saviour's feet, learning of him who is meek and lowly, and finding rest for his own soul.—Hamilton.

"This wisdom descendeth not from above." The wisdom here referred to is that carnal or worldly wisdom which produces strife and contention; that kind of knowledge which leads to self-conceit, and which prompts a man to defend his opinions with overheated zeal. In the contentions which are in the world in church and state; in neighborhoods and families; at the bar, in political life, and in theological disputes; even where there is the manifestation of enraged and irascible feeling, there is often much of a certain kind of wisdom. There is learning, shrewdness, tact, logical skill, subtle and skillful argumentation—"making the worse appear the better reason;" but all this is often connected with a spirit so narrow, bigoted and contentious, as to show clearly that it has not its origin above.—Barnes.

"Of them that make peace." By those who desire to produce peace, or who are of a peaceful temper and disposition. They are engaged everywhere in scattering these blessed seeds of peace, contentment and order; and the result shall be a glorious harvest for themselves and for mankind,—a harvest rich and abundant on earth and in heaven. The whole effect, therefore, of religion is to produce peace. It is all peace, peace in its origin and in its results, in the heart of the individual, and in society; on earth and in heaven.—Barnes. Whatever we do in this life is seed. As we sow, so shall we reap.—T. Manton. Let every one of God's ministers be ambitious of that praise which Gregory Nazianzen gives to Athaseus, viz., to be an adamant to them that strike, and a loadstone to them that dissent from him—the one not to be removed with wrong, the other to draw those hearts that disagree; so the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace.—Bishop Hall.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

The Lodge Teaches Habits of Profanity and Falsehood.

1. The tongue is largely controlled by the power of habit. One who gets the habit of speaking falsely or profanely finds it very difficult to break. So we ought to beware of anything which tends to make us careless in this regard.

2. Freemasonry cultivates a spirit of profanity. In the "Mystic Tie" it is shown that in the first three degrees of Masonry there are no less than twenty distinct oaths, while a man who goes as high as the 33d takes several hundred, all imprecating terrible bodily torments, and in the Knight Templar's degree even invoking God's wrath on his soul if he fails to keep a single one of his obligations.

3 Many, perhaps most persons when they take the oath of the first degree, of which John Quincy Adams said, "It is one of which a common cannibal ought to be ashamed," are shocked and startled; but as they go on to take the others their consciences trouble them less and less; and in the end they lose all reverence for that Holy Name which they take on their lips so carelessly.

4. Many Masons say these oaths are mere forms which do not mean anything. If so the case is worse still, for it is calling upon God to witness a lie.

5. Masonry teaches falsehood by swearing its candidates "ever to conceal" its secrets. It is possible to be truthful and conceal secrets which have never been revealed, but when any school boy can buy them for fifty cents, the very attempt to conceal them involves the guilt of lying.

6. It teaches slander of those who oppose them. Many good men have suffered all their lives in their business and reputation from Masonic falsehoods.

7. When Masons say that the secrets have never been exposed, that Morgan never was murdered, etc., they act in consistency with Masonic teachings, and are good Masons.

8. It is not strange when men are taught that to break a wicked oath is a worse sin than to tell a falsehood they should finally come to have very little regard for the truth.

9. Many people say that there is good as well as evil in Masonry, but one taste of such bitter waters ought to satisfy us. "A fountain cannot send forth from the same place sweet water and bitter."

Light from the Word.

In what manner should an oath be taken? Jer. 4:2. Is there truth, judgment or righteousness in Masonic oaths? Who in Christ's time put a wicked oath above the fifth Commandment? Mark 7:11. What is said of the lying tongue? Prov. 6:16, 17. Of the slanderous tongue? Ps. 64:3, 4; 120:3, 4. Does Christ say the same thing James says? Matt. 7:16. Then can we reasonably expect any good from Masonry?

The St. Paul, Minn., Daily Dispatch of the 21st ult. has a creditable notice of Samuel D. Green's wonderful narrative, "The Broken Seal." The hand of Bro. Fenton is in this.

The liquor traffic can be suppressed, as has been abundantly proved by the results of efforts in that direction in many hundreds of localities where it has been entirely swept away by law or has been greatly diminished in volume. These localities are to be found in Canada, in almost every one of our States, and in hundreds of localities in the United Kingdom.—Exchange.

—The Presbyterian church has now a hundred congregations in Mexico, and several good schools; also ten native preachers, and four more ready for ordination. The work is one of great interest. Our missionaries there are working with great wisdom and consecration, and they should have the prayers and abundant aid of all who love the truth.—Evangelist.

FARM NOTES.

FOR a profitable dairy, do not buy cows, but raise them. Keep a careful record of every milking, and make frequent tests of the butter quality of every cow's milk. Raise the heifers of only the best third of the herd, not the favorite cows, but those of the best record. Use only good bulls—the bull is half the herd. Dispose of two or three cows, or preferably of one-fourth of the herd, selecting the poorest cow, by the record every year. This is the vital point—to make the dairy pay, cull the herd.

OBSTINATE and viscious horses, by having their attention removed from the object on which their mind is bent, can be made much more tractable than they otherwise would be. Some are very difficult to shoe, showing a disposition to bite and kick whenever the shoer touches them. A few grains of the etherial oil of parsley dropped on a handkerchief and placed before the nose of the horse, it is said never fails to quiet his irritable disposition and make him for the time being perfectly manageable.

WINTER CARE OF GRAPE VINES.—It is a very easy matter to give grape vines a little protection in the winter, which will be of material service to them the coming season. Of course the few very hardy varieties will get along without any special care or protection, but it will pay to help them a little, when it can be so easily done. Where one has but a few vines, and especially young ones of one or two canes, they should be neatly enclosed in straw and snugly tied up. If they are too large for that treatment and have been trellised, take them from the frame and lay them on the ground. If you have any coarse litter, straw or vines, throw it over them as they lay on the ground, and lay a board or two over the over the litter to keep it in place. If you have no litter lay the vines on the ground and weight them. This will keep them from the action of the severe winter winds which, more than the freezing, do the mischief. It is such an easy thing to do and pays so well in increased productiveness, that we wonder that it is not more generally practiced by all who have vines.—Fruit Recorder.

THE BEST BUSINESS.—The Practical Farmer relates an instance of a nice boy from the country, who, having come into possession of a few thousand dollars, visited an uncle in the city, an old merchant, to get his advice about investing his capital in business. "Go back to the country, young man," said the merchant, "and invest your money in land. Buy a farm, settle down on it, and do a safe business. I have been in business nearly forty years, and have accumulated a fortune; but it has been done by fearful risk, heavy responsibility, constant toil and worrying anxieties. A dozen times I have been on the verge of bankruptcy, and twice I have been sorely tempted to take my own life. Of ten men who commenced business here when I did, only one besides myself succeeded. The rest all failed, one after another, some dragging their families to poverty and disgrace. Take my advice. Keep away from the city and its delusive business avenues. Quiet contentment on a moderate competency in the country is the best fortune I could wish you."

An Awful Responsibility.

EVERYBODY has something to say about consumption. We all deplore its terrible ravages, but only a few of us seem to have enough common sense to take the proper means of preventing it. It is as simple as "two and two are four," that Hale's Honey of Horehound and Tar, taken as a remedy for coughs, colds, difficult breathing, hoarseness, or any of the symptoms which pave the way for that terrible destroyer, will effect a radical and rapid cure of the ailment, and avert all danger. Whoever, under these circumstances, neglects to resort to the true specific, assumes a fearful responsibility. Sold by druggists.

NOTICE.

Persons write occasionally, saying, "I sent a remittance so and so, but the tag on my paper it not changed." Such inquiries are proper, and the explanation is this: when a subscription is received it is entered at once on the book and the letter filed for future reference if needed, but the printed mailing list is not changed until a sufficient number are received to require the printing of a new list. If but few subscriptions are received, the change may be delayed for a month or more, but when the list fills up rapidly it requires frequent revision. If the date on your paper is not changed within four weeks after you remit it is the safest way to drop a card to this office

CATARRH CURED.

A Clergyman, after suffering a number of years from that dreadful disease Catarrh, and after trying every known remedy without success, at last found a prescription which completely cured and saved him from death. The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JANUARY 10, 1884.

MANY THANKS

are due and are hereby heartily given to the hundreds of kind friends whose hearts God hath touched to do a little personal work for the extension of the truth through the Cynosure. May a new zeal be given them with the new year, and may the blessed contagion of their example affect hundreds more who shall be both readers and workers, "hearers and doers" in our campaign for the Lord Jesus Christ. The business which their letters make in the N. C. A. office has for several days required additional clerical force to attend to subscriptions, book orders, etc. Let the good work go on. If every reader makes it a personal matter it will.

THE WASHINGTON POST, Dec. 31, contains a statement that O'Donnell, the murderer of Carey, was leader and instigator of the Molly Maguire murders in this country for years, but was shielded and hidden by "Irish secret societies."

ELIAS HICKS was Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Freemasons in New York from 1817 to 1825. Can it be possible that he was the Elias Hicks, founder of the Hicksite branch of the Friends. The Quaker Elias Hicks was born, lived and died in the State of New York, and was active during the above years. Will our Indiana "Quaker Boy," find and print the facts carefully ascertained?

THE WASHINGTON POST says truly, the Constitution gives no authority for any tariff but only for a tax to support government, and hence, when a tariff goes beyond revenue, it is as unconstitutional as a state or county tax beyond the wants of the governmental expense. In this the Post is sensible and correct, as also when it adds, every cent of tariff protects the manufacture, in this country, of the thing on which the tariff is laid. Hence a "tariff for revenue" is "a tariff for protection," and to pretend to found a party or parties on a distinction between them, is to gull and deceive the people.

THE NEW YEAR.—It is 12 o'clock, Dec. 31, night. The chimes in the church towers are ringing out the old, and ringing in the new year; and fire arms are exploding all over and around the city of Washington. Far more appropriate are the prayers which are ascending from Methodist watchnights in many churches of the city; and these exhilarating notices of the lapse of time are far better than the mockeries of Christmas. The old and staid papers of Philadelphia, and one here in Washington, noticed that Christmas carousals had forgotten Christ; and, in the social rage of gift-making, multitudes forgot to pay their debts.

WE REGRET that a patent medicine advertisement tacked itself to a startling notice of the red glow of the evening heavens of late. Such things are unbefitting the Cynosure, and disgust sensible persons with the man and his medicine, however good. No explanation has been given by science of this wonderful celestial phenomenon. If caused by the tail of a comet, as some astronomer suggests, it would have staid all night, as comets are wont to do. Its glow has been certainly and mysteriously sublime, and points the thoughtful mind to that light which shall attend the "coming of the Son of Man."

NATIONAL BANK NOTES.—We seldom see an editorial in the New York Weekly Witness from which we dissent. The following, however, must be an exception. Mr. Dougal says:

> National bank note circulation presents some of the most interesting questions of the present day. Is the circulation of bank notes guaranteed by the National Government, and consequently a perfectly safe and uniform paper currency redeemable in coin at any time, desirable? Is that guarantee to be based on the deposits of National bonds by the banks for the full value of the bills issued? Is it desirable to leave at least as much of the National debt permanently unpaid as will constitute this guarantee? These questions should be answered in the affirmative, we think.

While most of the above is sound, we dissent from the doctrine of a perpetual national debt. "Owe no man anything" is as good a rule for nations as for individuals. Nor do we see any difficulty or evil in the present national banks calling in their bills, allowing the bonds on which those bills are predicated to be paid off and cancelled, and the banks confining themselves to the legitimate banking business of loans, safes for deposit and exchange; and let treasury notes fill the void made by the withdrawal of their bills.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

HON. FRED'K. DOUGLASS.

This gentleman has declared his intention to attend the Washington Convention Feb. 20-22, if "alive and able to get there." He says he would be happy to meet his old friend George W. Clark, the singer, and listen in his songs to the sweet echoes of the past. The committee have requested Mr. Douglass to address the convention in explanation and enforcement of the 5th plank of the American platform, viz:

> "That the Civil Rights secured to every American citizen by the Thirteenth, Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments to our Constitution should be preserved inviolate."

As Mr. Douglass owes no sworn allegiance to any secret order or clan, and as nearly as many colored people have been scourged, mangled and murdered by secret Ku-Klux societies since the war, as fell in the war itself; and as the laboring colored people (and they are almost all laborers) are now swindled out of their earnings, their families and churches starved, their morals debased, and their intellects deteriorated, by the false mysteries, gaudy trappings and vain titles of secret societies, we see not well, if Mr. Douglass speaks to us, how he can avoid giving some words of explanation and advice to the much-enduring race," whose deliverance has been the pole-star of his public life on the great question of the age.

HUMAN HORRORS.

The Washington Republican is now giving its readers chapter on chapter of such horrors as the following, which in its Dec. 22 issue, among other cases disputes the supremacy of unutterableness. The article says that Chief Justice Waite declared that it made him so sick to sit in such trials; that he must give up the terrible task to others. Says the Republican:

> Here is a representative case, which occurred soon after the Ellenton massacre in 1876. A band of murderers made a midnight raid on the residence of an old colored woman and her nephew. Despite the piteous pleadings of the old woman, they dragged the nephew out of bed.
> "Gentlemen," he cried, "I've done nothing. I've not 'lectioneered since you whipped me three weeks ago, and I'll never 'lectioneer any more!"
>
> "Why, you black———," mockingly replied one of the Ku-Kluxers, "we've not come to whip you! Don't be afraid of that! We've only come to kill you, that's all!"
>
> Then out into the darkness they dragged him. They made him wade into the middle of the Broad river and kneel down on what they called "the holy stone." The leader chose several of the gang to shoot at him from the bank. After enjoying the fun for some time, one of the shooters got impatient and jumped into the river and rushed at the victim. Tearing his mask from his face the Ku-Kluxer shouted: "You d———d black dog, I want you to see who killed you;" and then he literally shot the face off the negro.
> "Now, aunty," softly inquired one of the judges at the trial—a pin could be heard drop in the court-room—"how did you recognizs these men who came to your house and took your nephew out and killed him?"
>
> "Why, Lor', mas'r—I orter know 'em; I nussed 'em!"
> And it was God's truth. These men had suckled at that black breast! Of course she recognized them.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL MINISTERS of Washington are generally (not all) Freemasons; one of them said, nine-tenths are, another said thirteen-fourteenths, and both my informants said they were Masons. This (Monday) morning, Bro. Bailey and myself attended the weekly M. E. ministers' meeting here, and were well and courteously received. I addressed them somewhat at length, and they gave a respectful attention, though I stated our doctrine to be that the secret lodge system is an opposition religion and so organized hostility to Christ.

THE THREE CONVENTIONS

agreed on in a late consultation of Americans and Prohibitionists, to be held in Washington, Northampton, Massachusetts, and in Ohio, are, we hear hailed as eminently wise and right. Years ago Mr. Conant said the majority of Prohibitionists in Connecticut are anti-secret as well. We have a conditional hope of a strong Prohibition candidate to preside at the Northampton meeting, and hope soon to announce him as certain. Senator Pomeroy is giving his earnest and profound thought to these conventions. Secretary Stoddard and Mr. Hinman will work in concentric circles around the Washington convention till it comes off (Feb. 20th), and the programme of speakers will be announced as soon as filled. Meanwhile incidents are all the time occurring which indicate the progress of public sentiment in favor of original American doctrines, and against the false oaths, sham titles, blasphemies, and idolatries of those murder-factories called lodges.

PAYING FOR THE SLAVES FREED BY LINCOLN'S PROCLAMATION.

The stately and talented Philadelphia North American, says:

> "The views of a Georgia statesman, set forth in the Atlanta Constitution newspaper, are not novel enough to startle anybody, yet they show how fondly men cling to a chimera, even in an eminently prosy and practical world. Mr. H. H. Carlton, inspired by the much-talked-about Treasury surplus, no doubt, comes forward and attempts to prove that the lost slave property of the South is a valid lien upon the Federal Treasury. He would keep on raising a hundred millions of excessive revenue annually in order to hand it over to the slave-owners who were deprived of their property by the fortunes of war. The North, he says, was enriched by the misfortunes of the South. It grew opulent while the South was overwhelmed by bankruptcy. And he regards compensation for the loss of slaves a measure of reconciliation. 'If you want to reconcile the South,' says Mr. Carlton, in substance, 'compensate us for our slaves and refund the cotton tax unjustly levied upon our people.' He thinks the sense of justice will move the North to agree to these measures of reconciliation."

Here in Washington similar hopes and opinions have been expressed to us. The Philadelphia American argues: "If there is a wilder vagery than this entertained by any living creature we cannot conceive of it. The idea of holding property in man revolted the entire North thirty years ago," etc. But Lord Brougham had better said long before, "While men despise fraud, and loathe rapine, and abhor blood, they shall forever reject, with indignation, the wild and guilty phantasy that man can hold property in man."

B.

THE WEEK OF PRAYER.

It will possibly be of no little help to many Christians who are observing this season to learn of the origin of the custom and mark how we have departed from its original and Scriptural purpose. The warning, that the setting apart of this stated time year by year leads to a formal and cold-hearted religion, and a neglect of the one day in seven given by God for his work and worship, and also to a neglect of the call of the Holy Spirit for special prayer and effort must, not be unheeded; and if in answer to prayer the Spirit shall lead us to a better understanding of these dangers, may we have grace to avoid them. The origin of the appointment is given thus in the Northern Christian Advocate:

"It is twenty-five years ago, just after the terrible mutiny in India, the Lodiana mission in that country, at its annual meeting in November, 1858, passed a series of resolutions written by the late Rev. John H. Morrison, D. D., recommending the devotion of the second week in January, 1860, as a special period for prayer throughout the Christian world. The one special object to be sought in this world-wide supplication was, "that God would pour out His Spirit upon all flesh, so that all the Earth might see his salvation," according to the promise of Joel 2: 28. The son of Dr. Morrison, now in this country (W. J. P. Morrison, Walnut Hills, Ohio), sends out a circular in which is reprinted the original call for a week of prayer, and in which he respectfully asks the Christian church during the coming week of prayer for 1883 to devote the days to the simple but sublime original purpose of supplicating the outpouring of the Spirit of God. He says truly that we have the whole year for the consideration of other topics usually discussed and prayed for in these meetings, and that it is peculiarly appropriate and proper for the whole church throughout the world once a year to unite in humiliation and confession and special consecration and thanksgiving for what God had wrought and in earnest and continued prayer for the special blessings of the Holy Spirit."

—Rev. W. O. Tobey, pastor of the King St. United Brethren church, Chambersburg, Pa., and editor of the United Brethren in Christ, has been for some weeks laid aside by sickness and unable to attend to editorial work. For this reason also he did not attend the Philadelphia convention. He is recovering slowly and we hope will be soon again at his post.

—The renunciation of E. J. Clemens of Clayville, New York, with his personal explanation to a few Christian friends, whose admonitions against the lodge fellowship he did not for a time heed, make a feature of this number which will not soon be forgotten. Bro. Clemens has been for several years out of the lodge, but the separation was never so clearly defined as this humble Christian letter makes it. This instance should be remembered as an example to thousands of brethren whose feet have been entangled, but who have not had grace to withstand a worldly fear and put away the evil by repentance and confession.

—Mrs. M. A. Blanchard left Washington Thursday evening for her home in Wheaton and the bedside of a sick son, C. L. Blanchard of this city. She was accompanied by Bro. H. H. Hinman, who has been in poor health for several weeks. Their non-arrival on Saturday was explained by a telegram stating that they were detained in Indiana till Monday. The extremely cold weather of Friday and Saturday almost laid an embargo on the railways. The brother, whose sickness was some days ago considered critical, is now much better, and his friends hope for a speedy recovery.

—The New Year was profuse in gifts to our exchanges. Our old friends the Wesleyan and Free Methodist are so changed in getting out of the old year into 1884 that a second look is needed to identify them. The American Wesleyan by that name is no more, but the Wesleyan Methodist is on its banner instead. This change was ordered at the General Conference. Otherwise the paper is the same. The Free Methodist changes its form from the 8-page to the more popular 16-page form, and with the uew arrangement introduces some new departments that add to the general interest of the paper. A more important change has lately been made in the Free Methodist by the addition to its editorial staff of Rev. John P. Brooks, of Bloomington, Ill., late editor of the Banner of Holiness. Bro. Brooks has had the rare experience of acquittal in a church trial, while yet a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, on charges trumped up for his zeal in bringing men into a holy nearness to God.

—Other changes which deserve notice are in the Union Signal, which dons a new and tasty dress of smaller type, a sure mark that the grand work of the W. C. T. U. is widening and deepening and needs more room to report itself. The Advance also comes out in new type and a leaded page. It has now for the first time its own material, having depended on job printers to this day. They have always done their work well.

JOHN KEMP.

On Saturday, the 29th of December, Rev. John Kemp of Dayton, passed from earth to the rewards of heaven —one of the most faithful among the many uncompromising souls whom the United Brethren church has raised up to bless the world.

"His loyalty he kept, his love, his zeal;
Nor number nor example with him wrought
To swerve from truth or change his constant mind."

He was one of the earliest supporters of the reform against the lodge, attending the national conventions and contributing by purse and pen to its support. The last convention he attended was that in Boston four years ago, made celebrated by the mad assaults of Freemasons. In the struggles in which the principles of Christianity have been withstood by the encroachments of the lodges in the United Brethren conferences he has always been known as opposed to the plans of nullification. The Richmond Star and Religious Telescope have extended obituary notices from which we copy:

"Rev. John Kemp, of Miami Conference, died at his home in Dayton, Ohio, Dec. 29th. He had been declining for some months, and was confined to his bed about three weeks before his death. During much of his last sickness his mind was clouded, but when conscious he was cheerfully looking toward his eternal home. He was a good man and full of years. He long served as an itinerant in Miami Conference, and several years as presiding elder. He was—perhaps from its first organization—a member of the missionary board, and also a member of Union Biblical Seminary board during the most of the time since the organization of that institution. To the seminary he gave a donation in land in the city of Dayton of ten thousand dollars, and on this land, on a most beautiful spot, the seminary building is located. He also gave several thousand dollars toward the erection of Summit Street church. He was a man of public spirit, and was interested in every thing that pertained to the interest of the city, the conference, or the church

"The funeral services were held on last Sabbath, Dec. 30th, in Summit Street church. An immense audience joined sorrowfully in doing honor to the memory of the dead. The arrangements for the burial made by the family were the most fitting. Every detail showed the honor, delicacy, thoughtfulness and carefulness to be expected from hearts of love and honor and respect for the character and wishes of the departed. Dr. L. Davis conducted the services, assisted by Rev. W. C. Day and others. At the house Dr. Funkhouser led in prayer. The choir of the First United Brethren church discoursed most solemn and hopeful strains of music. The sermon was delivered by Dr. Davis from these words, "And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them" (Rev. 14: 13). He dwelt upon these thoughts: 1. God's children dying and dead are in the Lord. 2. The people of God, like all others, are subject to death. 3. Though the people of God die they are peculiarly blessed in their departure out of the world. 4. The people of God in the hour of death find a glorious and heavenly rest. 5. Those who die in the Lord are followed by the toils of their hearts and hands performed during their pilgrimage in this life. 6. We have this message directly from the messenger from the unseen world. The discourse was one of great appropriateness and comfort. Dr. Landis then read an historical sketch of Bro. Kemp's life and labors."

LITERARY.

The excellent Missionary Review, Princeton, N. J., opens its first number of the year with a soul-stirring appeal to self-sacrifice on the part of Christians at home in behalf of the world's evangelization. Secretaries whose great salaries of $3,000 to $5,000 tempt them to spend their time in real estate speculation are remembered. An interesting account of the temples cut out of mountain sides in India is given, and some account of the difficulties experienced by Indian missionaries at the hands of British officials. It seems incredible that such persecution and annoyance of their own countrymen should be allowed by the British authorities. "A Great Missionary," is the title of an account of George I. Mackey's labors and wonderful success in the island of Formosa. "Letters from Missiouaries" contains a very interesting account of affairs in Madagascar following the occupation of Tamatave by the French. A review of the foreign missions of the various Presbyterian and Lutheran bodies is given at length and also an account of the independent mission in India under the charge of Miss Austey, Miss Read and Miss Drake, also of the Christian school in Liberia supported by friend Edward S. Morris, of Philadelphia. For missionary intelligence and inspiration the Review leads the list. Subscribers to the Cynosure will do well to have it in their families. See the clubbing list for the redneed rates.

The North American Review stretches even its very liberal motto by securing from John Taylor, the head of the Mormon abomination, an article in defense of it. Will the Review next disgust its readers and supporters with a defense of gambling by Mike McDouald, or of prostitution by Josephine Mansfield? The governor of Utah Territory, Murray, follows Taylor in an article presenting some facts not generally published, but on the whole inconclusive, especially when he attempts to answer the Mormon claim of religious privelege. He shows that they have unconstitutionally made their system an established religion. Senator John I. Mitchell writes on "The Tribulations of the American Dollar;" Dr. J. H. Rylance, on "Theological Re-adjustmeuts;" Senator Henry W. Blair of New Hampshire, the temperance champion of Congress, on "Alcohol in Politics;" Gail Hamilton continues her sharp critique of the Carlyles, Thomas and wife; Edward Self, on the "Evils Incident to Immigration," an article replete with important statistical information; and "Bribery by railway Passes" is discussed on the side of the railways and politicians by Charles Aldrich and Judge Hubbard.

The January Century opens what every lover of fine art in illustration and fine magazine work hopes will be a year of good work. The portrait of Gen. W. T. Sherman, lately retired from the first place in the U. S. Army, opens the number. The illustrated articles are: "Edinboro Old Town," "Log of an Ocean Studio," "The Forty Immortals," a sketch of the French Academy with portraits of its members, and "Husbandry in Colony Times," a continuation of Edward Eggleston's colonial history. One of the most deservedly popular articles is a collection from the journal of the late President Garfield while on a trip to Europe in 1867. The sketch of General Sherman is by E. V. Smalley and has been revised by Gen. Grant, whose suggestions were of great value.

Among the monthlies, the Evangelical Repository and Bible Teacher, the religious magazine of the United Presbyterian church, deserves especial mentiou and a wide reading outside denominational lines. No one can read the January number, with its able articles on "How to Meet the Skepticism of the Age," the "Philosophy of Reform," and the editorial pages, without arising strengthened and profited. It is published by the U. P. Board of Publication, Pittsburgh.

Choice Literature continues without a rival in its economy of cost, to occupy a place in the front rank of literary periodicals. Its December contents are: "On being Pilled," presumably by James Payne; "The 'Why' and 'How' of Land Nationalization," by A. R. Wallace, one of the ablest English champions of the theory that the land rightly belongs to the whole people, and not to individuals; "Wallenstein and the Drama," a very able critical article, dealing particularly with the writings of Schiller, who is ranked by many as the greatest literary genius of Germany, and his subject, one of the most remarkable characters in the great Thirty Years' War; "The Lake George Tour," by J. Arbuthnot Wilson; "Inequality in Punishment," by Lord Justice Fry, one of the most difficult problems with which statesmen and jurists have to deal, discussed with great ability; "The Tower of Silence,"—a funeral custom of India; "Wordsworth and the Duddon," a charming sketch of a great poet and the scenes of which he wrote; "Canadian Home Rule," by Lord Lorne, late Governor-General; "The Future Prospects of Madagascar," by Rev. Geo. A. Shaw, the missiouary whose name was so prominent in the recent complicatiou between France and England; "Honeysuckle," by Grant Allen, a poet-naturalist; "Senilia: Prose Poems, by Ivan Turgeneiff; "Robert Browning," by Hon. Roden Noel; "The New Birth of Christian Philosophy," by Rev. Dr. Bary; and "Sleeplessness," a most practical and interesting paper by an anonymous writer. John B. Alden, Publisher, New York, $1.00.

A PUZZLE

Which a number of good friends of the Cynosure have not been able yet to decipher is this:

$\frac{27}{83}$

The solution is very simple, though sometimes not easy to apply. The figures and letters are a simple statement of account, and mean that the person to whose name they are affixed has paid for the Cynosure until the 27th of December, 1883, and no longer. Name, figures and all are to be seen every week on the yellow slip pasted on the paper. The solutiou is a renewal of the subscriptiou, whereat the editors aud the agents of the N. C. A. are made to rejoice. It is a fact that should cause some earnest thought that your postmaster and all who read the paper can see week by week the evidence of neglect and may pass unpleasant judgments upon it. Please see that it is changed soon to read—

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,
JONATHAN BLANCHARD,
OF ILLINOIS.

For Vice President,
JOHN A. CONANT,
OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultiv[illegible]intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

NOTE.—In March, 1883, Pres. J. Blanchard resigned the nomination above, subject to the action of the next National Convention of the American party.

POLITICIANS DON'T WANT THEM.

The Independent labors to prove that while the anti-slavery reform of forty or fifty years ago legitimately and logically led to the formation of a new political party, the great reform of to-day is totally out of order in following along the same line to the same end. To support this position it says that the Abolitionists were not wanted by either of the great parties then existing. This in the very nature of things is absurd. Parties are never guilty of crowding out would-be adherents. History, too, proves that the parties of yesterday held the same quarrel with Abolitionists that parties of to-day are waging with the prohibitionists. History says emphatically that anti-slavery men did and said then just what prohibitionists are to-day doing and saying and were treated in very much the same fashion for it. Gerrit Smith and his followers in 1844 refused to support the great Whig leader, and thereby prevented an election from which the "practical politicians" of the time hoped great things for the anti-slavery cause. Four years later, Theodore Parker, the radical, voted for Martin Van Buren in the vain hope of achieving a partial triumph for the Free Soilers. Both actions were criticized, but in the light of succeeding history, nobody doubts which led most logically and surely to the desired and finally attained end. When Gerrit Smith was elected to Congress in 1850, the New York Times said, "It seems to us mere wantonness, idle nonsense to send such a man to Congress to take part in practical legislation upon practical subjects."

You see, dear Independent, or at any rate it is the object of this paragraph to show you, that you are all wrong in thinking your own methods were so practical then, so impracticable now.—Union Signal.

THE HOME.

THE CHILDREN WE KEEP.

The children kept coming, one by one,
Till the boys were five and the girls were three,
And the big brown house was alive with fun
From the basement floor to the old roof-tree.

Like garden flowers the little ones grew,
Nurtured and trained with the tenderest care;
Warmed by love's sunshine, bathed in its dew,
They bloomed into beauty like roses rare.

But one of the boys grew weary one day.
And leaning his head on his mother's breast,
He said, "I'm tired and cannot play;
Let me sit awhile on your knee and rest."

She cradled him close in her fond embrace,
She hushed him to sleep with her sweetest song,
And rapturous love still lighted his face
When his spirit had joined the heavenly throng.

Then the eldest girl with her thoughtful eyes,
Who stood "where the brook and the river meet,"
Stole softly away into Paradise
Ere "the river" had reached her slender feet.

While the father's eyes on the graves are bent,
The mother looked upward beyond the skies;
"Our treasures," she whispered, "were only lent;
Our darlings were angels in earth's disguise."

The years flew by and the children began
With longing to think of the world outside;
And as each in his turn became a man,
The boys proudly went from the father's side.

The girls were women so gentle and fair,
That lovers were speedy to woo and win;
And with orange blossoms in braided hair,
The old home was left, new homes begin.

So, one by one the children have gone—
The boys were five and the girls were three;
And the big brown house is gloomy and lone,
With but two old folks for its company.

They talk to each other about the past,
As they sit together at eventide,
And say, "All the children we keep at last
Are the boy and girl who in childhood died."

—Selected.

WHY NOT!

A tired mother, who had been occupied all day with an active and very troublesome boy, as she sat down in the evening and thought of the numberless details into which her strength had gone, said: "After all, it is a day toward the making of a man." There was a world of truth in this brief and pointed summing up of a day's work. Nothing is so hard to overcome as the illusion of time and distance; thousands of lives are wasted because they are never freed from it, and thousands of other and faithful lives are saddened because they, too, are under its spell. The woman under the pressure of daily and nightly cares who feels no inspiration from them, but continually dreams of greater services and nobler occupations in some other place and at some other time, is surely missing the secret of the deepest living, and is thirsting with the water of life flowing freshly about her. The man who chafes under his present burden, and scorns his place and work as small and mean compared with the thing he would do, is every day widening the breach between his ideal and his possible achievement. The masters of life—women of rich, ample nature, ripening in all strengths and graces with the years, men full of simple, teachable spirit, gathering sweetness and power as they advance—have learned to reverence the present moment and the present duty, and are convinced to the very bottom of their souls that the only road to great achievements lies through the faithful doing of the thing that lies next them. There is no magic or enchantment in life, no luck or fortune in its final possessions; it is simple sequence of cause and effect, simple and undeviating working out of the law that whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap. He cannot plan a great career, and hew his opportunities into its solid structure, except by striking with full force the blow that the present moment makes room for. Men and women who are full of this spirit expand their lives by sheer force of faithful living, and are able, by and by, to look back and see their little duties rounding into grand completeness, their little opportunities widening out into the highest possibilities. Every great work grows out of endless and toilsome details. The historian is years in the dim seclusion of libraries before he gives the world a new chapter in its life; the great orator works far into sleepless nights before he stands on the platform with his fingers on the keys of human passion and sentiment; the writer denies himself even rational pleasures through laborious years that he may enrich his thought by contact with the world's thought and put the eloquence of simplicity into his style. Grappling with small difficulties is the only training which fits one for dealing with great problems; faithful performance of small duties the only preparation for grand services; patience, fidelity, and steadfastness to-day the only seed that will make to-morrow golden with harvests of fame or usefulness. The boy who is to-day doing his "chores" well and cheerfully is in training for the cares of empire; the mother who is to-day giving strength, time and wealth of affection to her children in the seclusion of her home is making the whole world richer by her obscure ministry, is very possibly shaping the characters that are to shape the destiny of the age, and is surely building in the only material which defies decay, survives death, and declares its architecture in the fadeless light of eternity. After all has been said about the work of the artist, the poet, and the thinker, it is the mother who stands nearest God in creative power.—Christian Union.

READING CHARACTER FROM CONDUCT.

An intelligent teacher should have little trouble in determining the general drift of a pupil's character, for he has but to observe the boy or girl in association with the other pupils, and while engaged in study and at recitation, to obtain striking hints of what qualities are dominant. A child of eight is, to be sure, more freely expressive of his disposition than a youth of thirteen; but in the sports of the play-ground and under excitement, those much older indicate clearly the faculties which most strongly influence them.

An incident in the school-life of a teacher, as related by herself, illustrates our point. She had charge of a school in a country town early in her career, and among her scholars was a boy about fourteen years old, who cared very little about study, and showed no interest apparently in anything connected with the school. Day after day he failed in his lessons, and detentions after school-hours and notes to his widowed mother, had no effect.

One day the teacher had sent the boy to his seat, after a vain effort to get from him a single correct answer to questions in grammar, and, feeling somewhat nettled, she watched his conduct. Having taken his seat, he pushed the book impatiently aside, and espying a fly, caught it with a dexterous sweep of the hand, and then betook himself to a close inspection of the insect.

For fifteen minutes or more the boy was thus occupied, heedless of surroundings, and the expression of his face told the teacher that it was more than idle curiosity that possessed his mind. A thought struck her, which she put into practice at the first opportunity that day. "Boys," said she, "what can you tell me about flies?" and calling several of the brightest by name, she asked them if they could tell her something of a fly's constitution and habits. They had very little to say about the insect. They often caught one, but only for sport, and did not think it worth while to study so common an insect.

Finally, she asked the dunce, who had silently, but with kindling eyes, listened to what his schoolmates hesitatingly said. He burst out with a description of the head, eyes, wings, and feet of the little creature, so full and enthusiastic, that the teacher was astonished and the whole school struck with wonder. He told how it walked and how it ate, and many things which were entirely new to his teacher. So that when he had finished, she said: "Thank you! You have given us a real lecture in natural history, and you have learned it all yourself."

After the school closed that afternoon, she had a long talk with the boy, and found that he was fond of going into the woods and meadows and collecting insects and watching birds, but that his mother thought he was wasting his time. The teacher, however, wisely encouraged him in his pursuit, and asked him to bring beetles and butterflies and caterpillars to school, and tell what he knew about them.

The boy was delighted by this unexpected turn of affairs, and in a few days the listless dunce was the marked boy of that school. Books on natural history were procured for him, and a world of wonders opened to his appreciative eyes.

He read and studied and examined; he soon understood the necessity of knowing something of mathematics, geography, and grammar for the successful carrying on of his favorite study, and he made rapid progress in his classes. In short, twenty years later he was eminent as a naturalist and owed his success, as he never hesitated to acknowledge, to that discerning teacher.

Character must express itself. It matters not the kind of culture one has, his conduct will indicate the type of his disposition, as much as the lineaments of his family lineage, and the systematic study of the phenomena of mental expression will lead to conclusions, in particular cases, which are scientifically precise.—Phrenological Journal.

BLAME LESS, PRAISE MORE.

Some parents and teachers seem to think praise a dangerous thing for children. While reticent in commending they are voluble in blaming. Like Iago, they are "nothing if not critical," and being narrow and cold, mistake fault-finding for criticism. We know it is risky to add to an old saw, but if such would digest this amended nursery rhyme, they would be more popular with youth:

All work and no play
Makes Jack a dull boy;
All blame and no praise
Makes Jack a cheap toy.

One of the greatest of English divines, Isaac Barrow, received in his boyhood only blame from his father, who thought him stupid. He used to express his contempt for him by saying that if it pleased God to take from him any of his children, be hoped it might be Isaac. Yet when the University of Cambridge sought for a successor to the great Newton, stupid Isaac Barrow was the man they selected. Mr. William Mathews tells an anecdote which illustrates the stupidity of some parents and teachers. A boy was brought one day to General Salem Towne, labeled as an incorrigible dunce. No master had been able to make him learn, and if Mr. Towne couldn't he should be apprenticed to a trade. Mr. Towne proceeded to examine him. The boy soon made a mistake and instantly dodged, as if frightened.

"Why do you do that?" asked the master.

"Because I was afraid you were going to strike me."

"Why should you think so?"

"Because I have always been struck whenever I made a mistake."

"You need never fear being struck by me," said Mr. Towne. "That is not my way of treating boys who do as well as they can."

Under the wise teacher's judicious encouragement the boy showed so much intelligence that he was sent to college. In after years he became a lawyer, an editor, a judge, a governor, United States Senator, and Secretary of War and State. That boy was William L. Marcy, of New York.—Youth's Companion.

BOYS' HEARTS.—Get hold of the boy's heart. Yonder locomotive with its thundering train comes like a whirlwind down the track, and a regiment of armed men might seek to arrest it in vain. It would crush them, and plunge unheeding on. But there is a little lever in its mechanism that, at the pressure of a man's hand will slacken its speed, and in a moment or two bring it panting and still, like a whipped spaniel, at your feet. By the same little lever the vast steamship is guided hither and thither upon the sea, in spite of adverse wind and current. That sensitive and responsible spot by which a boy's life is controlled is his heart. With your grasp gentle and firm on that helm you will pilot him whither you will. Never doubt that he has a heart.

A MOTHER'S WORTH.—Many a discouraged mother folds her tired hands at night, and feels as if she had, after all, done nothing, although she had not spent an idle moment since she rose. Is it nothing that your little helpless children have had some one to come to with all their childish griefs and joys? Is is nothing that your husband feels "safe" when he is away to his business, because your careful hand directs everything at home? Is it nothing, when his business is over, that he has the blessed refuge of home, which you have that day done your best to brighten and refine? Oh, weary and faithful mother, you little know your power when you say, "I have done nothing." There is a book in which a fairer record than this is written over against your name.—Sel.

HOUSEKEEPING HINTS.

RULES FOR RIGHT LIVING.

1. Keep the body clean. The countless pores of the skin are so many drain-tiles for the refuse of the system. If they become clogged and so deadened in their action, we must expect to become the prey of ill health in some one of its countless forms. Let us not be afraid of the wet sponge and five minutes brisk exercise with a crash towel every night and morning.

2. Devote eight hours out the twenty-four to sleep. If a mother is robbed of sleep by a wakeful baby, she must take a nap sometime during the day. Even ten minutes of repose strengthens and refreshes, and does good "like a medicine." Children should be allowed to sleep until they wake of their own free will.

3. Never go out in the early morning in any locality subject to damps fogs and miasms, with an empty stomach. If there is not time to wait for a cup of coffee, pour two-thirds of a cup of boiling water on two teaspoonfuls of cream, or a beaten egg, season it with salt and pepper and drink while hot before going out. This will stimulate and comfort the stomach, and aid the system in resisting a poisonous or debilitating atmosphere.

4. Avoid over-eating. To rise from the table able to eat a little more is a proverbially good rule for every one. There is nothing more idiotic than forcing down a few mouthfuls, because they happen to remain on one's plate, after hunger is satisfied, and because they may be "wasted" if left! It is the most serious waste to over-tax the stomach with even half an ounce more than it can take care of.

5. Avoid foods and drinks that plainly "disagree" with the system. Vigorous out-door workers should beware of heavy, indigestible suppers. Suppers should always consist of light, easily digested foods—being, in the country, so soon followed by sleep, and the stomach being as much entitled as the head to profound rest. The moral pluck and firmness to take such food and no other for this last meal of the day can be easily acquired, and the reward of such virtue is sound sleep, a clear head, a strong hand, and a capital appetite for breakfast.—Mrs. E. H. Leland.

As many persons are very foud of cabbage who cannot digest them cooked in the ordinary way, I will give the way in which they meet with the most favor upon our table: Boil a firm head of cabbage, aud when half done drain off the water and pour on more from the boiling tea-kettle, and slightly salt it. When tender set aside until thoroughly cold; chop up fine, and add one half teaspoonful of butter, pepper, two eggs well beaten. Mix all well together, and bake until brown in a pudding dish. Serve hot.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

AN OLD PROVERB.

Pouting, my darling, because it rains,
And flowers droop, and the rain is falling,
And drops are blurring the window-panes,
And a moaning wind through the lane is calling,
Crying, and wishing the sky was clear,
And roses again on the lattice twining!
Ah, well, remember, my foolish dear,
"'Tis easy to laugh when the sun is shining!"

When the world is bright and fair and gay,
And glad birds sing in the fair June weather,
And summer is gathering, night and day,
Her golden chalice of sweets together,
When blue seas answer the sky above,
And bright stars follow the day's declining,
Why, then, 'tis no merit to smile, my love;
"'Tis easy to laugh when the sun is shining!"

But this is the time the heart to test,
When winter is here and storms are howling,
And the earth from under her frozen vest
Looks up at the sad sky, mute and scowling;
The brave little spirit should rise to meet
The season's gloom and the day's repining;
And this is the time to be glad; for, sweet,
"'Tis easy to laugh when the sun is shining!"

—Wide Awake.

COMMON LIFE ONE HUNDRED YEARS AGO.

In his new History of the People of the United States, Mr. McMaster gives a picture of life a hundred years ago that young people will do well to think of, especially those young people who fancy that the "glorious days of old" were better worth living in thau the present. One must be very poor and badly placed to-day who cannot see more that is worth seeing, enjoy more aud possess more that makes life desirable, than the well-to-do or even the very rich could a few years ago.

Speaking of the laboring classes of 1784, Mr. McMaster says:

"Their houses were meaner, their food was coarser, their clothing was of commoner stuff, their wages were, despite the depreciation that has gone on in the value of money, lower by one-half than at present. A man who performed what would now be called unskilled labor—who sawed, who dug ditches, who mended the roads, who mixed mortar, who carried boards to the carpenter and bricks to the mason, or helped to cut hay in the harvest-time—usually received as the fruit of his daily toil two shillings. Sometimes, when the laborers were few, he was paid more, and became the envy of his fellows if, at at the end of a week, he took home to his family fifteen shilliugs, a sum now greatly exceeded by four dollars. Yet all authorities agree that in 1784 the hire of workmen was twice as great as in 1774.

"On such a pittance it was only by the strictest economy that a mechanic kept his children from starvation and himself from jail. In the low and dingy rooms which he called his home were wanting many articles of adornment and of use now to be found in the dwellings of the poorest of his class. Sand sprinkled on the floor did duty as a carpet. There was no glass on his table, there was no china in his cupboard, there were no prints on his wall. What a stove was he did not know, coal he had never seen, matches he had never heard of. Over a fire of fragments of boxes and barrels, which he lit with sparks struck from a flint, or with live coals brought from a neighbor's hearth, his wife cooked up a rude meal and served it in pewter dishes. He rarely tasted fresh meat more than once in a week, and paid for it a much higher price than his posterity. Everything, indeed, which ranked as a staple of life was very costly. Corn stood at three shillings the bushel, wheat at eight and sixpence, an assize of bread was fourpence, a pound of salt pork was tenpence. Many other commodities now to be seen on the tables of the poor were either quite unknown or far beyond the reach of his scanty means."—Mastery.

CHIMNEYS.

Chimneys seem so natural to us that we forget that there was a time when they were unkuown. They were invented about the same time with clocks and watches. No house in ancient Rome or Athens had them. The Greeks and Romans heated their rooms with hot coals in a dish, or by flues underneath the floor. The smoke passed out the doors and windows. You could always tell when a Roman was about to give a dinner party by the clouds of smoke that came out of the kitchen windows. It must have been very unpleasant for the cooks, who had to do their work in the midst of it.

The tall chimneys that rise over the tops of the houses in New York and Brooklyn, pouring out their clouds of smoke, would have seemed miracles to our ancestors a few centuries ago. Even the pipe of a steamer or a chimney of a kerosene lamp they would have thought wonderful. In Englaud, in the time of the Conqueror (1066), the fire was built on a clay floor or in a hole or pit in the largest room of the house. The smoke passed through an opening in the roof. At night a cover was placed over the coals. Everybody was by law obliged to cover up his fire when the bell rang at a certain hour. In French this was convrefeu, and hence the "curfew" bell.

Chimneys began to be used generally in England in the beginning of the reign of Elizabeth. No one knows who invented them. or when they first came into use. We find them first in Italy. Iu Venice they seemed to have been not uncommon as early as 1347. In 1368 they had long beeu in use at Padua. They were at first built very wide and large, so that they could be easily cleaned. The wide chimney-pieces of some of our older houses are very curious.

But as time passed on chimneys were made taller, narrow, and often crooked. When they had to be cleaned it was customary to send boys up into them to remove the soot and ashes. It was then that the saddest stories were told of the little sweeps who were forced to climb up the narrow flues, and come down toru, bleeding, and covered with soot. These poor creatures, who were often not more than seven or eight years old, were sometimes suffocated in the foul chimneys they attempted to clean. When they reached the top they were expected to look out and give a loud shout. No boy would ever become a chimney-sweep from choice, and they were ofteu driven to climb the chimneys by a fear of a whipping. The cruelty of the master-sweeps was fearful.

The little chimney-sweeper has passed away. His place is taken by a pateut broom and a colored operator. Chimneys are built 200 and 300 feet high. In Birmingham, England, one fell down recently on a large factory, killing and wounding thirty or forty workmen and others. The tallest chimney in New York is that of the Steam-heating Company.

The chimney is one of the most useful of inventions. We cannot well understand how the Greeks and Romans did without it. But it is everywhere. Our lamps would never burn without a chimney; steamboats and engines would be helpless without it; our factories are moved by it; it warms our houses and gives employment to thousands of people.

In the days before chimneys were inveuted men lived in clouds of smoke. The walls of the finest palaces in ancient Rome were soon covered with soot and filth. It was impossible to keep them clean. The mosaics and the paintings on the walls soon became discolored. In the castles of England and France it was still worse. Here the huge fire blazed in the center of the great hall. The smoke covered the roof with black drapery, and the savage knights and squires were forced either to endure the cold, or to live and breathe in an air that was dangerous to sight, health, and life itself.—Sel.

A veritable bird-charmer is a little five-year-old child of Mount Blanchard, Montana. The little girl was playing out in the door-yard among a bevy of snow-birds, and when she spoke to them they would come and light upon her, twittering with the utmost glee. On taking them in her hands and strokiug them, the birds, instead of trying to get away from their fair captor, seemed to be highly pleased, and when let loose would fly away a short distance and immediately return to the child again. She theu took several of them into the house to show her mother, who, thinking the child might hurt them, took the birds aud put them out of doors; but no sooner was the door opened than they flew into the room and lighted upon the girl's head and began to chirp.

TEMPERANCE.

On Dec. 1 the total number of distilleries in the country was 565, against 356 at the same time last year, with a total daily producing capacity of 289,000 gallons, against 263,000 the year before.

Lager beer, which thirty years ago was practically unknown in this country, is now made by 2,500 immeuse establishments, with over $150,000,000 of capital iuvested. The value of this production each year is over $200,000,000.

John S. Bowley, aged 28, a rising member of the Maryland bar, was found dead in bed Thursday morning in a Chestertown hotel. Being addicted to drink, a well-known young lady refused to marry him, and her rejection of his hand only deepened his potations.

John B. Finch has offered to enter into a joiut debate with Dr. Dio Lewis on the questiou of prohibition in New York on the 9th or 10th of February, and in Cinciunati on any three nights during the week from February 24 to March 1. It is understood that Dr. Lewis will accept.

It is gratifying, says a Boston letter, to chronicle a handsome no-license vote at the late municipal election in Boston, accompanying with fituess a reform victory for Mayor-elect Martin. In the neighborhood also of the city, in Newton and Somerville, a handsome temperance wave has been rolled up at the polls. May it roll higher and sweep over Boston. Cold water will not hurt it, especially as the ponds and wells are low.

THE PENALTY.—Dr. Andrew McFarland writes thus: "It is your stout old hero, who goes to bed every night with liquor enough under his belt to fuddle the brains of half a dozen ordinary men, and yet lives out his threescore years and ten, that will be found at the head of the stock that pours into the world generation after generation such a crop of lunatics, epileptics, eccentrics and inebriates as we ofteu see. The impunity with which one so constituted will violate all law gets its set-off in a succeeding generation, when the great harvest begins. That 'the iniquities of the fathers are visited upon the children,' that 'the fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth have been set on edge,' are truths that no scripture is needed to teach; in other words, he who sins through physical excess does not do half the harm to himself that he does to the inheritors of his blood. The penalty must be paid as surely as there is a seed-time and a harvest."—Selected.

DISTILLERS' LOBBY.—The distillers are making prodigious preparations for this winter's attaek upon the Treasury—in other words, their renewed demand for au extension of the period in which their whisky may remain in bond. Their latest trick is an attempt to hoodwink the temperance people. They say: "If the bill for an extension of the bonded period should be defeated the effect would be to throw large quantities of the higher grades of whisky on an overstocked market, in consequence of which retail dealers would sell fine whisky as cheap as they now do beer, and temperance would not be promoted thereby." The answer to this is easy. As some of the liquor men admit, the progress of the temperance reformation has made "a big hole in the market." Hence consumption of late years has not equalled production. In these circumstances the natural remedy is to diminish production—some distillers making less whisky and others going out of the business. Ou the contrary, they ask the Government to save them from the results of over-production by storing their surplus. The temperance reformation would not be promoted by sustaining any such policy. If the surplus should be thrown upon the market, whisky might indeed become cheap, but many of the distillers and large dealers would be crippled if not ruined. The business would become less profitable, and men would get out of it at rats desert a sinking ship. Would that retard the cause of temperance?—N. Y. Witness.

T. BUCHANAN READ.—A correspondent writing from Winchester, Va., says: "A look over the great battle-fields which surround this place—fields that are to-day brown with the fresh plowed earth or yellow with the stubble of the gathered grain—fields that drank the blood of thousands of the bravest and the best of the nation's men, recalls Read to my mind, aud revives a story of his genius I have never seen in print. His poetic fancy often leaped through the fumes of wine that frequently clouded his brain, and one of his happiest flights was inspired by the word 'peace' spoken just after the sound of battle was hushed, and the great fields about Winchester, which are to-day groaning with the burdens of husbandry, were desolate. The torch of war and the hoof of strife had blasted the face of these charming hills and fertile valleys. Read had beeu dining, and was 'full.' He came staggering into the presence of two of the most distinguished men of that day. He settled himself in a chair and seemed limp aud almost lifeless from the effects of dissipation. The statesmen were talking of the settlement, and of the demands peace would make upon statesmanship, and the rewards of the conflict if properly controlled. The word 'peace' spoken by one of the gentlemen in the course of the conversation, seemed to electrify Read. He started from his stupor, aud, sitting up straight in his chair, with his poetic face red with wine, but beaming with intelligence, and his eye flashing fire, said:

Oh! that some beautiful bird of the south
Might build its nest in the cannon's mouth
And stop the awful roar.

The last word had hardly died upon his lips before he settled back into his stupor as quickly as he came out of it.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—The intense cold weather of last week was registered at 35 and 36 degrees below zero in northern Illinois and as low as 45 degrees in northern Minnesota.

—At Charlestown, S. C., Sunday morning the thermometer registered 13 degrees above zero, being the coldest weather recorded in that section in 135 years.

—Mail from the country districts, five days overdue, was brought to Quebec Saturday on snowshoes. Such a blockade has not been known for twenty years.

—The dam at Huron Mine, near Hancock, Michigan, burst Tuesday evening, demolishing two houses and a portion of a foundry, and killing six persons.

—The fine court house and jail at Jerseyville, Ill., was destroyed by fire Sunday and four prisoners perished in the flames.

—Four fires occurred at St. Louis Saturday night, the principal one starting in Burrell, Comstock & Co's furniture house, which was consumed, together with Merrick, Walsh & Phelps' jewelry establishment, the Goodyear Rubber Company's house, and a number of smaller firms.

—St. Joseph's Convent at Bellville, Ill., was entirely destroyed by fire Saturday night. The details of the burning of the Institute of the Immaculate Conception Sisters of Notre Dame at Belleville, Ill. About sixty pupils were in the school, ranging from 10 years to full grown, all girls, and several teachers and other inmates of the building. The fire is said to have started in the rear of the third story, which was used as a dormitory. The flames spread so rapidly, however, that no order could be preserved. Panic seized both children and sisters, and there was a wild, confused rush to escape. Several in the fright jumped from the windows and were either killed or badly injured. At last report it was believed that twenty-eight persons perished.

—The polygamous Bishop Sharp informed his priests at Salt Lake City Saturday that, from what he had heard at Washington recently, if the Almighty did not pilot the Mormon ship she would surely sink.

—The French ultimatum for the cession of the northern portion of Madagascar has been agreed to, and the settlement of the guarantees will be referred to the home government. Anything short of a French protectorate is acceptable to the people.

—The Nihilist movement is now directed from Paris and Geneva, and the leaders appear to be disturbed since the recent murders at St. Petersburg. In the latter city more than thirty persons have been arrested on suspicion.

—Touching the recent "accident" to the Czar, a Vienna paper says that while returning from a hunt with his suite, six persons were noticed ahead of the Czar,s party on the road, who stood aside, when so ordered by the Imperial escort, but that as the Czar's sledge passed three shots were fired at him, one bullet lodging in his shoulder. The assassins escaped in a dense wood near at hand, pursued by officers, but the chase was fruitless. One of the pursuing party has not yet turned up.

—The revolt in Egypt spreading. The false prophet, El Mahdi, is gaining ground, and the revolt is spreading northward. It is stated that Barrere, the French Consul General, has informed the Khedive that if England is unwilling or unable to defend Egypt against El Mahdi, France is willing and able to defend her.

THE CHURCHES.

—Secretary of War, Robert T. Lincoln, was lately reelected a trustee of the Second Presbyterian church, Chicago.

—A late number of the Washington, D. C., Star, contained the following special request: "The prayers of God's people are most earnestly requested for the thorough purification of a young church whose pastor and officers are inveterate tobacco users, much against the wishes of its members."

—The United Presbyterian church of Chicago, Rev. Dr. Meloy, pastor, held its annual meeting last week, Mr. T. H. Gault being moderator. The treasurer of the church, J. M. Wallace, reported all the debts of the church paid, and a balance of $77 on hand. There have been 51 new members received during the year, 29 being on profession of faith. The present membership is something over 200.

—Bro. H. Hull writes from Elgin, Iowa, of a glorious revival in progress there, and souls are coming to Him who alone gives everlasting life. The obstacles in the community are great on account of a strong infidel element.

—Rev. C. C. Foote, of Detroit, has gone for a time to East Saginaw, Michigan, to assist Bro. Wm. F. Davis in his mission among the lumbermen. Bro. Davis writes that hopeful conversions are taking place every night.

—A revival of much influence and strength is being carried on at Marion, Ind. The attendance became so large that the Friends' church was not sufficient to hold the congregations and the meeting was taken to the Murphy Tabernacle.

—A report of the Chicago Avenue Sabbath-school of this city, signed by D. L. Moody and J. M. Hitchcock, shows that the attendance Sept. 16, was 2,004, and has several times been above 1,600 since. The report concludes: "There have been during the past twelve months, seventy hopeful conversions, many of whom have united with the church. With the exception of our "Holiday Expenses," the school has been self-sustaining during the past twelve years. Truly the Lord has been on our side. Bless his name forever."

—Bro. J. O. Doesburg, of Holland, Mich., sends with much satisfaction the news that the Supreme Court of the State has affirmed the decision of the lower court, giving possession of the church buildings and property to the First Reformed church of Holland and the Grand Rapids church which separated themselves some two years ago from the General Synod by large majorities, because of the adhesion of that body to Masonic fellowship.

A thoughtful, quiet and deep religious interest prevails at Hopkinton, N. H., where more than twenty have decided to live a Christian life. The pastor, Rev. E. T. Farrill, has had no outside help, and no extra meetings.

Dr. W. W. Scudder, of Glastonbury, Conn., very much surprised his church and congregation lately by tendering his resignation of the pastorate. He gave as a reason for this action the fact that he felt a pressing call to return to missionary work in India, where he had spent twenty-five years.

—Prof. Ed. F. Reid, of Monmouth College, is expected soon to give a course of two lectures on "The Huguenot Psalmody" in one of the churches of Xenia, Ohio. These lectures will undoubtedly be of great interest.

—It is reported that the United Presbyterian Mission work is progressing surprisingly in India. Mr. Lytle had recently baptized twelve persons. People were flocking in great crowds to hear Karm Dad, a native who accompanied him, and he is so occupied that he hardly gets time for necessary rest.

—The American Bible Society has a Bible House in Constantinople, where are being printed the Scriptures for use throughout the East. The presses printed last year 16,000 Bibles, 4,560 Testaments, and 14,075 parts of the Bible in the Armenian and Armeno-Turkish languages. There were 59,628 copies distributed among the Armenians, Turks, Bulgarians, Greeks, Jews, Nestorians, Arabic-speaking peoples, etc. The British and Foreign Bible Society is also engaged in supplying the Scriptures.

—The Rev. W. W. Scudder, D. D. (Congregational), very much surprised his Glastonbury, Conn., church and congregation on Sunday, Dec. 16, by tendering his resignation, to take effect next July. He gave as a reason for this action the fact that he felt a pressing call to return to missionary work in India, where he had spent twenty-five years. He has received an urgent appeal from the Board of Foreign Missions of the Reformed Church in America to return to this field of Christian labor, for which his long experience has so well fitted him.

—The Missionary Board of the Methodist Church has resolved to resume holding missionary anniversaries. The first will be held in the Madison Avenue Church, this city, on Thursday evening, Jan. 3. Hon. Warner Miller, United States Senator, will preside, and addresses will be delivered by Dr. J. H. Vincent, Dr. C. H. Fowler, C. B. Fisk, Esq., and others.

—The report of the Tompkins Avenue Congregational Church, of Brooklyn, N. Y., of which Geo. F. Pentecost is pastor, has just been made. During the year two hundred and forty-two persons were added to the church membership, making a total of eight hundred and forty-one; the Gospel Chapel school connected with this church has a membership of six hundred and forty-eight; the ordinary parish expenses of the society were $24,097; the benevolent contributions of the church amounted to nearly $7,000, exclusive of the donations of the Sunday school, Ladies' Benevolent Society, the Young Ladies' Mission band, and the Woman's Society.

—A new church to be used in connection with the work of Dr. Charles Cullis, the proprietor of the Consumptive Home in Boston, was dedicated Saturday, Dec. 9. It is situated at the corner of Beacon place and Bowdoin street. There will be preaching in the new edifice each Sunday morning and evening.

—The Methodist church at Platteville, Wis., was organized Dec. 22, 1833, and supposed to be the oldest Protestant organization in the State of Wisconsin. The church has been making great preparations to celebrate its semi-centennial, and a most interesting time may be looked for by those who attend.

—According to Zion's Herald there are seven thousand or more Swedes in and about Worcester, Mass., while five years ago when the Methodists commenced Gospel work among them there were probably not more than four or five hundred. Some weeks ago a lot was purchased, and a building capable of accomodating about five hundred persons is in process of construction. The corner-stone was recently laid with very interesting ceremonies.

—On a recent evening in this city, Rev. Mr. Truve, pastor of the Baptist church at Gothenburg, Sweden, gave a graphic account of the mission work now in progress in his native country. Mr. Truve came to this country when a boy, received his education here, and returned to Sweden more than fifteen years ago. A vast improvement has been made in Sweden during the last ten years, and there are now 27,000 Baptists in that country. The Sunday-school work has so increased that there are at present about 200,000 children in the various Sunday-schools. A Sunday-school Union has been in operation twelve years.

—President Washburn, of Roberts College, Constantinople, recently wrote an article to the Independent, in which he asserts that his late experiences in this country show him that "the churches of America are losing their interest and faith in foreign missions." Rev. C. W. Park replies in the same paper. After an absence of eleven years in Bombay he returned to America in May of last year, and since then has had opportunity to make observation. He relates his general experience with the people, and shows that the contributions of the American Board have increased from $217,839 in 1850 to $347,424 in 1880. Yet in the same sentence he is compelled to admit that the average contributions have declined from $1.21 per member in 1850 to $0.90 per member in 1880.

—"Believe me, America, to-day, to save herself, must save the world." So said a stalwart advocate of missions before the American Board. We believe it. The New World has reached at one and the same time a point of prosperity and a position of peril. So closely is our future the future of the world, so vital our growing attachment with all lands, that we may no longer sink or swim of ourselves alone. If we fall, so goes the world. Yes, and if the world goes under morally, it will take us along.—Standard.

—It is reported that openings for preaching the Gospel in Spain are presenting themselves in all directions. The inhabitants of towns and villages visited by colporteurs manifest a strong desire for the Word of God, and for evangelists to settle among them. But, unfortunately, the laborers are few, and cannot overtake the work which awaits them, and the pastors of the churches in Cadiz, Seville, Jerez de la Frontera, unite with pastor Fliedner in urging upon Christians in all Protestant countries the present need of assistance for the institutions established for the training of workers.

THE LIVINGSTONE INLAND MISSION is endeavoring to send the Gospel to the heart of Africa by means of a chain of stations about fifty miles apart along the Congo River. It has now eight stations connecting the west coast with the Upper Congo. A little steam launch, named the "Henry Reed," has been given to the mission for the purpose of navigating these interior waters that are destined soon perhaps to be the arena of strife between contending Christian nations. The interest shown in the exploration and civilization of Africa by the enlightened King of Belgium since 1876 is well known. Mrs. Guinness, wife of the Honorary Director of the Livingston Inland Mission, has recently visited Brussels, and had interviews with Leopold and his minister, Baron Strauch, Secretary of the International Association. She is enthusiastic in her appreciation of the devotion of the king to the interests of Central Africa which seems to be the great object of his life, and to which he is giving from his private purse $400,000 a year from motives of the highest and purest philanthropy. Mr. Stanley's work on the Congo is carried on at the king's expense. She declares that by removing the impediments to a lucrative commerce between Europe and Central Africa, he wishes to save that country from the dreadful fate of the Portugese colonies, to secure the weak against the tyranny of the strong, and to protect the helpless against the demoralization which mere selfish commerce always inflicts on savage nations. It seems a pity that the plan conceived in humanity and wisdom by so enlightened a monarch should be threatened or thwarted by the selfish schemes of an adventurer like de Brazz, aided by the ambitious power of France to control the trade and the religious training of the natives of the interior. In spite, however, of rival competitors, and of religious prejudice, the Gospel is to find its way into the heart of the Dark Continent, and is yet to have the triumph of redeeming and enlightening it.

THE UNITED MISSIONARIES IN EGYPT.

At the beginning of 1882 the Egyptian Presbyterian Mission had every reason, apparently, for believing that the obstacles which had so long interfered with its work had been overcome, and the first part of the year seemed to justify this belief. Unusual success attended the efforts of the missionaries; the number of converts was largely increased, many new churches were built and their reports from the different stations, as well as the letters received by their many friends in Philadelphia, indicated unusual cheerfulness and confidenee in the future. On the 11th of June, however, the "native Egyptian movement," as it was termed by its leaders, who had for more than a year been preparing the rebellion, began in the riot and massacre at Alexandria. During the next month more than 80,000 foreigners fled from the country, the greater part of whom left everything behind in their haste to escape from the general massaere which was threatened by the followers of Arabi. The missionaries, who had just cause for fearing the especial rage of the Mohammedan fanatics, were foreed to join in this new exodus, abandoning their churches and eongregations, to fare as best they might. There were several narrow escapes, but all succeeded in rcaching Alexandria, and took refuge on board the United States gunboat Galena, then lying in the harbor.

During the ensuing three months part of the little band lived in Italy, and part in England. The battle of Tel-el-Kebir in September ended their exile and they returned under British protection, to find many of their churches burned and destroyed and their congregations scattered. Aided by liberal contributions from their friends in this city and throughout the country they at once began to repair the damage, and by vigorous work have succeeded in regaining most of the ground lost during those short but terrible months of Arabi's rebellion.

Now their troubles seem about to begin afresh.

"It is very unfortunate," said the Rev. W. W. Barr, the President of the United Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, to a Times reporter yesterday, "that our missionaries should be again compelled to abandon everything and even to fly for their lives from Asyoot—or Sioute, as the town is incorrectly called in the dispatch. But we have known for several weeks that everything was not as favorable to our cause in upper Egypt as could be desired. Several letters which arrived here last week from our brothers and sisters who are in the upper valley of the Nile, spoke with much apprehension of the spirit of animosity, which every day seemed to be growing stronger and more outspoken, among the Mohammedans, and a few even predieted another uprising and massacre like that of last year. We have hoped for the best, but these latest telegraphie advices are very depressing."

"I am

AT A LOSS TO UNDERSTAND,"

said the Rev. J. B. Dales, the corresponding secretary of the board, after he had read the dispatch shown him by the reporter, "why it should be stated in this that the impending trouble is attributed to the action of the American missionaries, for the only missionaries in Asyoot are our own people, and certainly greater consideration than they have uniformly shown for the peculiar views and prejudices of the Mohammedans could not be possible. They have made no efforts to eonvert any Moslem, but have confined their efforts entirely to the native Christians, whom they have endeavored to bring over from the Coptie to the Protestant Presbyterian chureh. This cablegram furthermore states that the Copts are defiant and that great trouble is feared. There must be willful misrepresentation in that statement, for defiance among the Copts against the Mohammedans is entirely unknown; they invaryingly submit to any and every imposition and outrage from their Moslem neighbors, and certainly the influence of our missionaries has been and will be exerted toward maintaining this attitude of forbearance and endurance. If there is any riot or bloodshed it will be entirely the work of the Mohammedans. We are awaiting with the greatest anxiety some further personal intelligence from Egypt."

"Do you think there is danger to American missionaries in other localities besides Upper Egypt?"

, answered the doctor; "I fear that the Mussulmans all through the East are against the Christians, and, of course, our missionaries will be the first to suffer. If any of those now stationed in Aysoot, or Upper Egypt, fall victims to this rapidly approaching massacre, I can only say that their loss will be universally mourned, especially by their many friends here in Philadelphia and Pennsylvania, from which the greater number of them come."

There are stationed at present in Aysoot as missionaries of the United Presbyteriau Board of Missions the following persons: The Rev. J. R. Alexauder and wife, the Rev. John Giffen and wife, the Rev. J. K. Giffen, Mrs. Grace Giffen, the Rev. Johu Hogg and wife, Doctor D. R. Johnson and wife and Miss Ella O. Kyle. A part of this large force is eugaged in missionary work and part as teachers in the new school for women, which has met with unexpected success during the past year, and in the Training College for Native Preachers, in which at present there are 220 students.—*Phila. A MYSTERY OF THE SEA.

THE FATE WHICH OVERTOOK THE "CITY OF BOSTON."—CAPTAIN MURRAY'S IDEAS AND EXPERIENCES.

A few years ago the City of Boston sailed from harbor, crowded with an expectant throng of passengers bound for a foreign shore.

She never entered port.

The mystery of her untimely end grows deeper as the years increase, and the Atlantic voyager, when the fierce winds howl around and danger is imminent on every hand, shudders as the name and mysterious fate of that magnificent vessel are allnded to.

Our reporter, on a recent visit to New York, took lunch with Captain George Siddons Murray, on board the Alaska, of the Guion line. Captain Murray is a man of stalwart build, well-knit frame, and eheery, genial disposition. He has been a constant voyager for a quarter of a century, over half of that time having been in the trans-Atlantic service. In the course of the conversation over the well-spread table, the mystery of the City of Boston was alluded to.

"Yes," remarked the Captain, "I shall never forget the last night we saw that ill-fated vessel. I was chief officer of the City of Antwerp. On the day we sighted the City of Boston a furious southeast hurricane set in. Both vessels labored hard. The sea seemed determined to sweep away every vestige of life. When day ended the gale did not abate, and everything was lashed for a night of unusual fury. Our good ship was turned to the south to avoid the possibility of ice-bergs. The City of Boston, however, undoubtedly went to the north. Her boats, life-preservers and rafts were all securely lashed; and when she went down everything went with her, never to re-appear until the sea gives up its dead."

"What, in your opinion, Captain, was the cause of the loss of the City of Boston?"

"The City of Limerick, in almost precisely the same latitude, a few days later, found the sea full of floating ice; and I have no doubt the City of Boston eollided with the ice, and sunk immediately."

Captain Murray has been in command of the Alaska ever since she was put in commission, and feels justly proud of his noble ship. She carries thousands of passengers every year, and has greatly popularized the Williams & Guion line. Remarking upon the bronzed and healthy appearance of the captain, the reporter said that sea life did not seem to be a very great physieal trial.

"No. But a person's appearance is not always a trustworthy indication of his physical condition. For seven years I have been in many respects very much out of sorts with myself. At certain times I was so lame that it was difficult for me to move around. I could scarcely straighten up. I did not know what the trouble was, and though I performed all my duties regularly and satisfactorily, yet I felt that I might some day be overtaken with some serious prostrating disorder. These troubles increased. I felt dull and then, again, shooting pains through my arms and limbs. Possibly the next day I would feel flushed and unaccountably uneasy, and the day following chilly and despondent. This continued until last December, when I was prostrated soon after leaving Queenstown, and for the remainder of the voyage was a helpless, pitiful sufferer. In January last a friend who made that voyage with me wrote me a letter urging me to try a new course of treatment. I gladly accepted his counsel and for the last seven months have given thorough and business-like attention to the recovery of my natural health; and to-day I have the proud satisfaction of saying to you that the lame back, the strange feelings, the sciatic rheumatism which have so long pursued me, have entirely disappeared through the blood purifying influence of Warner's Safe Rheumatic Cure which entirely eradicated all rheumatic poison from my system. Indeed, to me, it seems that it has worked wonders, and I therefore most cordially commend it."

"And you have no trouble now in exposing yourself to the winds of the Atlantic?"

"Not the least. I am as sound as a bullet, and I feel specially thankful over the fact becausc I believe rheumatic and kidney disease is in the blood of my family. I was dreadfully shocked on my last arrival in Liverpool to learn that my brother, who is a wealthy Chiua tea merchant, had suddenly died of Bright's disease of the kidueys, and consider myself extremely fortunate in having taken my trouble in time and before any more serious effeets were possible."

The conversation drifted to other topics, and as the writer watched the face before him, so strong in all its outlines and yet so genial, and thought of the innumerable exposures and hardships to which its owner had been exposed, he instinctively wished all who are suffering from the terrible rheumatic troubles now so common might know of Captain Murray's experience and the means by which he had been restored. Pain is a common thing in this world, but far too many endure it when they might just as well avoid it. It is a false philosophy which teaches us to endure when we ean just as readily avoid. So thought the hearty captain of the Alaska, so thinks the writer, and so should all others think who desire happiness and a long life.

ODDS AND ENDS.

Four large eels blocked the wheel of a paper mill at Manchester, Mass. A whole day was required to get them out. One of them was three feet three inches long, and weighed four and three-fourths pounds.

Mary O'Connor, who, during a fire panic a year ago, jumped from a window of S. J. Keely's mill, at Manayunk, Pa., there being no fire escapes, and having been permanently crippled by the fall, was Friday awarded $10,000 damages by a jury against Keely.

The Chicago Herald says that during the last ten years fifty-six life insurance companies have failed, in which the gross amount restored to policy holders was $77,072,685 less than premiums collected.

Germany has five hundred mills for the manufacture of wood-pulp. Such a degree of perfection has been attained in the treatment that even for the better qualities of paper the wood pulp is substituted for pulp made from rags. It constitutes 75 per cent of the paper stock used throughout Germany.

The story is told of Senator Vance of North Carolina, that soon after his second marriage he remarked to his bride, "I am a stubborn fellow, and you may anticipate trouble. Now, in the beginning, while I am subnissive, I want to give you one piece of advice. If you follow it we'll get along mighty well. It is this: Make me do as I please."

The following curious incident, says the Chicago Tribune, actually occurred recently: While a clergyman was in the midst of his sermon a person entered the church and in the coolest manner possible sauntered up the aisle. No sooner had the preacher's eye lighted on the newcomer than, dropping the thread of his sermon, he said to him: "Come in, my friend, come in, we are always glad to see those here late who can't come early." The unknown individual stepped forward, coolly took his seat, and then as coolly asked the preacher, "Would you oblige me with the text?" "Certainly," was the reply; and the request having been complied with the sermon proceeded.

Mr. W. D. Howells, interviewed by a reporter of the Boston Herald, has given his opinion in the matter of taking vacations after hard work. He doesn't believe in doing so. He "fails to see that long terms of intellectual inactivity are beneficial." On the contrary he thinks them injurious. There is a reluctance about turning to work again. Rather than take a long vacation, Mr. Howells apportions his work so that it never becomes irksome. His writing hours are from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. After the latter hour he is a man of leisure. The Critic says, "This is a very sensible arrangement. Method is better than any labor-saving machine that has ever been invented."

The Democratic managers in Congress are said to be seriously discussing a scheme for dividing Texas into three or four States, in order to strengthen their party vote in the electoral college, and will urge it for consideration by the National Democratic Committee, when that body meets to fix the time and place for holding the National convention. Although Senators Maxey and Coke disavow sympathy with any movement to divide Texas into four States, in accordance with the stipulation contained in the resolution of March 1, 1845, annexing the Texas Republic, the Democratic managers are quietly working up a sentiment through which, in event of Democratic success in 1884, it can be accomplished. While considerable opposition to such division now exists in Texas, it is believed this opposition can be easily overcome by the persuasion and influence of the Senators and members from the other late seceding States.—Boston Journal.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamp on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN J. The Progress of Disease.

We so unwilling to admit the presence of disease, fall a ready prey to the grim destroyer whose insidious approach, subtle progress and unseen workings, develops such fatal results. Let us be warned in time, lest it be "too late."

Are You Sure It Is Consumption?

Many thousands fully believe they or their friends are being hurried toward the grave by that terrible disease Consumption, and are being treated for that disease, when they have only CATARRH in some of its many types; the symptoms in many forms of these diseases are quite similar and can easily be mistaken. Catarrh, unalarming in its character and beginnings, neglected, developes and spreads, and in time poisons the vital organs, until it finally is no longer "ONLY CATARRH," but some disease that gives but little hope of health or life. We do not claim to cure Consumption, but are fully convinced from the results of our daily practice that we can save and restore to health many who now feel their case to be hopeless.

Danger · Signals.

Do you take cold easily? Have you a cold in the head that does not get better? Have you a hacking cough? Is your throat affected? Are you troubled with hoarseness? Soreness of the throat? Difficulty in breathing? Have you a pain in the head between and above the eyes? A sense of fulness in the head? Are the passages of the nose stopped up? Is your breath foul? Have you lost all sense of smell? Are you troubled by hawking? Spitting? Weak, inflamed eyes? Dullness or dizziness of the head? Dryness or heat of the nose? Is your voice harsh or rough? Have you any difficulty in talking? Have you an excessive secretion of mucus or matter in the nasal passages, which must either be blown from the nose, or drop back behind the palate, or hawked or snuffed backward to the throat? Ringing or roaring or other noises in the ears, more or less impairment of the hearing?

If so, you have Catarrh.

Some have all these symptoms, others only a part. Some of these symptoms indicate that the disease has passed from the head and has attacked the throat and bronchial tubes, and is effecting the lungs and other vital organs of the body, and unless the disease is stopped, its ravages will effect and endanger the life. In most cases Catarrh is only a local disease, and requires only local treatment. But in old or neglected cases the whole system becomes poisoned by the disease and then constitutional treatment is necessary to assist in expelling it from the organization.

Some Bad Symptoms.

The long continued corruption of the air that is breathed passing over the foul matter in the nasal passages, poisons the lungs and from thence the blood. The morbid matter that is swallowed during sleep, passes into the stomach, enfeebles the digestion, vitiates the secretions and pollutes the very fountains of life. The patient becomes feverish occasionally, there is less buoyancy of spirits, the appetite is often fickle, the head less clear, it is difficult to keep the energies up to the old standard, and often without knowing why, he is conscious that he is not as well all the time as he used to be. These symptoms indicate that the vital organs are becoming impaired so that they cannot perform their natural healthy functions. Our constitutional treatment is devised to assist nature in removing all poisonous material from the system and to neutralize and counteract its baneful effects on the vital organs and on the blood.

Home Treatment: Child's Treatment for Catarrh, and all diseases of the Head, Throat and Lungs, can be taken at home with perfect ease and safety, by the patient. We especially desire to treat those who have tried other remedies without success. A full statement of method of home treatment and cost will be sent on application.

NIGHTS IN A BAR-ROOM

T. S Arthur's great temperance book, complete and illustrated. By mail, 5c each; 50c per doz. By express, $3.50 per 100.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC THE GREAT SOURCE OF CRIME.

Leaves from the diary of an old lawyer.—By Hon. A. B Richmond, author of "Court and Prison," etc. A book of intense interest, rivaling the famous "Diary of a Physician," and, in its truthful, terrible pictures of the power and crime of intemperance, excelling the well-known "Ten Nights in a Bar-room." The temperance issue of the present time is Shall prohibition be partial or entire? Shall the branches of the death-bearing tree be pruned and trimmed, or shall the tree itself be cut down and its stump be torn up by the roots? The answer of "Leaves from the Diary" is, "Cut down the tree, tear up the roots, leave not a shoot or shred behind." It is certainly a very strong and eloquent volume Complete edition on fine, heavy paper, with colored lithograph of Sewall's stomach plates By mail, 30c each, $4 per doz. By express, $20 per 100. Abridged edition, by mail, 15c; $1.25 per doz. By express, $9 per 100.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC AND THE SOBER CITIZEN.

An able and telling work, by Rev. J H. Sherman which brings out the effects of the liquor traffic in a new light. The following are some of the commendations of the first edition.

"The author drives the nails of conviction through and clinches them."—N. Y Christian Advocate.

"Speakers and workers in the temperance field will find valuable aid in this pamphlet. It is crowded with convincing facts "—Zion's Herald

"One of the ablest reviews of the drink curse ever issued from the press."—The Morning and Day of Reform.

"The arguments are put in telling form "—Judge Pittman.

New revised and enlarged edition. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

DRINKS FROM DRUGS.

A startling exposure of the liquor traffic, by El Johnson. A book that cannot fail to arouse the American people to the gigantic swindle now being perpetrated. The writer was offered $10,000 by a leading brewer to keep still. Liquor not only doctored, but made entirely from drugs. Extracts from a whole library of secret books, giving receipts for making and doctoring; advertisements of essences, fac similes of labels, engravings, etc. etc. Claret, port, sherry, champagne, whisky, brandy, gin, rum, etc., all out of one barrel, and made at less than 25 cents a quart. Wine that never saw grape juice; cider that never saw apples; beer factories in place of breweries, fine cream ale without barley or brewing; whisky from arsenic; millions of gallons of liquor that pays no revenue tax. The farmer's corn and barley "all in your eye." A wholesale liquor store in a ten-foot square cellar; more French wine sold in New York City than is produced in the whole of France. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By Express, $6 per 100.

W. C. T. U. ORGANIZATION AND WORK.

A book of general information on how to organize and run successfully a Woman's Christian Temperance Union. This book should be widely distributed among W. C. T. U. presidents, pastor's wives and other representative women. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $[illegible] 100.

BAND OF HOPE SONG BOOK.

Band of Hope Songs.—Fifty-seven choice pieces for juvenile temperance gatherings, Bands of Hope, etc. Old, familiar tunes, also choice new words and music. Words far in advance of anything else issued. By mail, 8c each; 75c per doz. By express, $4 per 100.

DANIEL'S BAND.

A temperance concert exercise, with parts suitable for all ages; entirely new Songs, recitations, dialogues, etc., of a thoroughly aggressive character; sure to carry weight with the rendering of it. By mail, 5c each; 50c per dozen. By express, $2 per 100.

TEMPERANCE ANTHEM BOOK.

Temperance Anthems.—A new idea; nothing else of the kind in existence. Will insure good music by the choir at temperance meetings Forty-eight pages of choice anthems by ablest writers By mail, 15c each; $1.50 per doz. By express, $10 per 100.

W. B. STODDARD.

TO THE AGENTS OF THE N. C. A.

The publisher has found it necessary to advance the price of "Freemasonry Illustrated," PAPER COVER, from sixty cents to SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS apiece. Please correct your catalogues before sending them out to correspond with the above change.

Through some misunderstanding with the publishers of the American Agriculturist, it has been advertised that the Cynosure would be furnished with that excellent monthly and its premium dictionary and picture for $3.20. This is lower than can be afforded. The price which the Agriculturist demands makes a raise necessary to $3.60.

Please notice—the Cynosure, Agriculturist, valuable dictionary and fine engraving will be sent for $3.60 cash. Those who have sent in orders will confer a favor and save the Cynosure the necessity of advancing 40 cents for them if they will remit this amount.

FREEMASONRY AT A GLANCE."

An exposition of the first three degrees of Freemasonry in every village! How can it be done? By sending to W. I. Phillips, Treasurer N. C. A., for a 32-page pamphlet, containing 40 illustrations with explanations, with the legal attestation of the pastmaster of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago, as to the correctness of said exposition. We will send, postpaid, thirty (30) of these pamphlets for one dollar; sixty-five (65) for two dollars, and 165 for five dollars.

Edmund Ronayne says: "One of these pamphlets put in each family will do as much good as a public exposition would do."

Many have written: "Send a lecturer to our place, we need one very much.' This is often impossible, but the above plan is much better than no lecture; does not need a church or hall, which often cannot be had; and costs but a fraction of what a lecturer usually costs. Will you see to it that you have one of these lecturers, silent as sunlight and as powerful, in your town. If you cannot afford the dollar or five dollars yourself, you can soon collect from friends for this purpose the needed funds.

N. B. With each "Glance" will be sent an N. C. A. tract, and as the pamphlet gives an exposition of the ceremonies of the lodge the tract will give an exposition of the character of those ceremonies.

Not less than thirty sent on the above terms, and only to one address. Single copies 6 cents.

Cloth.....75 cents.

THIS is a pleasant surprise in many ways. The author is Rev. W. T. Meloy, of the United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and the book is published by the Board of Publication of his denomination. It is a love story, not "fascinating," but with so much of genial interest that the reader is in no danger of laying it down unfinished. * * * The moral purpose of the book is to describe and vindicate Christian character, in its more heroic aspects, and it is a success. We congratulate the author and the United Presbyterian Board of Publication on this literary lily of the valley.—The Interior.

Such was to Freemasonry the great NATIONAL CONVENTION held in BATAVIA, N. Y., September, 1882. It gave the world

Thurlow Weed's Great Letter

On the abduction and murder of WILLIAM MORGAN in 1826, which has been the most widely published of any Anti-masonic document. The dedication of a noble granite monument to the memory of Morgan, and the able and eloquent addresses of the Convention make this a most valuable pamphlet.

SEE WHY.

It contains—
1. Portrait of Morgan.
2. Portrait of Thurlow Weed.
3. Fine picture of the Monument.
4. The great letter of Thurlow Weed and his affidavit—almost the last public act of his life.
5. Address by J. E. Roy, D.D.
6. The monument oration by Pres. C. A. Blanchard.
7. Addresses on "Christian Politics" by Pres. J. Blanchard, on the Character of Freemasonry by Prof. E. D. Bailey, on the "Freedmen and Secret Societies" by Rev. H. H. Hinman; and very interesting personal and historical reminiscences.

NOW!

This word deserves large capitals. It is at this season one of the first importance. Hundreds of subscribers will find on examination that it is time to renew. There is no better time than NOW for it. It is a pleasure to know that hundreds are prompt in this matter and have the reform and the Cynosure close to their hearts. Let all imitate their good example and write quickly.

If each one will add to his effort for a good cause the name of a new subscriber, enclosing $4.00 for both, the sender may have also his choice of the following valuable pamphlets:

1. The Batavia Convention pamphlet, with the great speeches on that occasion, illustrations of the Morgan Monument, etc.; or

2. Egypt in History and Prophecy; or, Pharaoh proclaiming God, by the celebrated Robert Patterson, from Hasting's Anti-infidel Library; or

3. The Anti-masonic Scrap Book, a new and enlarged edition now in press, containing all the tracts published by the N. C. A.; or

4. The Island of Madagascar; the excellent history written by Gen. J. W. Phelps and noticed in a late Cynosure.

5. Copies of any of the pamphlets sold by the N. C. A., to the amount of 25 cents.

A CLUB OF FIVE

trial subscribers (two months for 25 cents) will just now be a valuable accession to the Cynosure list. To every friend who will get one up and enclose the $1.25 and addresses plainly written we will send either of the documents mentioned above.

FOR A CLUB OF TEN the sender may choose any two from the above list.

Get the Cynosure circulated in your town. The lodge does not thrive where it is read.

Postmaster General Gresham seems to make war without truce on the lotteries. He has met a temporary reverse in New Orleans, where the Louisiana company having engaged a national bank to do their business, the mail of the bank was ordered stopped. The courts have restored to the bank the privileges of the mails, but there must be some way of preventing these agencies of fraud from extending their business through the mails. Mr. Gresham is now preparing a bill for Congress by which he hopes to exclude papers which publish lottery advertisements from the pound-rate postage.

The late bloody riots in Ireland between Orangemen and the Land League will shake the confidence of many sympathizers in the Irish struggle for independence. If English troops are necessary to prevent Irishmen from flying at each other's throats, what shall prevent a perpetual broil when English restraint is withdrawn? There is, too, in the fore-front of these affrays, a striking bit of sentiment. The Orangemen were in all cases numerous enough to have crushed their political foes, and they are all strong supporters of the union with England. So that the British troops actually played the part of protecting their enemies and restraining their friends.

The western packers and the Congressmen who are elected by hog-raisers have hit upon a fine plan which everybody should be glad if they could carry out, although it may be under the name of retaliation. France has refused American pork; we will prohibit French wines. A bill to effect this is ready for Congress. Let it pass by all means. We want no French wines, when we have more by far made at home than is good for us. Such a prohibition will make a grand precedent in a short time when we get ready to suppress the drink business entirely. France and Germany may not be so far wrong either. The hog business is profitable, but there is an open question whether it supplies us with a very healthful diet.

The record of marriage licenses and divorces in Chicago for 1883, as given by the Inter Ocean, presents some striking figures. There were 10,046 licenses taken out and 986 applications for divorce filed, of which 650 were granted. Desertion, adultery, cruelty and drunkenness are the reasons for 635 of these divorces, the first reason prevailing in nearly one half the cases, it being the most convenient plea to urge, and causing least public scandal. It will be seen that about one marriage in every ten turns out a failure, and is legally broken up in nearly the proportion of one to fifteen. The record of nationality is not given in the table, but the foreign names are much the more numerous. Bad as this record is it is surpassed by some communities in the East, where the mismated hold a still higher ratio. The laxity of the marriage rite in some of our States leads to much of this trouble. Thus in New York it is decided in the courts that no special form is necessary—neither officiating magistrate or clergyman. A mock wedding is as good as any other. Of course where the marriage formula is of so little account the bond which is supposed to be made by it will be equally valueless.

A most wonderful report now comes from Japan that the government is giving a serious and earnest consideration to the advice of a high officer who has lately returned from a mission to this country and Europe. He urges that the government and people of Japan immediately embrace Christianity as the only true religion. This movement among the official circles in Japan may take a little time to develop, but it is like a trumpet call to the Christian church. Yet this is hardly more wonderful that the late reliable reports respecting the long unknown Corean nation which have come to us from both Japan and China. After the visit of our Commodore Shufeldt in 1882 and the treaty made by him with Corea, there came a terrible reaction of the conservative party, who in the revolt slew in one day, as was believed, the queen, the heir apparent and the ministers of state, thus wiping out the government. But a young nobleman saved the life of the queen, and on the restoration of order he was permitted as a special and extraordinary favor to visit Japan for the purpose of studying the civilization of other lands. In Japan this young nobleman fell under Christian influences, embraced the Gospel with all his heart, and began a translation of the Bible for his countrymen. He found therein, he said, "something that is better for me and our people than railroads, or telegraphs, or steamboats." With the co-operation of the missionaries he has gone on with his work and has also instructed all his countrymen who visited Japan, so that a number are ready to return as missionaries to Corea. Among their own people there has also been a wonderful change, since there is now an assurance that the Gospel may be proclaimed freely among millions, where but a few years since death or imprisonment awaited surely every one who embraced Christianity. Corea is about the same extent as Minnesota and has a population of 12,000,000, and in view of the remarkable possibilities for evangelization there the call upon American churches is like the voice of God calling us to arise and possess this land—to spare not, even for great sacrifices, in order to save this nation for Christ. Twenty-three years ago thousands of our young men started with one impulse from fireside and business, at the call from an earthly ruler to save the nation of the United States. May there not be at least scores who shall hear this voice of the King of Kings for volunteers to save Corea for Christ?

REFORM AND REFORMERS.

BY PROF. J. R. W. SLOANE, D. D.

All reforms that are either genuine or permanent are the outgrowth of Christianity; even those which apparently have but slight connection with religion such as sanitary, political, educational, labor reforms, etc., draw their inspiration either directly or indirectly from this source. Society has made no progress during all these eighteen hundred and more years except as moved by this impulse, as breathed upon by this wind from heaven. Those movements which are specially designated "moral reforms" are simply bringing out into new light, emphasizing and making practical and effective some Scriptural principle, the leaven affecting a portion of the mass which has not heretofore felt its operation.

The world has been resounding these few weeks past with the name and fame of Martin Luther; but who was Luther? A follower of "Him who being the holiest among the mighty, and the mightiest among the holy, lifted with his pierced hand empires off their hinges, and turned the stream of centuries out of its channel and still governs the ages." What was the Reformation of the sixteenth century? A mighty movement toward primitive Christianity; first of all, religious; secondarily, as religion and politics will always be found hand in hand, political.

The germ from which this vast Reformation sprung, was a single text of Scripture, "The just shall live by faith." This was the thunderbolt that Luther hurled with more than Olympian might against the towers of Popery and caused them to tremble from foundation-stone to battlement—in many lands to fall in final and irretrievable ruin; or, to change the figure, this was the sharp two-edged sword, like that of Milton's Michael with which he inflicted upon the Beast the deadly wound that has never been healed. Remember, O ye weaklings, ye soft sentimentalists, that Luther revolutionized the world with a "theologocal dogma;" the dogma of "Justification by faith." It is somewhat painful, and yet slightly amusing, to witness the subterfuges to which many of the eulogists of Luther have resorted, either ignorantly or intentionally, to obscure his view of that great doctrine, or the manner in which he held it. Dr. Phillip Brooks of Boston, is reported as having said in his great speech in New York, that Luther held the doctrine in a "mystical sense." Luther held it in a plain, straight-forward, clear sense, opposing it to all the worst righteousness of which the whole fabric of Popery is built up; and finding in it his most effective weapons, he insisted with his great forerunners, Paul and Augustine, that man is justified at the bar of divine justice not on account of his own works but on account of the righteousness of the Lord Jesus Christ, which righteousness becomes his by believing upon him and accepting him as a Saviour. Any other view is simply darkening counsel by words without knowledge, as any one may learn who will examine Luther's greatest work, his Commentary on the Epistle to the Galatians. In fact, while Luther was in some respects indebted to the "Mystics," no one was ever less of a mystic than he.

In Kaulbach's celebrated cartoon of "The Epoch of the Reformation," Luther is of course the prominent figure. He stands with either hand uplifted and grasping the sides of an open Bible which he is presenting to the world. On each side and in the foreground are the other great reformers, the scientists, the philosophers, the poets, the statesmen, etc., the distinguished men who arose in the period of the Reformation, or in that immediately succeeding it. Immediately behind Luther and above him, more dimly seen, appear the "Reformers before the Reformation;" Wickliffe, Huss, Jerome of Prague, Savonarola, and others of less note.

There was a long preparatory work before Luther could appear. Of these forerunners many suffered martyrdom. Their lives were the price that they paid for their efforts to reform the world. There is much philosophy, requiring some qualification. In the words of Sir William Hamilton: "Thus it is that no revolution in public opinion is the work of an individual, of a single cause, or of a day. When the crisis has arrived the catastrophe must ensue; but the agents through whom it is apparently accomplished, though they may accelerate, cannot originate its occurrence. Who believes but that for Luther or Zwingli, the Reformation would not have been? Their individual, their personal energy and zeal, perhaps, hastened by a year or two the event; but had not the public mind been already ripe for the revolt, the fate of Luther and Zwingli in the Sixteenth century would have been that of Huss and of Jerome of Prague in the Fifteenth. Woe to the revolutionist who is not himself a creature of the revolution. If he anticipate, he is lost. For it requires what no individual can supply, a long and powerful counter-sympathy in a nation to untwine the ties of custom which bind a people to the established and the old. This is finely expressed by Schiller in a soliloquy from the mouth of the revolutionary Wallenstein:

"What is thy purpose? Hast thou fairly weighed it?
Thou seekest even from its broad base to shake
The calm, enthroned majesty of power,
By ages of possession consecrate,
Firm rooted in the rugged soil of custom,
And with the people's first and fondest faith,
As with a thousand stubborn tendrils twined,
That were no strife when strength contends with strength,
It is not strength I fear, I fear no foe
Whom with my bodily eye I see and scan,
Who, brave himself, inflames my courage too.
It is an unseen enemy I dread,
Who, in the hearts of mankind, fights against me,
Fearful to me but from his own weak fears."

In these words of the philosopher and the poet, also a great philosopher, we have concentrated much of the "Philosophy of Reform."

"History is Philosophy teaching by example." In all great struggles these principles find ample illustration. Take the Puritan struggle in England, and that of the Covenanters in Scotland. I have lying on my table a book entitled, "Christianity and Civil Society," by one "Bishop Harris of Michigan," being the "Bohlen Lectures for 1882." The author does not weary in disparaging the Puritans and pronouncing Puritanism to be "one of the completest failures in history." But we have also here "A Short History of the English People" by J. R. Green, in which we find these memorable words: "It was from the moment of its seeming fall that its real victory began. As soon as the wild orgy of the Restoration was over, men began to see that nothing that was really worthy in the worst of Puritanism had been undone. The revels of Whitehall, the scepticism and debauchery of courtiers, the corruption of statesmen left the mass of Englishmen what Puritanism had made them—serious, earnest, sober in life and in conduct, firm in their love of Protestantism and freedom. In the Revolution of 1688 Puritanism did the work of civil liberty which it had failed to do in that of 1642. . . The whole history of English progress since the Restoration, on its moral and spiritual sides, has been the history of Puritanism," (Green, page 585.)

If this is failure, what would be success? Let us hear Carlyle on this point: "Alas! is it not too true what we said, that many men in the van do always like Russian soldiers, march into the ditch of Schwiednitz and fill it up with their dead bodies, that the rear may pass over them dry-shod, and gain the honor? How many earnest, rugged Cromwells, Knoxes, poor peasant Covenanters, wrestling, battling for very life, in rough miry places, have to struggle and suffer and fall greatly censured, bemired, before a beautiful Revolution of Eighty-eight can step over them in official pumps and silk stockings, with universal three-times-three." (Heroes and Hero Worship, page 130–1.)

Who is ignorant of the course of our own hard-fought battle with the demon of slavery? Much sentiment existed against the enormity from the first, and many bold denunciations of the sin are to be found in sermons and speeches all the way back to the time when —"That fatal and perfidious bark, Built in the eclipse and rigged with curses dark," landed its first cargo at Jamestown in August, 1619. God never left himself without witnesses against a system so unrighteous and inhuman. These voices as of men crying in the wilderness were not without their influence in creating public sentiment. Churches were organized which made slavery a term of communion and admitted no slave-holder within their pale, and whose ministers did not cease to cry aloud and spare not against this great national sin.

Just fifty years ago this current month the "American Anti-slavery Society" was formed, its declaration of principles published to the world, and an agitation commenced that continued until the death-blow was given to the diabolical system by the Emancipation Proclamation of Abraham Lincoln.

Neither time nor space will permit me to dwell upon the "Anti-slavery Movement," but history furnishes no finer example of the manner in which a genuine reform advances from its small, despised beginnings, until its consummation in a glorious triumph. We cannot refrain from quoting the words of Mary Grew at the recent semi-centennial of the American Anti-slavery Society:

"The present generation, born in this latter and better day of America's true freedom, cannot know what it was to be an Abolitionist in the country's 'Martyr Age.' We to whom it was given to know this, who in 'the rapture of the strife' forgot the pain, who 'out of weakness were made strong' by the invincible might of eternal truth and justice, thank God to-day for the privilege of sharing in the work of this great moral revolution."

I recall the eloquent author of these words as one of that band of marvellous women who gave themselves to the great cause, and remember her as she stood on the platform clad in "sober gray," and with a face transfigured with "the glory of the strife" plead in thrilling tones the cause of the oppressed.

I have been illustrating my theme from the great events of history, and from those movements which in their grandeur strike us more impressively. Let it be remembered that the advocates of a good cause never know whereunto it will grow, nor are they to concern themselves on this point at all. Let the work be done and leave results with God.

Those who are engaged in the "Reforms" of our day, "Temperance Reform," "Anti-secret Reform," "National Reform," may learn from the past the course of reform, and the fate of reformers; few of them enter into any earthly reward, even of honor. To some it is given to see the fruit of their labors, but most die on the field of battle.

I once heard that peerless orator, Wendell Phillips, give utterance to a view of this kind. He said for substance, Some think that when slavery is abolished the Abolitionists will rise to the highest sphere of honor in the estimation of men. For one I do not expect it. Such is not the teaching of history. It will fare with us as with the Scotch Covenanters of whom, as the poet has said:

"Stern rushing upon Claver's spears
They won the freedom and the scorn of after years."

Most of us are now in our humble way attempting to leaven society with correct principles on secretism, temperance and the claims of Christ. Our work is not in vain; thousands who thought little about it a few years ago are beginning to look upon "Masonry" with contempt and disgust. It will gradually melt away under the heat of public opinion until it will be abandoned or become so insignificant as to be unworthy of notice. The Rum traffic is as certain to cease as that the bloody spectacles of the Roman Amphithcatre have ceased. When the present writer made his first speech on the platform of the Anti-slavery Society in 1857, there was less prospect of the destruction of slavery than there is now of the overthrow of the Rum-traffic. In six years it was a thing of the past!

The movement which calls this nation to a recognition of the regal claims and authority of Him who is King of King and Lord of Lords, to an acknowledgement of the supremacy of the divine law, must, in the loftiness of its claims and the greatness of its ends, take precedence of all others, nevertheless as Cicero says of the Arts, they are all united by a common bond of sympathy and depend one upon the other. So we may say of all these reforms. We hope to see them all working in harmony and toward a common end, as they are all really united in the one common bond of fidelity to the cause of Christ.

Many of us who are now alive may not see the results, nor enjoy the fruition of our labor here below. What boots it? We serve a fruitful Master and he hath a crown of glory for every faithful soldier; for him who falls by the way in the weary march, for him who falls bravely fighting for his Lord, and for him who shall see the final triumph and join the general acclaim, "The kingdoms of this world have become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ."

On, then, fellow soldiers! Up with your hearts! Grasping the shield of faith and the sword of the Spirit, make aggressive warfare upon every form of evil until the kingdom of Christ shall be established from the rising to the setting sun.

Allegheny City.

LIKE HIM.

BY C. A. S. TEMPLE.

"We shall be like Him." 1 John 3:2.

"Like Him," "The Word," "The Word of God,"
Whose feet this vale of tears once trod,
Our great "Emmanuel"—"Wondrous name"—
Who bled and died and bore our shame.

"Like Him," "The Faithful and the True,"
"The Alpha and Omega" too;
Him who His own once scorned to own;
Now seated on His Father's throne.

"Like Him" who all our sorrows bore;
Whom now th' angelic hosts adore;
Once hated, mocked and crucified;
Now risen, ascended, glorified.

"Like Him," the Father's only heir,
Yet we, "joint heirs," His treasures share;
Made meet, "by grace," for His abode,
"We shall be near and 'like' our God."

"Like Him" we'll from the grave arise
When "the last trump" shall rend the skies;
Then, "changed" "like Him," our song shall be,
"Death's swallowed up in victory!"

GOOD MEN BUT BAD EXAMPLES.

Said Dea. W., "I don't belong to the Masons, but if Masonry was a bad thing, so many good ministers would not belong to it." Another friend said, "I don't know much about Masonry, but if it were not a good institution Bro. H. would not belong to, and uphold it, for he is a good man if there is one."

Now this "good-man" argument seems to have greater weight in favor of Masonry than any other in the minds of the goodish, but uninformed part of community. The conclusion reached by them seems to be, "Good men do not practice or uphold that which is bad; so if we follow them we are all right."

Let us look at this argument in the light of reason and facts. Shall we follow the example of Noah the "preacher of righteousness" in getting drunk? or of Jacob in lying and deceiving? or of David, the man after God's own heart, in polluting the bed of Uriah? or will it be safe to deny our Master because Peter, one of Christ's chosen disciples, did?

You will say, these men did not adhere to and justify their sins but repented of and forsook them. Yes, and here comes the true evidence; they were good men in that they did not continue to adhere to and justify evil when they saw it to be such, but openly renounced and forsook it. And here is where it will be safe for us to follow these good men in the forsaking their evil ways, rather than in committing evil.

Those who are truly good do not seek to cover or hide their iniquity, and is not here a good test both to try ourselves and others by?

Are we willing to, and do we acknowledge our wrong ways openly, and flee from them, and sincerely warn others to do the same? If we do not, have we a right to the tree of life, and shall we "enter in through the gates into the city," and hear the Master say to us, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

M. P. N.

A vague desire to be better, stronger, holier, will come to nothing. Character is built, like the walls of an edifice, by laying one stone upon another. Lay hold of some one single fault and mend it. Put the knife, with God's help, to some ugly besetting sin. Stop that one leak that has let so much foul bilge-water into your soul. Put into practice some long-neglected duty. The first step to improvement with one person was to banish his decanters; with another to discontinue his secular paper on Sunday morning; with another to ask the pardon of an injured friend; with another to go after some street Arabs and take them to a mission school. He can never be rich toward God who despises a pennyworth of true piety. Holiness is just the living to the Lord in the least things as well as the greatest; for graces can only be gathered one by one.

ITALIAN FREEMASONRY.

In Italy the Freemasons trace their origin up to the commencement of the sixteenth century. Lodges existed in Venice under the Republic, and in Rome there are seals proving that under the Bourbons and the Popes the brethren held their meetings in Naples and in Rome. The rulers of Italy, however, treated them with much severity. The first Napoleon was a great patron and protector of the society; and during the Napoleonic era the lodges sprung up rapidly everywhere. Joseph Napoleon was Grand Master; Beauharnais, when he came to Milan, was named Grand Master and Commander-in-Chief of the Supreme Council of the thirty-third grade.

With the fall of Napoleon the Freemasons were persecuted even more fiercely than of old; the rulers of Italy enacted laws against them; the Popes excommunicated them; an individual suspected of being a Freemason was condemned to ten years of the galleys. The lodges were of course dissolved, and gradually the Carbonari Society absorbed the old members, who were called cousins instead of brothers. The early revolutions of the present century were directed by the Carbonari. In Naples alone they numbered 652,000 and 200,000 in Sicily. In Piedmont all the Liberals were Carbonari. The cry was the Constitution, and Constitutions were granted in Naples and in Piedmont. Charles Albert was a Carbonari when Prince of Carignano. But when the new Constitutions and their partisans were overthrown, the members dispersed, the society naturally lost its vigor, and the young initiators of the new era found it inadequate to their wants. Mazzini, a Freemason, was also a Carbonari, but he substituted the young Italy party for both. Still the Freemasons were not extinguished. During the wars and revolutions of 1848 and 1849 lodges were re-established in all the chief cities of Italy, and again suppressed when "Order" was restored. In 1859 the association revived, especially in Florence, and in 1860 in Naples and Sicily. In Rome, despite the vigilance of the Pope, Freemasons of the lodge Fabio Massimo met at each other's houses secretly, and with the utmost precaution. When Rome was proclaimed the Capital of Italy it was decided to make it the seat of the Grand Orient, with which are now connected 186 lodges, with about 9,300 members. Up to that time Gen. Frappoli was Grand Master, but he resigned when he went to France to offer his services to the French Republic fighting against Prussia, as both the Emperor of Germany and the Crown Prince are Grand Masters. Guiseppe Mazzoni was named Grand Master in his stead. In him the Freemasons have a chief of intelligence, spotless integrity, and stainless patriotism. As an advocate at Prato he had acquired fame for his honesty and skill. When Archduke Leopold II. granted a Constitution, he was named Deputy for Prato to the Assembly, then Minister of Justice, and when the Grand Duke fled, was elected, with Guerrazzi and Montanelli, Tuscan Triumvir. When the Grand Duke was brought back by the Austrians, he condemned Guerrazzi to perpetual imprisonment; Mazzoni escaped the same fate by flight, but was condemned by default, and also to pay the entire expenses of the trial, and, as his property lay in the Grand Duke's domains, he was reduced to absolute poverty, and supported his wife and daughter by giving lessons in Paris. On his return to his native city in 1859, he remained stanch to his principles, maintained the unity of Italy above all secondary ideas; but when Tuscady was annexed would have no office or emoluments or decorations, living at Prato as he had done from his youth. Only in 1872, after long and obstinate refusal, did he allow himself to be named Deputy for his native City of Prato, and he now sits on the Mountain, speaks rarely, and votes with the Opposition. For his rigid severity in all that concerns the order and morality of the society he is surnamed Cato.

The first lodge opened in Rome took the name of the "Roma Constituente," This lodge was dissolved, and the "Universo" and "Tito Vezia" replaced it. A third, to be opened a few days after the solemn inauguration of the Temple, takes the title of "Uguaglianza." Rome numbers about 1,000 members, many of them Deputies and Senators. The Grand Secretary of the Italian Freemasons is Luigi Castellazzo, whose life has been spent half in prison and half in the field. In 1848 he fought in the students' legion of the Piedmontese Bersaglieri; then followed Garibaldi to Rome, fought to the end, and was imprisoned by the French. He fought again in 1859 with the Piedmontese; in 1866 with Garibaldi on the Volturno, when he was seriously wounded; and again with Garibaldi in 1866. In 1867 he went into Rome to prepare the revolution, and was seized by the Papal authorities and kept in prison until liberated by the Italian army in 1870. Of Garibaldi little need be said save that he is a member of every lodge in Italy and of many in North and South America, France and England. He is a "good brother" and the Masons are very proud of him.—London Daily News.

IMPORTANT MOVEMENT AMONG THE FRIENDS.

The church of God, as his elect, mystical bride on earth, is called to act on his behalf in two branches of service.

1st. In teaching and supporting the truth respecting him, and in his stead offering the salvation which he has provided to all mankind. "We pray you in Christ's stead be reconciled to God."

2d. In reproving sin and bearing witness against all manner of evil. And it is in this respect that the church is said to be "Terrible as an army with banners," for no form of wickedness can long hold up its head in power with the voice of the whole church of the living God witnessing against it.

The Society of Friends originally was an example of faithfulness in both these respects; and while on the one hand they labored to bring others to the same grace whereof they had been made partakers; on the other hand, men of all classes, from the king on his throne to the captive in his dungeon, found their sins set in order before them, and the witnesses of godly men confronting them at every departure from strict obedience to the law and will of God. "And they overcame by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony."

And this standard of labors in the cause and kingdom of our Lord has been maintained in a good degree through the whole history of our denomination to the present time. As more light was given from time to time, those things which were of the darkness became visible and were condemned and separated from our communion and witnessed against so that as one branch of the great church of God we might stand firm at our post, and having done all, might be found with our skirts clear of the blood of all men before the throne of God.

But now, in the secret combinations of our time, an enemy of greater power and more formidable presence has arisen and come to the front, threatening to overwhelm everything dear to the heart of a Christian and patriot, and we, unlike our progenitors in the truth, are disposed to flee before him, like Israel before Goliath, and hide our heads in fear and shame; and worse yet, to reach out the friendly hand and let down the bars and let him in and make him welcome among us.

I am very much grieved at this manifest declension of spiritual power and uprightness wherein we no longer inherit the promise, "One shall chase a thousand and two put ten thousand to flight." And I believe there are others who, like myself, would wish to see a more complete separation from the sin of secret combinations and a more pronounced and firm testimony against them.

But such a power of influence is against us, so few are willing to hear anything about it, and everything is hushed to silence in our meetings on this subject; and as silence gives consent, we who mourn over this declension are really implicated in it.

Now, what are we to do? Remain passive with this burden on our souls? or leave the communion in which we have spent our best days and join some other branch of Christ's church which is doing its duty in this respect more faithfully? This I could not do without first making an effort to arouse our Zion to a sense of her duty. And then, though we found more power in this respect elsewhere, yet we might find some other failure equally as great on some other subject.

On the whole review of the situation it appears best to call for a conference of those who are feeling that our society ought to stand up in this cause and take this subject into careful and prayerful consideration and see what we should do, and if best, form an association to bear this testimony. Will Friends interested take up the subject and speak their minds in the Christian Worker? Those who could not attend could write their thoughts to the conference, and that would help, and all could pray for Divine guidance in the conference.—Cynthia Derbyshire in the Christian Worker.

Growth in grace manifests itself by simplicity, that is, a greater naturalness of character. There will be more usefulness and less noise; more tenderness of conscience and less scrupulosity; there will be more peace, more humility. When the full corn is in ear, it bends down because it is full.—Cecil.

We hear the rain fall, but not the snow. Bitter grief is loud, calm grief is silent.

Every good deed that we do is not only a present pleasure, but a prop for the future.

THE SERMON.

PREACHED IN THE COLLEGE CHAPEL, WHEATON, DEC. 16, 1883, BY REV. A. J. CHITTENDEN.

"Who is my neighbor?" Luke 5: 20. "A certain MAN went down from Jerusalem to Jericho."

A writer in the Masonic Quarterly says he has often exhorted the candidate in the initiatory ceremonies to imitate the conduct of the "good Samaritan." If Masonry is a fair exponent of what Christ taught in this story, it is certainly a very good institution, and we will not quarrel with it. But if Masonry is a sacrilegious boast and a fraud, we shall insist upon exposing the fraud and arraigning it before the bar of God's blasphemed Word.

When Christ answered the question, Who is my neighbor? he said, "A certain MAN went down from Jerusalem"—not a white man, nor a red man, but a MAN; not a bondman, not a freeman, not a foreigner nor a native, not a healthy man nor a sickly man, not a young man nor an old man—he was simply "a certain man."

Luke intimates that the young man ought to have known better than to ask the question which he did "to justify himself." Moses did not teach any contracted definition of the word neighbor. The Decalogue did not suggest any. In the statutes of Leviticus the duties of hospitality are most expressly inculcated, and ample provision was made for "the stranger within thy gates."

The servant who was maltreated was therefore released from his engagement, and prisoners of war were protected in their personal rights. The feeling of nationality was strong and self-protective, but the laws of equity and beneficence were made broad in their application and the brotherhood of the race was taught in every provision for the treatment of the individual man. The corners of the field and the gleanings of vines and fruit-trees were left for the poor.

More than this, the very brutes were provided for in these ancient laws of God. "Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox" used in threshing, was a very liberal extension of the duty of benevolence. Christ says of the man who requested a messenger sent to his five brethren: "They have Moses and the Prophets." If God should give laws which could not be understood, there would be a fault in the laws. But there was no good reason for the narrow sense which many Jews had attached to the word neighbor, and this is stated in the fact that the young man "wished to justify himself."

Christ did not come to extend the law of love as a law, but rather to preach the application of it in its original universal terms. "Ye have heard it said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor and hate thine enemy; but I say unto you, Love your enemies."

The obligation to do good to another human being arises in the very simple fact that the other being is capable of suffering or blessing at your hands. This principle is not limited to the human race. "If an ox or an ass fall into the pit, will ye not pull him out?" is an appeal to the common goodness of mankind. The creature is capable of suffering, and on that ground claims your assistance. So far as you can relieve the suffering or increase the happiness of man or beast you are obliged to do it, if it does not cause a greater distress in some other direction or extent. Masonry does not stand the test of the common sentiment of goodness, not to speak of laws of Moses and Christ. If a society should be formed here in Wheaton for the avowed purpose of relieving the distress of a particular kind of horses or dogs, with the implied intention of giving the sufferings of all other horses and dogs no attention, such a society would receive the immediate condemnation of the public press. The Masonic press would join in the protest if the second thought of consistency did not restrain them. If Mr. Burgh were the president of an association of that kind, he would long ago have been consumed by the indignation and ridicule of the age. "How much, then, is a man better than a sheep."

Sin and barbarism have not happened to the lower animals. This calamity is confined to the human race, and only its remoter consequences are felt by the lesser creatures. Every bird of the flock hears the outcry of another bird and flies to the rescue. Every individual beast in the herd feels the pain of another, and the law of neighborhood is as wide and generous among these lower creatures as the beneficent heart of their Creator. Even the apparent exceptions are explainable in the fact that extreme hunger renders the better nature of the brute insane. What a sad comment on human nature as it is, when a portion of the able-bodied men of a community organize for the expressed purpose of limiting the law of benevolence! Every man, woman or child in the community is neighbor to every other person in the same community. Every human being is neighbor to every other human being whenever there is an occasion for goodness to pass from the one to the other.

The originating thought in all secret brotherhoods, is LIMITED BENEFICENCE. The most able are selected to minister to the liabilities of others who are able to return the favor. It is expected that each one will get as much as he gives. It is mutual beneficence, but not mutual benevolence. For as soon as you use the word "mutual" with benevolence, the excellency of the virtue is wanting. It is no longer benevolence, but barter. Christianity says, "Do good, hoping for nothing again." Masonry says, "Do good to such as will swear to return the favor;" and then it recommends the study of the "Good Samaritan!"

The reason why Masonry and its progeny leave out Christ from their religion is not merely to accommodate it to all sects and nationalities, but also to accommodate their creed to the natural meanness of the unregenerate heart. To do good for pay is as high as natural goodness ever reached in its creed-making for the purpose of artificial association.

But all these artificial secret alliances in or under the general society of the state, are a kind of breach of faith towards the public. The very idea of a community carries with it the implied agreement to act together for the common good, and in the distribution of common rights and benefits. It is a compact in which all agree to share alike in the opportunities which could not be had without society.

One of these advantages is the common defense against enemies. Another is division of labor and commercial exchange. But suppose one of the Atlantic colonies to have come to the land of the savage under such stress of want and danger that for a time they cling to the bond of union which holds them in their coming and their landing, and act altogether in guarding the welfare of the colony.

When do a portion of that people acquire the right to organize themselves under secret forms for the purpose of getting more than the common share of the good things which the public have acquired? That would be to ask, When may a part of the community become traitors to the whole? The word "traitor" does not overstate the crime when a part of any society retire from the rest and yet remain among them, appropriating what is distributed of the common blessings of society, and, in addition, an extra portion obtained by stealth.

Organized stealing is the lesser crime of Masonry and all kindred bodies. Adam did not hide until he had committed a sin. Hiding from society is a confession of guilt, and investigation has generally discovered something worse than silliness in these enterprises. The methods of secrecy are thievish because the purpose is generally thievish. The object is to hold the public at a disadvantage. Three men with a plan are equal in warfare to thirty without a plan. This discovery is made to do service in all the concerns which society has evolved. Equal rights in trade are impossible where trade compacts are made by a part of the community and the other part are unsuspicious or unorganized. These methods of taking from others what in a better condition of the commercial society would be theirs, are all of them simply thievish. They take the property or privileges of others without their knowledge or consent, which covers the definition of theft in its essential features.

Most people know that there are great advantages in what is called "the market," if that peculiar convenience is in a natural and healthy coudition. The market system, when not interfered with by artificial divisions and conspiracies, allows each man to make or produce what he knows best how to make, and to obtain for it a fair price in open competition. There is in the very organization of society an implied understanding that such shall be the condition of the exchange system. What, then, if a part agree in secret, either with or without an oath, that they will favor one another to the injury of outside parties engaged in the same business? The common feeling of the community is that there is a breach of faith against the compact; that the parties in the conspiracy have committed a crime. The result is an artificial and uncertain state of commerce, and, therefore, of industry.

Suppose, now, the rest of the community should retaliate and agree among themselves to trade only with each other? What have you left that you call society? It is bad enough to have people divided politically into fragments that must have an annual squabble for places at the manger. It is still worse to have Christian society divided under a dozen pet names. Suppose, then, we add to these cleavages and rents, half a dozen trade unions, then a few social cliques and clubs. Let every man wear some badge of privacy. Let every factory, store, shop, office, cupboard and band-box be marked with some trademark or trick of commerce, and what have you for society? Society!—burrowing under ground and every several rat-hole stowed with systematic pilferings—a state of "society" that naturally makes one pray for another flood to drown out the rats. You have, then, the natural outcome of the essential principle of secrecy in time of peace. It is all a breach of good faith with the community. To whatever extent Christian people do these things, let them answer the questions, Are you providing things honest in the sight of all men? Must you also do as other men do?

Do churches ever break their agreement with society? I think I have observed such a thing. A church calls on the enterprising people of a new community and secures their liberal assistance in erecting a much-needed house of worship and securing pastoral services and the happy accompaniments of a Christian church, simple and sufficient.

What happens in the feelings of that community five years later, when they find that they have not a great-hearted church of the Lord Jesus, with its generous and fatherly Gospel invitation over its door, but instead of this, some degenerate, retrograde, self-centered worshipers of some human name a hundred and fifty years old? Such a church cannot make much headway in converting men from any other clique, social or religious. If twenty men in one room worship the devil for about the same reason that twenty men and women in another room worship some sainted man who made a specialty of some neglected thing in religion or morals, where, after all, is the essential difference? Saint-worship is bad among the Catholics and sun-worship is bad among the Parsees and the Masons. Jehovah said, "Thou shalt have NO other gods before me." You have no better right to make Arminius, or Calvin, or Wesley, or Roger Williams your little gods, than you have to caper around the altar of a Masonic lodge and swear obedience to the little god "in the east," with his hat on.

God gave the Christian church to the world—a great-souled, benevolent institution, with arms long enough to embrace every devoted follower of that Savior whom the Masons lock out of their sanctuary. It is exceedingly important that we do not seem to lock Christians out of ours with keys that are not exactly of "the kingdom of heaven." The world has rights in the Gospel. We are the stewards.

But I was saying that all these forms of organized selfishness that ignore the common rights of the community are condemned by the common sentiment of mankind. The taking of sanguinary and barbarous oaths is not the only thing that gives character to secretism. There is a vast deal of organized secrecy that is not under any very shocking forms of adjuration. There are things done in secret in these United States of America, that are inflicting wrongs and injuries of every conceivable kind, without the smell of blood or anything worse than Mammon-worship in their ritual, because the self-interest of the powers in compact is quite sufficient without an oath. Besides, if things unseemly should be revealed, "What will you do about it?" The Congress of these States is furnished annually with the enactments of another congress which is not of these States, but of private corporations, and whose acts are considered as virtually passed when they are presented to the Congressional committees. The secret alliances of wealth have made the beginning of a history that must end either in industrial bondage or in a world-wide revolution by the ballot or the bayonet. The labor unions that belt the continent and the civilized world, had their occasion given them in the corporate leagues of the wealthy—in the secret slave system that the leading banker of England says is "better than any other, because this one of the usurer and currency contractor does not carry with it the care of the slave, while all the older systems required that the master should care for his servant."

Our legislation has been so far dictated by the spirit of these clans among the powerful that enormous benefits are granted to the few out of public domains and natural sources of wealth which belong to the people.

And these things are not done openly, but craftily. If they were done openly like the proceedings of the ancient Areopagus, I would say to the people, "Very well, you are to blame for what your servants do, because you knew what they were doing." But they do not know. Crafty terms are employed to cover up the laws that are passed. Innocent names are given to wicked acts. Their originators seem to have been schooled in secrecy. An act to cheat the people out of $300,000,000 at a single stroke is called, "An Act to Strengthen the Public Credit!" What a pious name! Who wouldn't strengthen the public credit? The President himself said he did not know till six months after its passage what the intent of the act was!

The governments of the world never borrow money or run into debt, they simply "sell bonds" or "market their paper." The people might be frightened if they knew what was being done. A mortgage on a house is as good as a "cupola" for a while—till you know what it means. For the very laudable purpose of raising revenues the good people consent to be fined for buying where they can buy the cheapest or for selling where they can sell at the best. But it is not meant that they shall regard the matter in that light. There must be some very powerful causes at work that can account for so much secret legislation in this and other countries. The educating power of the old lodge systems can be very easily discerned in the ordinary matters of the state. Are men going to school once a week from their twentieth year till they are forty-five, without being so thoroughly trained in the art of defrauding that you can trust them to tell the public just what they intend to do in office, or to stand proof against the assaults of bribery?

The entire political structure of this and other countries is underlaid with secret wires, and the enginery that operates them is the discipline and the habits of the lodge power. Perhaps you will be unwilling to admit that the caucus system of our country is virtually a kind of secret cabinet prescribing the boundaries of party freedom. They need no oath. The division of the spoils is a bond of union. We have three houses in the national legislature: the Senate, the House of Representatives and the Caucus. Now if you know the powers that work the caucus you know how we are governed. Before the birth of the Grange and the Grand Army of the Republic, the hand of Masonry and Odd-fellowship was on the wires of the caucus. Now these old masters must first operate in the Grange office and in the Grand Army office; then all is ready as before.

For the purpose of office-stealing, or any other stealing, an oath may be useful, but it is not always necessary. Where the system includes murder, an oath is very necessary to cover the crime, and a religion is necessary to preserve the oath. Masonry uses up a vast amount of religion in its annual operations. It cannot run safely without it. The spectres of its worship must be shrouded in a religious mist, and the moral sense must be reconstructed to suit the exigencies of such a service.

We have, therefore, in Masonry, the most prodigious specimen of blasphemy that has ever been invented by man or demons. It shams the person of Jehovah, and drags into its festivals the Holy Bible, as Belshazzar did the vessels of the Temple; it shams the Holy Sacrament of Christ; it shams the doctrine of the resurrection and the doctrine of the new birth by the Holy Ghost; it converts the New Jerusalem into a corral of creatures as various as the contents of the sheet that Peter saw, and proposes to scale the walls of the Holy City without any pass whatever, save obedience and the payment of Peter's pence to the pope of the lodge. Men who have come to believe that it is right to take the life of a confessor without the form of law, and who have in that fact become fitted for any crime that the fraternity orders, are passed to the "rest" for the saints with all the assurance of a cannibal asking the blessing on a thanksgiving feast.

The ripest fruit of Masonry is moral lunacy and the neighborhood principles of a Bedouin outlaw. It violates every law of God or man. There is no place for it in the universe. Its oath reserves no provision for respecting any authority save that of the lodge. The stripping of the candidate in the ante-room of the lodge is the symbol of the moral and governmental stripping of the man's soul in the act of initiation. The vow he made his wife is stripped off, and that, too, that bound him to his children. The oath of citizenship is stripped off, and he is taught that Masonry "cannot recognize the supreme power of the state." The allegiance due to his Creator is not admitted by any proviso, and no place for conscience remains in all the realm of that dismal bondage.

Any one of these ten reasons are sufficient to deter a sensible and virtuous person from the least desire to share in the blessings of Masonry:

First, it is a moral contradiction of the great law of love as rendered and exemplified in the words and life of Jesus.

Second, it is a most blasphemous abuse of the sacred utterances of the Old and New Testament, and of the Name of the Creator.

Third, it is a profanation of the oath under sacred forms and an impious perversion of obligations that belong exclusively to the state.

Fourth, Masonry annuls all obligations that make the security of home, state government or religion.

Fifth, it requires a waste of time and money, and the expectant victim of its avarice and cunning is defrauded.

Sixth, it offers no such association as a spiritual person can afford to be surrounded with.

Seventh, Masonry requires the victim to serve the individual against the interests of the state or community, to interpose his secret obligations in the way of justice and to render trial by jury a farcical suggestion of what ought to be.

Eighth, Masonry is a systematic thieving of social rights, honors, offices and goods, and an organized persecutor of all who dare to raise a protest against its encroachments upon the natural and civil rights of the people.

Ninth, it expressly requires murder and aids and abets all the crimes known to the general codes of civil governments.

Tenth, Masonry is the avowed mother of the whole litter of underground fraternities, and has inspired all of them with the spirit and manners of heathenism, while it expressly denies the need of any other authority for the remission of sins or any other service, and faith for the perfection of the soul in righteousness and an abundant entrance into heaven.

To the readers of the Cynosure, or to those who have one hundredth part of the other evidence in print, there is no need of offering testimony on any of these specifications. The opinion is fast prevailing, and very conservative prints are giving utterance to it, that no man can serve Christ and Masonry at the same time, and that no church can safely tolerate its vote or controlling voice in either the inner or outer court of the sanctuary. It is also the opinion of many good citizens—and one that I hope will sometime become a law for the nation and the nations—that any league of men bound together as Masonry binds them, shall be deprived of both office and ballot privileges, and be liable to exclusion from any jury on motion of either party in the suit.

It is the SYSTEM of Masonry that we are assailing, while very many of its nominal adherents we regard with kindly and sorrowful consideration.

REFORM NEWS.

MOB ARGUMENT AGAIN.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

ROCHESTER, Jan. 8, 1884.

With Elder S. Wilder I attempted to hold a meeting in the Baptist church at Arcadia on last Sabbath evening. The weather was extremely severe and the audience not large. We opened with singing, reading a portion of Scripture and prayer. I then spoke of the anti-Christian character of Freemasonry as shown by the initiatory ceremonies and oath of the first degree. As I proceeded to illustrate and enforce the lessons of the order and show up its practical workings, a member of the craft began shaking the grate in the stove so vigorously that I could scarcely be heard. Pausing for a moment, he ceased his efforts until I began to speak, when he applied himself more vigorously at the shaker. This was repeated some four or five times, until others, who seem to have taken the shaking as a signal for business, began a general stampede, slamming doors and groaning. It was impossible to proceed further in an orderly manner and I ceased to speak.

Bro. Wilder knelt in prayer, and while he was offering up a fervent petition for the frantic crew, they were crying, "Choke him off! Put him out!" and the Mason who had exerted his energies on the stove was putting out the lights.

At the close of Bro. Wilder's prayer I pronounced the benediction and we withdrew amid the jeers of a crowd who have disgraced themselves if not the town in which they live. So far as I learned there was no one injured and the damage was confined to the breaking of a few window-lights. There are many in Arcadia who would meet such a demonstration of barbarism, incited by a Freemason, with a stern rebuke; and, God willing, I purpose to give the good people of Arcadia, whether Masons or not, an opportunity before very long to show whether they will tolerate free speech on the vexed question of the secret orders.

JANUARY 8th.

Our train has just swept by the Morgan monument. I obtained a full view of base, shaft and statue, as it rises above all surrounding monuments in stately grandeur. It is in the right place and to-day defies Masonic rage and the fierce, drifting snow that glides in untarnished beauty from its granite surface. Not one of the thousands who contributed towards its erection who would not be proud to look upon it and think of the message it will carry down the ages.

Having done well for the monument let us do better for the Washington sanctuary and enroll more than three thousand among the contributors to that great undertaking.

J. P. STODDARD.

A HOPEFUL CITY.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Saturday, Dec. 29th, I visited Baltimore, and on Sabbath attended Rev. Harvey Johnson's Union Baptist church. They have more than 1,000 members, a fine house of worship, and are in a prosperous condition.

The entire service was devoted to prayer for foreign missions. The colored Baptist churches have recently sent out six missionaries to the Vey tribe in West Africa, and by arrangement all the churches were to spend the last Sabbath in the year in prayer for them.

As I had visited the Vey country and was somewhat acquainted with that people, I was invited to make remarks, which were attentively listened to. The pastor is thoroughly with us in our reform, and though he has many secretists in his church, is doing what he can to give them the truth.

In the afternoon I spoke by invitation in the Leadenhall St. Baptist church. This church has from 400 to 500 members, and a fine house of worship. Last year its pastor called together about thirty of his members who were Masons and Odd-fellows, and I gave them a lecture of an hour and a half, and spent another hour in answering questions. Some of them were convinced and gave up their orders, and the anti-secrecy sentiment has had a rapid development. I spoke on "the Masonic and Christian brotherhoods contrasted," and was listened to by several hundred colored people, most of whom were in sympathy with me, though the minister who sat with me in the desk wore Masonic emblems and was evidently not well pleased.

On Monday and Tuesday I called on the other colored ministers, three of whom are in hearty sympathy with us, and read the Cynosure with much interest. I had arranged to do more work there, but on Wednesday morning was called to Washington, and on Thursday evening started for Chicago.

I regard Baltimore as a most important field of labor, especially among the colored people, who are as a rule intelligent, moral and industrious. They are greatly en snared by the secret orders and have a great number of them. Little children of both sexes are made members of these orders, and their dues are paid till adult years, when it is expected they will become active workers. I need not say that it is a very heavy tax on the time and money of a poor people, and is a great obstacle to the growth and power of Christianity. Happily the most pious and intelligent are beginning to see this, and the influence of these orders is somewhat diminished. I hope to return there and work for a season.

H. H. HINMAN.

FROM THE NEW YORK STATE AGENT.

EAST WILSON, N. Y., Jan. 3, 1884.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The winter campaign has fairly begun. Reform work here is taking a fresh start. The devil is mad.

I took the train Tuesday morning, Dec. 25, at Dale for Lockport. Arriving at 2 o'clock, went to Mr. Oliver's, known to many readers of the Cynosure as the gentleman who erected the Morgan monument. Leaving a valise with him I started for Bro. P. D. Miller's, who resides some miles distant. A man soon overtook me who was going past Bro. M's, and I gladly accepted his proffered invitation to ride. Entering into conversation I found that he was a hotel-keeper, a liquor-seller, and a high Mason. He gave Bro. M. a good recommendation by calling him a "temperance fanatic."

Bro. M. was not at home when we arrived, but returned in the evening. He of course gave me a hearty welcome, as he has "all the brothers that have passed this way before." I don't mean on the square. Encouraged by his zeal I at once went to work, called on Masons or Antis as I came to them, gave them tracts, etc. It would be vain for me to attempt to describe all the conversations that took place. But will relate one for example.

On my way from Warren's Corners to Bro. Asa Warren's (known to many readers of the Cynosure as an active worker in our reform), I chanced to meet a young Mason, name Ed Parker, whose zeal for the Masonic institution had overcome his common sense. When I made known my business he became angry and spoke nearly as follows: "I mind my own business, sir, and wish every one else would do the same."

I replied: "This is my business, and I am minding it the best I know how."

Mr. Parker, rather puzzled, said: "There was an old Anti-masonic tramp came along here a little while ago by the name of Stoddard, who lectured in the church here, and did his cause more harm than good in the opinion of all intelligent persons. We have received fifteen members into our lodge in Lockport, as the result of his lecture.

I replied, "Would it not be wisdom for you, sir, instead of denouncing him as old tramp, to turn in and help him in his work if such are the facts?"

"No sir," he said, "such speeches influence a class of men to join the order that we don't want. We never advise men to join with us. The fact is we have just turned away ten men, because their character was not good.

"Your theory sounds very plausible, sir, no one will wish to join the Masonic society, except bad men, when they know its true character, and for that reason we intend to continue the lectures. Get the good men out and the bad ones in and it will rot down without any opposition. For example, decaying potatoes distributed around the cellar will not decompose near as fast as when placed together. Good morning, sir; perhaps I may see you again when you get Hiram killed."

I called on brethren Eastman, Alberty, Warren and others who are fighting nobly for the right. After consultation it seemed best to appoint a meeting at a schoolhouse near Beebe's mills for New Year's eve.

Nearly an hour before the lecture, a number of boys collected in the house and commenced stamping and yelling. I told them that they must either leave or stop their noise. They went out, a large boy joined them with a mouth organ, and the music and dancing proceeded outside until nearly time for the lecture. Occasionally they opened the door and cried "Anti-mason," etc. I suppose this was the Masonic argument, at least the Masons did not produce any other during the evening.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A NORTH MISSOURI CONVENTION.

AVALON, Mo., Jan. 5, 1884.

MR. EDITOR:—For some time I have been noticing quite carefully the indications as given in the Cynosure. Respecting the paper itself I may say that it pleases me quite well. Of course, not everything suits me. That is not to be expected. But in leading an aggressive warfare against secret organizations in general, I think it does nobly, as well as in keeping its readers well informed respecting the work being done in this direction.

I have been much interested in noticing the indications of success in the effort to establish a national organ at Washington City. This certainly has all the marks of a wise movement. I trust it may prove abundantly successful. My attention has been attracted by the fact that, so far as I can learn, there are quite a number of men of national reputation, identifying themselves with the reform. I am pained at noticing that comparatively so few of the leading ministers are giving their support to this work. The church, as I understand it, has one great mission, the salvation of the world. It should endeavor to accomplish this mission in a two-fold manner: first, by faithfully presenting to the world the crucified Redeemer, as the only source of salvation, by preaching a pure, uncontaminated gospel; second, by making use of all possible righteous means to prove to the world the fact of present salvation, by exhibiting to the world a high type of morality, religious devotion, holy living. This second element is fully as essential as the first, as without it all preaching will prove fruitless, for lack of present evidence of saving power.

If the church would accomplish this two-fold work, it must do it by positively discountenancing sin, and encouraging virtue. Not that it shall manifest a spirit of ostracism or Pharisaism, but must adopt such measures as will keep it pure from the debilitating influence of approved sin. The ministry are justly looked to as leaders in reproving and discountenancing sin. Should they not be more fully engaged in this work?

I am much pleased with the indications favorable to the rapid growth of the sentiments expressed in the platform of the American party. The conventions that are being held are a very strong expression of the purpose of many noble men to awaken the people to the necessity of freedom from the tyranny of the lodge, of rum, and of a defiant spirit of infidelity. It would be a great pleasure to me to attend some of these meetings, but circumstances forbid.

Permit me to request the leaders in this movement, very earnestly, to so arrange as to hold a convention or conventions somewhere in North Missouri. There is great room for doing good. Shall it not be so?

THE RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY THE ANTI-MASONIC CONVENTION OF PHILADELPHIA.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have read in a late number of the Cynosure a report of the proceedings of the recent Anti-masonic Convention held in Philadelphia. As I was a member of that convention, and offered resolutions which were adopted to some extent, but which have not been very clearly set forth in type, as it seems to me, I have thought it well to send you for publication the original draft of those resolutions, it being understood that they express the action of the convention only so far as they were adopted. In other respects they express my own individual views. I think that it is of some importance to our reform movement that the standpoint from which these resolutions were framed should be clearly understood. It is this: that the war against the rebellion was conducted by President Lincoln's administration more in a spirit of needless deference to the Democratic party than in regard for the principles of law and morality; more in the fear of a party than in the fear of God; more in the crooked path of political expediency than in the way of justice and truth; more by the force of money and numbers than by the force of patriotic devotion; more in the style of mere partisan contention than by the measure of real statesmanship. If the Democratic party has demanded, or if it now claims all the conciliation which the Republican administration has offered it, then the Democratic party is more unfit, if possible, than the Republicans to be entrusted with power. The two parties are mere criminal participators in schemes for defrauding the country of the exercise of those higher principles of morality and statesmanship without which the Republic cannot exist. In short, the country needs measures of reform which neither the Republican nor Democratic party is in a condition to institute or carry out.

There are but two parties in this country, viz.; the Masonic lodge on one side, and the supporters of American institutions on the other: all other political divisions are mere partisan factions contending for plunder and power.

Here follow the resolutions. Very truly yours,

J. W. PHELPS.

RESOLUTIONS.

Resolved, That all secret organizations are links of one and the same chain which binds men to evil and not to good; that the Masonic lodge is the parent source from which all similar modern organizations have emanated, and that this lodge is now in active operation in every city and considerable village of the country, swaying our parties and churches, filling our offices, secular and divine, with its partisans, shaping our political destinies, and teaching a spurious and corrupting morality subversive both of the Christian religion and of free institutions.

Resolved, That the Masonic lodge has had a ruinous control in the management of all our affairs of late years, and especially during the last quarter of a century; that one of the ill consequences of its rule has been the extending to former slave-power leaders the right to hold office which they had forfeited, and at the same time failing to extend to their deluded followers and victims ample facilities for that education which is essential to the state of freemen, and that in consequence a violation of justice and of the true policy of the Republic has been done, which fully justifies the loss of confidence of the American people in the party now in power, whose course is marked by the deep foot-prints of extravagance fraud and corruption.

Resolved, That the pension list, as administered by partisan interests, is a privileged, aristocratic institution, incompatible with republican government, and is rather an incentive to war than a reward for patriotic service; and that all pecuniary consideration for wounds or disabilities received in the public service should be bestowed at once, in a definite sum, as a benefice from the nation, instead of a pension granted by party favor to mercenary supporters.

Resolved, That in the so-called Grand Army of the Republic we recognize one of the most insidious, most dangerous and most useless forms of secret organization that has emanated from the Masonic lodge, which tends to inspire the youth of the country with a taste for demonstrational shams and with a mercenary spirit rather than with patriotic devotion, and which is better fitted for keeping alive and glorifying the memories of war than for advancing those interests of peace for which all just war is waged.

Resolved, That the perpetual warfare which has long been carried on by the government against a small number of its Indian subjects, who are ignorant, poor, and invaded by wrong and oppression from every quarter, is as inhuman and impolitic as it has been unnecessary and enormously expensive; and in the contemplation of the barbarous character of this warfare, and also in considering the needless protraction of the late war of the rebellion, we are compelled to doubt whether one was not prolonged and the other is waged rather for the benefit of jobs and high tariffs than in the interests of republican government.

Resolved, That in that foul blotch upon the Christian character of the United States called Mormonism, we recognize the eldest American-born of the Masonic lodge which can never be purged from the national escutcheon so long as our offices continue to be filled with the members of secret organization.

Resolved, That if our republican government is to be perpetuated, it can be done only by voters who recognize no men as American citizens qualified for holding office whose affiliations show that their first allegiance is due to that foreign institution, the Masonic lodge.

THE GRAND LODGE AND THE OHIO CRUSADE.

PULASKI, O., Jan. 4th, 1884.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I was very much interested in the article in your paper of last week headed, "The Ohio Crusade," from the pen of Mrs. E. J. Thompson. I had never learned till then just how that movement started, but well I remember its work. Why, there was more ground gained in thirty days than there had been in thirty years before, and to borrow a line from Whittier, it went—

"Smiting the godless shrines of man along its path."

And to all human appearance the days of saloons in Ohio were about numbered.

But all at once it stopped, and the gates of death were again thrown open wider than before, and the question is still asked—why? That the whisky power had found a confederate sufficiently strong to crush the movement none will deny. But who, or what, was that power?

Perhaps the following from the M. W. Grand Master of Masons in Ohio, under date of April 18, 1874, will throw some light upon the question:

"As lodges it is unwise, in my opinion, to pledge by resolution, or otherwise, our support and influence to any particular organization having for its object the suppression of evil."

Notice, it is by resolution or otherwise. But who will say, unless sworn "ever to conceal," that by this he did not pledge his support, and by it the support of the lodges of Ohio, against this organization for the suppression of the evil of intemperance? Yours for another crusade that shall be able to wipe out not only the saloons, but any other organization that dare stand in the way, no matter if it has had an existence ever since the morning stars sang together.

HE READS AND IS PROFITED.

CLEARFIELD, Iowa.

I have been a subscriber to the Cynosure now longer than I ever have to any other paper. It has taught me not to despise the day of small things. The U. B. church is divided and so is its organ, which is a great pity. But the church is not dead; if it was it would have no trouble with Masonic sin. Bishop Weaver, at the West Des Moines conference, said the U. B. church was born of a revival, and he seems to think that in order to have genuine revivals we must come up to the help of the Lord, and be more interested in the Lord's reform work. He said we must go back to the old landmarks. May God bless him in standing solid against worldly institutions that exclude the name of Christ, such as Freemasonry. I hope the brethren will stand while it is a credit to stand.

I told brother Siemiller, of Mormontown, that it was a mystery to me why Masonry should get into the U. B. church now, when Anti-masonry is gaining ground and becoming popular. He said it was obliged to crawl away somewhere to die. When it dies in the U. B. church, which it will, there will be no mourners in the church. The church is on the road to the landmark,—what a pity that she ever drifted away! Let the whole army of God be glad that the ancient landmark which the fathers have set in this church has not been removed. Let us pray that all loyal brethren will stand solid for God the next General Conference. Let us resist the devil as the Lord wants us to, then Satan will flee from us and the church will have glorious revivals and God will be glorified in the salvation of immortal souls.
